[y] Comment. in Jonam, c. 1. 2.

℣. 5. Behold I am againſt thee, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, &c.] Becauſe her doings were againſt him; ſee the note on ch. ii. 13: and I will diſcover thy ſkirts upon thy face; turn up the ſkirts of her garments over her head, and thereby diſcover what ſhould be concealed, than which nothing is more diſagreeable and abominable to modeſt perſons; it is here threatened ſhe ſhould be uſed in character as an harlot, or as women oftentimes are by rude ſoldiers, when a city is taken by them: and I will ſhew the nations thy nakedneſs, and the kingdoms thy ſhame; all her charms ſhall be taken away, and ſhe become odious as an harlot to her former lovers; all her impoſtures, arts and tricks, and ſhameful actions will be diſcovered; and her aims and views at univerſal monarchy will be ſeen, and her weakneſs to effect it made to appear; and, upon the whole, will become the object of the ſcorn and deriſion of kingdoms and nations.

℣. 6. And I will caſt abominable filth upon thee, &c.] As dirt and dung, or any, or every thing that is abominable and filthy; and which is thrown at harlots publickly diſgraced, and as uſed to be at perſons when carted. The meaning is, that this city and its inhabitants ſhould be ſtripped of every thing that was great and glorious in them, and ſhould be reduced to the utmoſt ſhame and ignominy: and make thee vile; mean, abject, contemptible, the offſcouring of all things; rejected and diſeſteemed of all; had in no manner of repute or account, but in the utmoſt abhorrence: and I will ſet thee as a gazing ſtock; to be looked and laughed at: or, for an example [e]; to others, that they may ſhun the evils and abominations Nineveh had been guilty of, or expect the ſame diſgrace and puniſhment. Kimchi interprets it, as dung [f]; to be no more reckoned of than that, or to be made a dunghil of; and ſo many others interpret it: or, for a looking-glaſs [g]; that others may look into, and take warning, and avoid the ſins that have brought on ſuch calamities.

℣. 7. And it ſhall come to paſs, that all they that look upon thee, ſhall flee from thee, &c.] As ſomething loathſome and abominable, not fit to be come near unto, or touched; and as aſtoniſhed and amazed at an object ſo forlorn and miſerable, and leſt they ſhould partake of the ſame puniſhment: and ſay, Nineveh is laid waſte; utterly deſtroyed; its walls broke down, its houſes demoliſhed, its ſubſtance plundered, and its inhabitants killed, or carried captive; who could have thought it, when it was once ſo ſtately, rich and powerful; but ſo it is indeed! who ſhall bemoan her? there are none left in her to do it; and as for others, her neighbours, whom ſhe has oppreſſed and cruelly uſed, theſe will laugh and rejoice, inſtead of lamenting her caſe: whence ſhall I ſeek comforters for thee? none from among her inhabitants, being all deſtroyed, or carried into a foreign land; and none from among the nations round about, who will rather deride and inſult, than pity and comfort; ſo wretched and miſerable would her caſe be!

℣. 8. Art thou better than populous No, &c.] Or No-Amon, a city in Egypt ſo called, not becauſe the kings of Egypt were nurſed and brought up there, as Jarchi and Abarbinel; ſee Prov. viii. 30. but from Ham the ſon of Noah, whoſe land Egypt was; or from Jupiter-Ammon, worſhipped there. No-Amon ſignifies the manſion or palace of Ham, or Hamon: the Egyptians, as Herodotus ſays [h], call Jupiter

Jupiter by the name of Ammon. The Targum interprets it, of Alexandria the Great, a city ſo called long after this, when it was rebuilt by Alexander the Great; ſo Jarchi, Kimchi and Ben Melech underſtand it: others take Dioſpolis or Thebes to be meant, famous in Homer [i] for its hundred gates; tho' ſome think this was not the number of the gates of the city, but of the temples in it; and others are of opinion, that theſe were ſo many palaces of princes [k]. The city was built by Oſiris; or according to others, by Buſiris, and ſeems more likely to be the place here meant; ſince here was a temple dedicated to Jupiter, called by the Egyptians Ammon, as Diodorus Siculus [l] relates, and was a very large and populous city. Indeed, according to the above hiſtorian, it was in compaſs but an hundred and forty furlongs [m]; which is to be underſtood of the city when firſt built, and before it was enlarged; for it muſt have been a great deal larger in after times, if we may judge of it by its ruins. Strabo [n], who was an eye-witneſs of them quickly after its laſt deſtruction by Cornelius Gallus, ſays, the footſteps of its largeneſs were ſeen fourſcore furlongs in length, or ten miles; and even this was but ſmall, in compariſon of what it was before it was deſtroyed by Cambyſes, when it is ſaid to reach four hundred and twenty furlongs, or fifty-two miles and a half [o]. It was the metropolis of all Egypt; and formerly the whole country was called after its name, as Herodotus [p] obſerves. The accounts given of its inhabitants are incredible, and particularly of the ſoldiers it ſent out; according to the epitaph of Rhampſes, ſeven hundred thouſand ſoldiers dwelt in it; which number Diodorus Siculus [q] gives to all the people in Egypt; but tho' it may ſeem too large for Thebes, muſt be too little for all Egypt; eſpecially if what Agrippa in Joſephus [r] ſays is right, that Egypt from Ethiopia and the borders of India to Alexandria, had no leſs than 7,500,000 inhabitants: however, if Pomponius Mela [s] may be credited; when it was neceſſary, the hundred palaces in Thebes could each of them ſend out ten thouſand armed men, or, as ſome ſay, twenty thouſand; and if what Diodorus Siculus [t] affirms is true, that twenty thouſand chariots uſed to go out from thence to war; this ſhews it to have been a very populous city indeed, and might well be called populous No; but now it is utterly deſtroyed, firſt by the Aſſyrians and Babylonians, then by the Perſians, and laſt of all by the Romans; the firſt deſtruction muſt be here referred to, if this city is deſigned. Strabo [u] ſays, in his time it was only inhabited in villages; and Juvenal [w] ſpeaks of it as wholly lying in ruins; and Pauſanias [x] making mention of it with other cities which abounded with riches, ſays, they were reduced to the fortune of a middling private man, yea were brought to nothing. It is now, or what is built on the ſpot, or near it, called Luxxor, or Lukorcen [y]. Some [z] think the city Memphis is meant, ſo Vitringa on Iſ. xix. 5. ſee the notes on Ezek. xxx. 14, 15. this was for many ages the metropolis of all Egypt. Strabo [a] calls it a large and populous city, and full of men, and ſecond to Alexandria in his time. The compaſs of it when firſt built, was an 150 furlongs [b]; but now there is no more remaining of it, than if there had never been ſuch a city; nay it is not eaſy to ſay where it once ſtood: now Nineveh is aſked, or its inhabitants, if it could be thought that their city was in a better and ſafer condition than this city; it might indeed according to the account of it by hiſtorians, and as in the prophecy of Jonah, be larger, and its inhabitants more numerous, but not better fortified, which ſeems to be the thing chiefly reſpected, as follows: that was ſituate among the rivers; the canals of the river Nile: that had the waters round about it; moated on every ſide, either naturally or artificially: whoſe rampart was the ſea, and her wall was from the ſea; which agrees with Alexandria, according to the deſcription of it by Strabo [c], Solinus [d], and Joſephus [e], which had two ſeas on each ſide it; the Egyptian-ſea on the north, and the lake Mareotis on the ſouth, as well as had the canals of the Nile running into it from various parts; and is repreſented as very difficult of acceſs, thro' the ſea, rivers, and marſhy places about it; and beſides, might have a wall towards the ſea, as by this account it ſhould ſeem, as well as the ſea itſelf was a wall and rampart to it: and this deſcription may alſo agree with Dioſpolis or Thebes, which, tho' more inland, yet, as Bochart [f] obſerves, it had, as all Egypt had, the two ſeas, the Red-ſea, and the Mediterranean-ſea, and the canals of the Nile, which might be ſaid to be as a rampart to it. So Iſocrates [g] ſays of all Egypt, that it is fortified with an immortal wall, the Nile, which not only affords a defence, but ſufficient food, and is inſuperable and inexpugnable; nor is it unuſual, as to call rivers and lakes ſeas, ſo particularly the Nile, and its canals; ſee Iſ. xi. 15. and xviii. 1. Ezek. xxxii. 2. and in the Alcoran, the Nile is often called a ſea [h]. There is another Dioſpolis in Egypt, near Mendes, which, as Strabo [i] ſays, had lakes about it; but this being a more obſcure place, is not likely to be intended here; tho' father Calmet [k] is of opinion, that it is here meant; it being ſituated in the Delta, on one of the arms of the Nile, between Buſiris to the ſouth, and Mendes to the north. The deſcription ſeems to agree better with Memphis, whoſe builder Uchoreus, as Diodorus Siculus [l] ſays, choſe a very convenient place for it, where the Nile divided itſelf into many parts, and made the Delta, ſo called from its figure; and which he made wonderfully ſtrong, after this manner: whereas the Nile flowed round the city, being built within the ancient bed of it, and at its increaſe would overflow it; he caſt up a very great mound or rampart to the ſouth, which was a defence againſt the ſwell of the river, and was of the uſe of a fortreſs againſt enemies by land; and on the other parts all about he dug a large and deep lake, which received a very great deal of the river, and filled every place about the city, but where the mound (or rampart) was built, and ſo made it amazingly ſtrong; whence the kings after him left Thebes, and had their palace and court here; and ſo Herodotus, who makes Menes to be the builder of it, ſays [m], that without the city he cauſed lakes to be dug from the river to the north, and to the weſt, for to the eaſt the Nile itſelf bounded it; and Joſephus [n], who alſo makes Minæus or Menes, the firſt Pharaoh, to be the builder of it, ſpeaks of that and the ſea together, as if not far off each other: now, if a city ſo populous, and ſo well fortified by art and nature, as each of theſe were, was taken, and its inhabitants carried captive; Nineveh could not depend on her numbers or ſituation for ſafety, which were not more or better than this.

℣. 9. Ethiopia and Egypt were her ſtrength, &c.] That is, the ſtrength, ſupport, protection and defence of No, whether Alexandria, or Thebes, or Memphis: Egypt was, for theſe cities were in it, and ſubject to it; or if this was a free city, as ſome think, yet in alliance with Egypt, and under its protection; and in like connexion it was with Ethiopia, that is, Arabia, a country that lay near to it; and yet, tho' it was ſtrengthened by ſuch powerful neighbours and allies, it was not ſecure from the devaſtation of the enemy: and it was infinite; or there was no end [o]; of its ſtrength, or of the number of its allies, or the forces they were able to bring in its defence. The Ethiopians were very numerous, as may be learnt from 2 Chron. xiv. 9. and ſo were the Egyptians, to whom ſome interpreters ſtrictly connect this ſentence. In the times of Amaſis, as Mela [p] relates, there were twenty thouſand cities inhabited in it; and Joſephus [q] ſays, there were in it ſeven hundred and fifty myriads of men; as Sethon king of Egypt, and Tirhakah king of Ethiopia were about this time the allies of the Jews, in whom they truſted, no doubt they were confederate together, and ſo both the ſtrength of this city; ſee Iſ. xxxvi. 6. and xxxvii. 9: Put and Lubim were thy helpers; Put or the Putim were the people of the Moors, that dwelt in Mauritania; and Lubim were the Lybians that bordered on Egypt, and whoſe country is ſometimes reckoned a part of it. The Jews [r] ſay, Lybia is Egypt; ſee Acts ii. 10. theſe ſeveral people were the confederates of No; and helped them, not only by their commerce with them, but in time of war aſſiſted them againſt their enemies; and yet, tho' ſo ſtrengthened by alliances were not ſafe and ſecure; and therefore Nineveh could not depend upon ſuch helps and helpers.

℣. 10. Yet was ſhe carried away, ſhe went into captivity, &c.] Not by Nebuchadnezzar; tho' this city was afterwards taken, and its inhabitants carried captive by that monarch, as was foretold, Jer. xlvi. 25. but the prophet here does not predict an event to be accompliſhed, and inſtance in that, and argue from it, which could have no effect on Nineveh and its inhabitants, or be an example or terror to them; but refers to what had been done, a recent fact, and which they were well acquainted with. Aben Ezra ſays, this city No was a city of the land of Egypt, which the king of the Chaldeans took as he went to Nineveh; but when, and by whom it was taken, is no where ſaid. According to Biſhop Uſher [s] and Dean Prideaux [t], the deſtruction of the city of Thebes was by Sennacherib, in his expedition againſt Egypt, which he haraſſed for three years together, from one end to the other; at which time Sevechus the ſon of Sabacon or So the Ethiopian was king of Egypt; and Egypt and Ethiopia were as one country, and helped each other; but could not ſecure this city from falling into the hands of Sennacherib, about three years before he beſieged Jeruſalem; and ſo, according to Mr. Whiſton [u], it was deſtroyed three years before the army of Sennacherib was deſtroyed at Jeruſalem: her young children alſo were daſhed in pieces at the top of all the ſtreets; againſt the walls of the houſes, or upon the ſtones and pavements of the ſtreets; which cruelties were often uſed by conquerors upon innocent babes at the ſacking of cities, Pſ. cxxxvii. 9. Iſ. xiii. 16: and they caſt lots for her honourable men; the ſoldiers did, who ſhould have them, and ſell them for ſlaves; which was done without any regard to their birth and breeding, Joel iii. 3: and all her great men were bound in chains; as nobles may be meant by honourable men, by great men may be deſigned the gentry, merchants, and others; theſe were taken, and bound in iron-chains, hand-cuffed and pinioned, and ſo led captive into a foreign land; and Nineveh might expect the ſame treatment.

℣. 11. Thou alſo ſhalt be drunken, &c.] This is ſaid to Nineveh, whoſe turn would be next to drink of the cup of the wrath of God, and be inebriated with it, ſo that they ſhould not know where they were, or what they did; and be as unable to guide and help themſelves, as a drunken man. So the Targum, "thou alſo ſhalt be like " to a drunken man;" this was literally true of Nineveh when taken; ſee ch. i. 10: thou ſhalt be hid; or, thou ſhalt be, as if thou waſt not; as Nineveh is at this day, hid from the ſight of men, not to be ſeen any more. So the Targum, "thou " ſhalt be ſwallowed up or deſtroyed." The Septuagint, Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions render it, deſpiſed; or the meaning is, ſhe ſhould hide herſelf [w]; or be lurking about thro' ſhame, as drunken, or thro' fear of her enemies: thou alſo ſhalt ſeek ſtrength, becauſe of the enemy; ſeek to others to help them againſt the enemy, not being able with their own ſtrength to face them: or, ſeek ſtrength of the enemy [x]; beg their lives of him, and their bread; pray for quarter, and deſire to be taken under his protection; to ſo low and mean a ſtate and condition ſhould Nineveh and its inhabitants be reduced, who had given laws to all about them, and had been a terror to them.

℣. 12. All thy ſtrong holds ſhall be like fig-trees with the firſt ripe figs, &c.] Upon them, or like them: and the firſt ripe figs; which are eaſily ſhook and gathered; and ſo eaſily ſhould the fortreſſes and towers of Nineveh, in which they truſted for ſafety, be taken by the enemy, not only one, but all of them: if they be ſhaken, they ſhall even fall into the mouth of the eater; as ſuch ripe fruit is very deſirable, and the mouth of a man is open and ready for them; ſo if he gives the tree but the leaſt ſhake, they'll fall into his mouth, or about him in great plenty: in like manner, as the fortreſſes of Nineveh, being of importance, were deſirable by the Chaldeans and Medes, and for which they were gaping; ſo upon the leaſt aſſault they would fall into their hands; ſee Rev. vi. 13.

℣. 13. Behold, thy people in the midſt of thee are women, &c.] Or like women, weak and feeble, fearful and timorous; frighted at the firſt approach of the enemy; run away, and run up and down in the utmoſt conſternation and diſtreſs, having neither ſkill nor courage to oppoſe them; ſome regard may be had to the effeminacy of their king; ſee ch. ii. 7. The ſenſe is, they ſhould be at once diſpirited, and loſe all ſtrength of mind and body, and have neither heads nor hearts to form ſchemes, and execute them in their own defence; and thus ſhould they be, even in the midſt of the city, upon their own ground, where, if any where, it might be thought they would exert themſelves, and play the man, ſince their all lay at ſtake: this was another thing they truſted in, the multitude of their people, even of their ſoldiers; but theſe would be of no avail, ſince they would loſe all their military ſkill and bravery: the gates of thy land ſhall be ſet wide open to thine enemies; inſtead of guarding the paſſes and avenues, they would abandon them to the enemy; and inſtead of ſecuring the gates and paſſages, they would run away from them; and the enemy would find as eaſy acceſs as if they were thrown open on purpoſe for them; perhaps this may reſpect the gates of the rivers being opened by the inundation, which threw down the wall, and made a way into the city; ſee ch. ii. 6: the fire ſhall devour thy bars; with which their gates had been ſhut, but now opened, and in the enemies hands; who would ſet fire to them, that the way to go in and out might be open and free.

℣. 14. Draw thee waters for the ſiege, &c.] Before the ſiege is begun, fetch water from the river, wells or fountains without the city, and fill ciſterns, and ſuch like receptacles of water with them; that there may be ſufficiency of it to hold out, which is often wanting in long ſieges; the want of which gives great diſtreſs to the beſieged: this is put for all neceſſary proviſions, which ſhould be made when a city is in danger of being blocked up: this and what follows are ſaid ironically; ſignifying, let them do what they would or could for their ſupport and ſecurity, it would be all in vain: fortify thy ſtrong holds; repair the old fortifications, and add new ones to them; fill them with ſoldiers, arms and ammunition: go into clay, and tread the morter: make ſtrong the brick-kiln; repair the brick-kilns, keep them in good order; employ men in digging clay, and treading it, and making it into bricks, and burning them in the kiln, that there be no want of bricks to repair the fortifications, or ſuch breaches as might be made by the enemy. Bricks were much uſed inſtead of ſtone in thoſe countries; but when they had done their utmoſt, they would not be able to ſecure themſelves, and keep out the enemy.

℣. 15. There ſhall the fire devour thee, &c.] In the ſtrong-holds, made ever ſo firm and ſecure; either the fire of divine wrath; or the fire of the enemy they ſhould put into them; or the enemy himſelf, as Kimchi; and ſo the Targum, "thither "ſhall come upon thee people who are as ſtrong "as fire:" the ſword ſhall cut thee off: it ſhall eat thee up as the canker-worm; that is, the ſword of the Medes and Chaldeans ſhall utterly deſtroy thee, as the canker-worm is deſtroyed by rain or fire; or rather, as that creature deſtroys all herbs, plants and trees it falls upon, and makes clear riddance of them, ſo ſhould it be with Nineveh: make thyſelf many as the canker-worm: make thyſelf many as the locuſt; which go in ſwarms, innumerable, and make the air heavy in which they fly, and the earth on which they fall, as the word [y] ſignifies. The locuſt has one of its names, Arbah, in Hebrew, from the large numbers of them; ſo a multitude of men, and large armies, are often ſignified in ſcripture to be like graſhoppers or locuſts for their numbers; ſee Judg. vi. 5. and vii. 12. and Jer. xlvi. 23. So Sithalces king of Thrace is repreſented [z] as ſwearing whilſt he was ſacrificing, that he would aſſiſt the Athenians, having an army that would come like locuſts, that is, in ſuch numbers; for ſo the Greek Scholiaſt on the place ſays, the word uſed ſignifies a ſort of locuſts: the ſenſe is, gather together as many ſoldiers, and as large an army as can be obtained to meet the enemy, or cauſe him to break up the ſiege: and ſo we find [a] the king of Aſſyria did; for perceiving his kingdom in great danger, he ſent into all his provinces to raiſe ſoldiers, and prepare every thing for the ſiege; but all to no purpoſe, which is here ironically ſuggeſted. The word in the Miſnic language, as Kimchi obſerves, has the ſignification of ſweeping; and ſome render it, ſweep as the locuſt [b]; which ſweeps away, and conſumes the fruits of the earth; ſo ſweep with the beſom of deſtruction, as Jarchi, either their enemies, ſarcaſtically ſpoken, or be thou ſwept by them.

℣. 16. Thou haſt multiplied thy merchants above the ſtars of heaven, &c.] An hyperbolical expreſſion, ſetting forth the great number of merchants that were in Nineveh, and in the land of Aſſyria; who either were the natives of the place, or came thither for the ſake of merchandiſe, which ſerve to enrich a nation, and therefore are encouraged to ſettle; and from whom, in a time of war, much benefit might be expected; being able to furniſh with money, which is the ſinews of war, as well as to give intelligence of the deſigns of foreign princes, they trading abroad: the canker-worm ſpoileth, and fleeth away; or puts off [c] its cloaths, diſrobes and changes its form; or breaks out with force, as the Septuagint, out of its former worm-ſtate, and appears a beautiful butterfly, and then flies away. The word is rendered a caterpillar, Pſ. cv. 34. Jer. li. 14, 27. and what we tranſlate ſpoileth, is uſed of ſtripping or putting off of cloaths, 1 Sam. xix. 24. Cant. v. 3. and the ſenſe may be, that tho' their merchants were multiplied above the ſtars of heaven, in which there may be an alluſion to the increaſe of caterpillars, ℣. 15. yet, as the caterpillar drops its cloaths, and flies away, ſo their merchants, thro' fear of the enemy, would depart in haſte, or be ſuddenly ſtripped of their riches, which make themſelves wings, and fly away, Prov. xxiii. 5. Theſe merchants, at their beginning might be low and mean, but increaſing, adorning and inriching themſelves in a time of peace, fled away in a time of war:

or, ſpreads itſelf [d], and flies away; ſo theſe creatures ſpread themſelves on the earth, and devour all they can, and then ſpread their wings, and are gone; ſuggeſting, that in like manner the merchants of Nineveh would ſerve them; get all they could by merchandiſe among them, and then betake themſelves elſewhere; and eſpecially in a time of war, which is prejudicial to merchandiſe; and hence nothing was to be expected from them, or any dependence had upon them.

℣. 17. Thy crowned men are as the locuſts, &c.] Tributary kings, and hired officers, as ſome think, who might be diſtinguiſhed by what they wore on their heads; or their own princes and nobles, who wore coronets or diadems; unleſs their religious perſons are meant, their nazarites and devotees, their prieſts; theſe were like locuſts for their number, fear and flight in time of danger, and for their ſpoil of the poor; and ſome locuſts have been ſeen with little crowns on their heads, as thoſe in Rev. ix. 7. which had on their heads as it were crowns like gold. In the year 1542 came locuſts out of Turkiſh Sarmatia, into Auſtria, Sileſia, Luſatia and Miſnia, which had on their heads little crowns [e]. In the year 1572 a vehement wind brought large troops of locuſts out of Turky into Poland, which did great miſchief, and were of a golden colour [f]; and Ælianus [g] ſpeaks of locuſts in Arabia, marked with golden coloured figures; and mention is made in the Targum on Jer. li. 27. of the ſhining locuſt, ſhining like gold: and thy captains as the great graſhoppers; or, locuſts of locuſts [h]; thoſe of the biggeſt ſize. The Vulgate Latin renders the word for captains, thy little ones, junior princes, or officers of leſs dignity and authority; theſe were, as the Targum paraphraſes it, as the worms of locuſts; but rather as the locuſts themſelves, many and hurtful: which camp in the hedges, in the cold day; in the cold part of the day, the night; when they get into the hedges of fields, gardens and vineyards in great numbers, like an army, and therefore ſaid to encamp like one: but when the ſun ariſeth, they flee away, and their place is not known where they are; whither they are fled, as the Targum; ſo theſe captains or half-pay officers, ſwarmed in great numbers about the city, and in the provinces, whilſt it was a time of peace, and they were indulged in ſloth, and enjoyed much eaſe and proſperity; but when war broke out, and the heat of it began to be felt, theſe diſappeared, and went into their own countries, from whence they came, with the auxiliaries and hired troops; nor could they be found where they were, or be called upon to do their duty: this is true of locuſts in a literal ſenſe, who flee away when the ſun riſes; hence the Arabs, as Bochart ſays [i], elegantly expreſs this by the word Aſcaara; ſignifying, that when the ſun comes to the locuſt, it goes away. According to Macrobius [k], both Apollo and Hercules are names for the ſun; and both theſe are ſurnamed from their power in driving away locuſts: Hercules was called Cornopion by the Œteans, becauſe he delivered them from the locuſts [l]; and Apollo was called Parnopius by the Grecians, becauſe when the country was hurt by locuſts, he drove them out of it, as Pauſanias [m] relates; who obſerves, that they were drove out they knew, but in what manner they ſay not; for his own part he ſays, he knew them thrice deſtroyed at mount Sipylus, but not in the ſame way; one time a violent wind drove them out; another time a prodigious heat killed them; and a third time they periſhed by ſudden cold; and ſo, according to the text here, the cold ſends them to the hedges, and the heat of the ſun obliges them to quit their ſtation.

℣. 18. Thy ſhepherds ſlumber, O king of Aſſyria, &c.] Who this king of Aſſyria was is not eaſy to ſay; ſome think Eſarhaddon, who is the laſt of the kings of Aſſyria the ſcriptures ſpeak of; according to Diodorus Siculus [n], Sardanapalus was the laſt of theſe kings, and in him the Aſſyrian monarchy ended; tho' according to Alexander Polyhiſtor [o], Saracus, perhaps the Chyniladanus of Ptolemy, was king when Nineveh was deſtroyed: it is very likely that Sardanapalus and Saracus deſign the ſame perſon, tho' ſet at a great diſtance by hiſtorians; ſince the ſame things are ſaid of the one as of the other; particularly that when they ſaw their danger, they burnt themſelves and theirs in the royal palace at Nineveh; nor is it probable, that the ſame city with the empire ſhould be deſtroyed and ſubverted twice by the ſame people, the Medes and Babylonians uniting together; and it is remarkable, that the double deſtruction of this city and empire is related by different hiſtorians; and thoſe that ſpeak of the one, ſay nothing of the other: but this king, be he who he will, his caſe was very bad, his ſhepherds ſlumbered; his miniſters of ſtate, his counſellors, ſubordinate magiſtrates in provinces and cities, and particularly in Nineveh; his generals and officers in his army were careleſs and negligent of their duty, and gave themſelves up to ſloth and eaſe; and which alſo was his own character, as hiſtorians agree in; or they were dead, ſlumbering in their graves, and ſo could be of no ſervice to him: thy nobles ſhall dwell in the duſt; be brought very low, into a very mean and abject condition; their honour ſhall be laid in the duſt, and they be trampled upon by every one: or, they ſhall ſleep [p]; that is, die, and be buried, as the Vulgate Latin renders it: or, ſhall dwell in ſilence, as others [q]; have their habitation in the ſilent grave, being cut off by the enemy; ſo that this prince would have none of his mighty men to truſt in, but ſee himſelf ſtript of all his vain confidences: thy people is ſcattered upon the mountains, and no man gathereth them; like ſheep without a ſhepherd, which being frighted by beaſts of prey, run here and there, and there is none to get them together, and bring them back again; ſo the ſubjects of this king, being terrified at the approach of the Medes and Babylonians, forſook their cities, and fled to the mountains; where they were ſcattered about, having no leader and commander to gather them together, and put them in regular order to face and oppoſe the enemy. So the Targum interprets it, "the people of thine armies."

℣. 19. There is no healing of thy bruiſe, &c.] Made by the fatal blow given to the empire by the taking of Nineveh; the ruin of it was irreparable and irrecoverable; the city of Nineveh was no more, and the Aſſyrian empire ſunk, and never roſe again: or, there is no contraction of thy bruiſe [r]; as when a wound is healed, or near it, the ſkin round about is wrinkled and contracted. The Targum is, "there is none that grieves at thy breach;" ſo the Syriac verſion; ſo far from it, that they rejoiced at it, as in a following clauſe: thy wound is grievous; to be borne; the pain of it intolerable; an old obſtinate one, inveterate and incurable: or, is weak, or ſickly [s]; which had brought a ſickneſs and weakneſs on the ſtate, out of which it would never be recovered: all that hear the bruit of thee; the fame, the report of the deſtruction of Nineveh, and of the ruin of the Aſſyrian empire, and the king of it, ſhall clap the hands over thee; for joy; ſo far were they from lending an helping hand in the time of diſtreſs, that they clapped both hands together, to expreſs the gladneſs of their hearts at hearing ſuch news: for upon whom hath not thy wickedneſs paſſed continually? to which of thy neighbours haſt thou not been troubleſome and injurious? which of them haſt thou not oppreſſed, and uſed with violence and cruelty? what province or city but have felt the weight of thine hand, have been haraſſed with wars, and diſtreſſed with tributes and exactions? and therefore it is no wonder they rejoice at thy fall. The deſtruction of this city, and ſo of the whole empire, is placed by Dr. Prideaux in the 29th year of Joſiah's reign, and in the year 612 before Chriſt; and by what Joſephus ſays [t], it appears to have been but a little while before Joſiah was ſlain by Pharaoh-Necho, who came out with an army to Euphrates, to make war upon the Medes and Babylonians; who, he ſays, had overturned the Aſſyrian empire; being jealous, as it ſeems, of their growing power. Learned men juſtly regret the loſs of the Aſſyriaca of Abydenus, and of the hiſtory of the Aſſyrians by Herodotus, who promiſed [u] it; but whether he finiſhed it or no, is not certain; however it is not extant; and in one place, ſpeaking of the Medes attacking Nineveh, and taking it, he ſays [w], but how they took it, I ſhall ſhow in another hiſtory; all which had they come to light, and been continued, might have been of ſingular uſe in explaining this prophecy.

HABAKKUK.

THIS book is called in the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions, the prophecy of Habakkuk. Of this prophet, Aben Ezra and Kimchi ſay, we know neither his age, nor his family; which ſhows they paid no regard to a tradition of their nation, mentioned by ſome of their ancient writers [a], that he was the ſon of the Shunamite, whom Eliſha raiſed from the dead; and find the etymology of his name in the words of the prophet to her, about this ſeaſon, according to the time of life, thou ſhalt embrace a ſon, 2 Kings xiv. 16. where the root of his name is uſed; and they account for the doubling of the laſt radical in his name, becauſe of the two embraces of him, one by his mother, and the other by the prophet. His name indeed ſignifies an embrace [b]; or as ſome, an embracer [c]; and the laſt letter being doubled, it is with others interpreted, the beſt embracer [d]; to which name his character and conduct agree; who in the moſt tender manner embraced the people of God as parents their children, and comforted them with the aſſurance of their preſervation, notwithſtanding their captivity, and with the promiſe of the Meſſiah's coming; ſuggeſting to them, they ſhould live by faith, to which he led them the way by his own example, ch. i. 12. and ii. 3, 4. and iii. 17, 18, 19. but as this is placing him too early, to put him in the times of Eliſha; ſo it is fixing him too late, to make him to be in the times of Daniel, and to feed him in the den of the lions, as Joſeph ben Gorion [e], and the author of the apocryphal book of Bel and the Dragon, ſay he did, which was after the Babyloniſh captivity was ended; whereas it is certain this prophet propheſied of it, and muſt have lived ſome time before it; for he ſpeaks of the Chaldeans by name coming againſt the Jews, and carrying them captive, ch. i. 6, 9. The learned Huetius [f] and others think, there were two prophets of this name; one of the tribe of Simeon, who lived before the captivity; and another of the tribe of Levi, who lived after it. The Jewiſh chronologers [g] generally place this our prophet in the times of Manaſſeh; with which well enough agrees the deſcription of the times the prophet lived in, given in ch. i. 2, 3, 4. tho' ſome think he lived in the later times of Joſiah [h], or the beginning of Jehoiakim [i]; and it is probable he was a cotemporary of the prophet Jeremiah, with whom he agrees in many things, and propheſied of the ſame. However, there is no room to doubt of the authority of this book, being always received by the Jewiſh church, and agreeing with other parts of ſcripture, and eſpecially with the prophecies of Jeremiah; and may be further confirmed and eſtabliſhed by the quotations out of it in the New Teſtament, as ch. i. 5. in Acts xiii. 41. and ch. ii. 4. in Rom. i. 17. Gal. iii. 11. Heb. x. 38. The general deſign of the prophecy is to comfort the people of God under the afflictions that were coming upon them, and to encourage them to the exerciſe of faith and patience, in the hope and view of the coming of the Meſſiah. Pſeudo-Epiphanius [k] ſays, that Habakkuk died two years before the people of the Jews returned from Babylon, and was honourably buried in his own native place, which he ſays was Beth-ſocher, in the tribe of Simeon. With whom Iſidore [l] agrees, as to the time of his death; but the place of his birth, he ſays, was Bethacat; and of his death Sabarta. Sozomen [m] reports, that in the days of Theodoſius, the grave of Habakkuk was found in Cele, formerly the city Ceila. So Euſebius ſays it was ſhewn at Kela, eight miles from Eleutheropolis; tho' in another place, he ſays, it was to be ſeen at Gabatha, twelve miles from the ſame place; which may be reconciled, by obſerving that it might be between them both, and be ſeen from each, ſince they were places near to each other [n]. But the Cippi Hebraici [o] ſay it was at a place called Jakuk in Galilee, not far from Sephetta, where was an academy of the Jews; and this ſeems to agree with what Sanderſon, a countryman of ours, as quoted by Van Till [p], obſerves; that in his journey from Damaſcus to Jeruſalem, between Sephet and Chapher-Chittin, he found a village, in which the Jews report, Habakkuk the prophet dwelt and died, the name of which is Jeakoke. But theſe things are not to be depended on.

CHAP. I.

IN this chapter, after the inſcription, in which are the title of the book, the name and character of the writer, ỳ. 1. there is a complaint made by the prophet, of his cry not being heard, and of ſalvation being deferred, which was long expected, ỳ. 2. and of the wickedneſs of the times he lived in; of iniquity and trouble, rapine and oppreſſion in general; and particularly of corruption in courts of judicature, in which there were nothing but ſtrife and contention, a dilatorineſs in proceedings at law, and juſtice was ſtopped and ſuppreſſed, ỳ. 3, 4. then follows an anſwer to this, ſhewing that ſome ſore judgment, amazing and incredible, would ſoon be executed for ſuch ſins, ℣. 5. that the Chaldeans would be raiſed up and ſent againſt the Jews, and ſpoil them, and carry them captive; who are deſcribed by the cruelty of their temper and diſpoſition; by the ſwiftneſs and fierceneſs of their cavalry; and by their deriſion of kings, princes, and ſtrong-holds; and by their victories and ſucceſs, which they ſhould impute to their idols, ℣. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. and then the prophet, in the name of the church, expreſſes his faith, that the people of God, and his intereſt, would be preſerved, and not periſh in this calamity; which is urged from the eternity, holineſs, faithfulneſs, and power of God, and from his deſign in this affliction, which was correction, and not deſtruction, ℣. 12. and the chapter is cloſed with an expoſtulation of the prophet with God, in conſideration of his purity and holineſs; how he could bear with ſuch a wicked nation as the Chaldeans, and ſuffer them to devour men as fiſhes, in an arbitrary way, that have no ruler; catch them in their net, and inſult them, and aſcribe all to their own power and prudence, and think to go on continually in this way, ℣. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17.

℣. 1. The burden, which Habakkuk the prophet did ſee.] This prophecy is called a burden, or ſomething took up and carried, being what the prophet received from the Lord, and went with to the people of the Jews, and was a heavy, burdenſome prophecy to them; declaring the calamities that ſhould come upon them by the Chaldeans, who would invade their land, and carry them captive; and Habakkuk, that brought this account, is called a prophet, to give the greater ſanction to it; and it was what he had in viſion from the Lord repreſented unto him, and therefore ſhould be credited. Abarbinel enquires why Habakkuk ſhould be called a prophet, when none of the leſſer prophets are, excepting Haggai and Zechariah; and thinks the reaſon of it is, to give weight to his prophecy, ſince it might be ſuſpected by ſome, whether he was one; there being none of thoſe phraſes to be met with in this prophecy as in others, as the word of the Lord came, &c. or thus ſaith the Lord.

℣. 2. O Lord, how long ſhall I cry, and thou wilt not hear! &c.] The prophet having long obſerved the ſins and iniquities of the people among whom he lived, and being greatly diſtreſſed in his mind on account of them, had frequently and importunately cried unto the Lord to put a ſtop to the abounding of them, that the people might be brought to a ſenſe of their ſins, and reform from them; but nothing of this kind appearing, he concludes his prayers were not heard, and therefore expoſtulates with the Lord upon this head: even cry unto thee of violence, and thou wilt not ſave! either of violence done to himſelf in the diſcharge of his office, or of one man to another, of the rich to the poor; and yet, though he cried again and again to the Lord, to check this growing evil, and deliver the oppreſſed out of the hands of their oppreſſors, it was not done; which was matter of grief and trouble to him.

℣. 3. Why doſt thou ſhew me iniquity, and cauſe me to behold grievance? &c.] That is, wicked men, and ſuch as give a great deal of trouble, vexation and grief to others, by their rapine and oppreſſion; ſuggeſting that he could not turn his eyes any where, but ſuch perſons preſented themſelves to his view; and that their wicked actions were performed by them openly and publickly, in the ſight of all, without any ſhame or fear. So the Targum, "why do I ſee oppreſſors, and behold thoſe "that do the labour of falſhood?" For ſpoiling and violence are before me; in my ſight and preſence, tho' a prophet, and notwithſtanding all my remonſtrances, exhortations and reproofs; ſuch were the hardneſs, obſtinacy, and impudence of this people; to ſuch a height and pitch of iniquity were they arrived, as to regard not the prophets of the Lord. The Targum is, "ſpoilers and robbers are "before me:" or againſt me[q], as in the text; theſe ſins were committed againſt him, he was injuriouſly uſed himſelf; or they were done to others, contrary to his advice and perſuaſion: and there are that raiſe up ſtrife and contention; in the kingdom, in cities, in families; in one man, brother, friend, and neighbour againſt another; which occaſion law-ſuits, and in them juſtice is not done, as follows. It may be rendered, and there ſhall be and is a man of ſtrife; ſo Japhet: and he ſhall raiſe up contention; one man given to ſtrife, will and does cauſe great contention in communities, civil and religious.

℣. 4. Therefore the law is ſlacked, &c.] Is not put into execution againſt offenders: the civil magiſtrates, whoſe office it is to do juſtice according to law, are dilatory, and don't proceed with vigour and ſpirit againſt the tranſgreſſors of it, and in favour of honeſt and good men oppreſſed: or it intermits[r], or is intermitted; it is like a man whoſe pulſe beats low, and is ſcarce perceived, which is a ſign that he is not in good health; as the body politick is not, when the law, which is the ſoul of it, is not ſuffered to take place, and do its office. So the Targum, "the law languiſhes;" loſes its force and vigour, and is ready to expire; which is a ſad ſymptom of the bad eſtate of a commonwealth. And judgment doth never go forth; at leaſt not right, to the juſtifying of the righteous, acquitting the innocent, and giving the cauſe on the right ſide; condemning the wicked, and puniſhing offenders as their crime deſerves: it never appears as it ſhould do; it is either not done at all, or done badly and perverſely: for the wicked doth compaſs about the righteous; to hurt him or enſnare him, and by frauds and wicked artifices, and falſe witneſſes, to carry a cauſe againſt him: therefore wrong judgment proceedeth; the cauſe is given on the wrong ſide, againſt a good man, and for a wicked man; all theſe things the prophet ſaw with grief, and complained of to the Lord, from whom he has an anſwer in the following words:

℣. 5. Behold ye among the heathen, and regard, &c.] This is the Lord's anſwer to the prophet's complaint, or what he directs him to ſay to the Jews, guilty of the crimes complained of, which ſhould not go long unpuniſhed; and who are called upon to look around them, and ſee what was doing among the nations; how the king of Babylon had overturned the Aſſyrian empire, and was going from place to place, ſubduing one nation after another, and their turn would be quickly: for theſe words are not addreſſed to the heathen, to ſtir them up to obſerve what was doing, or about to be done to the Jews; but to the Jews themſelves, to conſider and regard the operations of the Lord, and the works of his providence among the nations of the earth. Theſe words are differently rendered in the Septuagint, Syriac and Arabic verſions, and which better agree with the quotation of them by the apoſtle, Acts xiii. 41. ſee the note there: and wonder marvellouſly; or wonder, wonder [s]; the word is repeated to expreſs the great admiration there would be found juſt reaſon for, on conſideration of what was now doing in the world, and would be done, eſpecially in Judea: for I will work a work in your days, which ye will not believe, tho' it be told you; which was the deſtruction of the Jewiſh nation, city and temple by the Chaldeans, as is evident from the following words; and tho' they were the inſtruments of it, it was the work of divine providence; it was done according to the will of God, and by his direction, he giving ſucceſs; and being thus declared, was a certain thing, and might be depended on, nothing ſhould hinder it; and it ſhould be done ſpeedily, in that generation, ſome then living ſhould ſee it; tho' the thing was ſo amazing and incredible, that they would not believe it ever would be; partly becauſe the Chaldeans were their good friends and allies, as they thought, as appears by Joſiah's going out againſt the king of Egypt, when he was marching his army againſt the king of Babylon; and partly becauſe they were the covenant-people of God, and would never be abandoned and given up by him into the hands of another people; and therefore when they were told of it by the prophets of the Lord, eſpecially by Jeremiah, time after time; who expreſly ſaid the king of Babylon would come againſt them, and they would be delivered into the hands of the Chaldeans; yet they would give no credit to it, till their ruin came upon them, as may be obſerved in various parts of his prophecy. The apoſtle quotes this paſſage in the place abovementioned, and applies it to the deſtruction of the Jews by the Romans, for their contemptuous rejection of the Meſſiah and his goſpel; which yet they would not believe to the laſt, tho' it was foretold by Chriſt and his apoſtles.

℣. 6. For lo, I raiſe up the Chaldeans, &c.] A people till of late mean and low, famous only for their ſoothſaying, divination, and judicial aſtrology; but now become a powerful and warlike people, riſing up under the permiſſion of providence to univerſal monarchy, and who would quickly add Judea to the reſt of their dominions: that bitter and haſty nation; a cruel and mercileſs people in their temper and diſpoſition: bitter againſt the people of God and true religion, and cauſing bitterneſs, calamities and diſtreſs wherever they came: haſty and precipitate in their determinations; ſwift and nimble in their motions; active and vigorous in the proſecution of their deſigns: which ſhall march thro' the breadth of the land; or breadths of the land [t]; thro' the whole world, as they were attempting to do, having ſubdued Syria, all Aſia, and great part of Africa, thro' which they boldly marched, bearing down all oppoſition that was in their way; or thro' the breadth of the land of Judea, taking all the fenced cities as they went along, and Jeruſalem the metropolis of it; ſee Iſ. viii. 7, 8: to poſſeſs the dwelling places that are not theirs; the cities of Judea, and houſes in them, as well as the palaces and dwelling places in Jeruſalem, which they had no right unto, but what they got by the ſword; what were the legal poſſeſſions and inheritances of others from father to ſon for ages paſt, theſe the Chaldeans would diſpoſſeſs them of; and not only take them, and the ſpoil and plunder of them for the preſent, but retain them in their poſſeſſion, as an inheritance to be tranſmitted to their poſterity. This may have ſome reſpect to the length of the captivity of the Jews, and their land being in the hands of their enemies for the ſpace of ſeventy years.

℣. 7. They are terrible and dreadful, &c.] For the fierceneſs of their countenances; the number and valour of their troops; the ſplendor of their armour; the victories they had obtained, and the cruelty they had exerciſed; the fame of all which ſpread terror wherever they came: their judgment and their dignity ſhall proceed of themſelves; they will not be directed and governed by any laws of God and man, but by their own; they will do according to their will and pleaſure, and none will be able to gainſay and reſiſt them; they will hear no reaſon or argument; their decrees and determinations they make of themſelves ſhall be put into execution, and there will be no oppoſing their tyrannical meaſures; they'll uſurp a power, and take upon them an authority over others of themſelves, which all muſt ſubmit unto; no mercy and pity, no goodneſs and humanity are to be expected from ſuch lawleſs and imperious enemies.

℣. 8. Their horſes alſo are ſwifter than the leopards, &c.] Creatures remarkable for their ſwiftneſs: theſe are creatures born of a he-panther and a lioneſs, and not of a lion and a ſhe-panther, as ſome have affirmed; and which adultery is highly reſented by the lion; nor will he ſuffer it to go unrevenged, as Pliny [u] and Philoſtratus [w] obſerve: thoſe thus begotten differ from common lions in this, that they have no manes: the panthers are the creatures here meant, which are very ſwift, as Bochart [x] from various authors has obſerved. Lucan [y] calls this creature celerem pardum, the ſwift panther; and Jerom ſays [z] nothing is ſwifter than the panther; and Ælianus [a] obſerves that the panther, by the ſwiftneſs of its running, will overtake moſt creatures, and particularly apes; and Euſtathius [b] confirms the ſame, ſaying, that it exceeds other creatures in ſwiftneſs, and as it were flies before the eyes of hunters; and Oſorius [c] relates, that the king of Portugal once ſent to the pope of Rome a panther tamed, which being had into the woods a hunting by a Perſian hunter, with wonderful ſwiftneſs leaped upon the boars and deer, and killed them at once; and the Septuagint verſion here is, their horſes will leap above the panthers; or exceed them in leaping, for which theſe panthers are very famous too: an Arabic writer [d], whom Bochart mentions, ſays, it will leap above forty cubits at a leap. Pliny [e] reports, that the panthers in Africa will get up into thick trees, and hide themſelves in the branches, and leap from thence on thoſe that paſs by; and becauſe of the ſwiftneſs of this creature, with other qualities of it, the third beaſt or Grecian monarchy, eſpecially in its firſt head Alexander the Great, is repreſented by it, Dan. vii. 6. he making ſuch a ſwift and rapid progreſs in his conqueſts; and yet the Chaldean horſes would exceed them in ſwiftneſs, and be very ſpeedy in their march into the land of Judea; and therefore it was in vain for the Jews to pleaſe themſelves with the thoughts that theſe people were a great way off, and ſo they ſecure from them, when they could, and would be upon them preſently, ere they were aware: and are more fierce than the evening-wolves; which creatures are naturally fierce, and eſpecially when they are hungry, and particularly at evening; when having had no food all the day, their appetites are very keen, and they go in queſt of their prey; and when they meet with it, fall upon it with greater eagerneſs and fierceneſs. The Septuagint and Arabic verſions render it, than the wolves of Arabia; that there are wolves very frequent in Arabia, is obſerved by Diodorus Siculus [f], and Strabo [g]; but that theſe are remarkable for their fierceneſs does not appear; rather thoſe in colder climates are more fierce; ſo Pliny [h] ſays, they are little and ſluggiſh in Africa and Egypt, but rough and fierce in cold climates. It is in the original text, more ſharp [i]; which ſome interpret of the ſharpneſs of their ſight. Ælianus ſays [k], it is a moſt quick and ſharp-ſighted creature; and can ſee in the night-ſeaſon, even tho' the moon ſhines not: the reaſon of which Pliny [l] gives is, becauſe the eyes of wolves are ſhining, and dart light; hence Ælianus [m] obſerves, that that time of the night in which the wolf only by nature enjoys the light, is called wolf-light; and that Homer [n] calls a night which has ſome glimmering of light, or a ſort of twilight, ſuch as the wolves can ſee themſelves walk by, αμφιλυκη νυξ, which is that light that precedes the riſing ſun; and he alſo obſerves that the wolf is ſacred to the ſun, and to Apollo, which are the ſame; and that there was an image of one at Delphos; and ſo Macrobius [o] ſays, that the inhabitants of Lycopolis, a city of Thebais in Egypt, alike worſhip Apollo and a wolf, and in both the ſun, becauſe this animal takes and conſumes all things like the ſun; and becauſe perceiving much by the quick ſight of its eyes, overcomes the darkneſs of the night; and obſerves, that ſome think they have their name from light, tho' they would have it be from the morning-light; becauſe thoſe creatures eſpecially obſerve that time for ſeizing on cattel, after a night's hunger, when before day-light they are turned out of the ſtables into paſture; but it is for the moſt part at evening, and in the night that wolves prole about for their prey [p]; and from whence they have the name of evening-wolves, to which the Chaldean horſes are here compared: and yet there ſeems to be an antipathy between theſe, if what ſome naturaliſts [q] ſay is true; as that if a horſe by chance treads in the footſteps of a wolf, a numbneſs will immediately ſeize it, yea even its belly will burſt; and that if the huckle-bone of a wolf is thrown under horſes drawing a chariot full ſpeed, and they tread upon it, they'll ſtop and ſtand ſtone ſtill, immoveable: whether reſpect is here had to the quick ſight or ſharp hunger of theſe creatures, is not eaſy to ſay; tho' rather ſince the compariſon of them is with horſes, it ſeems to reſpect the fierceneſs of them, for which the war-horſe is famous, Job xxxix. 24. and may be better underſtood of the ſharpneſs of the appetite of evening-wolves, when hunger-bitten: and their horſemen ſhall ſpread themſelves; or be multiplied, as the Targum; they ſhall be many, and ſpread themſelves all over the country, ſo that there will be no eſcaping; all will fall into their hands: and their horſemen ſhall come from far; as Chaldea was reckoned from Judea, and eſpecially in compariſon of neighbouring nations, who uſed to be troubleſome, as Moab, Edom, &c. ſee Jer. v. 15: they ſhall flee as the eagle that haſteth to eat; thoſe horſemen ſhall be ſo ſpeedy in their march, that they ſhall ſeem rather to fly than ride, and even to fly as ſwift as the eagle, the ſwifteſt of birds, and which itſelf flies ſwifteſt when hungry, and in ſight of its prey; and the rather this bird is mentioned, becauſe uſed by many nations, as the Perſians, and others, for a military ſign [r].

ỿ. 9. They ſhall come all for violence, &c.] Or, the whole of it [s]; the whole army of the Chaldeans, every one of them; this would be their ſole view, not to do themſelves juſtice, as might be pretended, or avenge any injuries or affronts done to them by the Jews; but purely for the ſake of ſpoil and plunder: their faces ſhall ſup up as the eaſt-wind; their countenances will appear ſo ſtern and fierce, that their very looks will ſo frighten, as to cauſe men to ſink and die thro' terror; juſt as herbs and plants ſhrivel up and wither away, when blaſted by a nipping eaſt-wind. So the Targum, "the reception or look of their faces is like "to a vehement eaſt-wind." Some render it, "the look or deſign of their faces is to the eaſt [t];" when the Chaldeans were on their march to Judea, their faces were to the weſt or ſouth-weſt; but then their deſire and views were, that when they had got the ſpoil they came for, as in the preceding clauſe, to carry it to Babylon, which lay eaſtward or north-eaſt of Judea, and thither their faces looked: and they ſhall gather the captivity as the ſand; or gather up perſons, both in Judea, and in other countries conquered by them, as innumerable as the ſand of the ſea, and carry them captive into their own land. Captivity is put for captives.

ỿ. 10. And they ſhall ſcoff at the kings, &c.] Or, he ſhall [u], Nebuchadnezzar king of the Chaldeans, and the army with him; who would make a jeſt of kings and their armies that ſhould oppoſe them, as being not at all a match for them; as the kings of Judah, Jehoiakim and Zedekiah, they carried captive, and all others confederate with them, in whom they truſted, as the king of Egypt particularly; and which is obſerved to ſhew the vanity of truſting in princes for ſafety; tho' it may alſo include all other kings the Chaldeans fought againſt, and the kingdoms they invaded and ſubdued: and the princes ſhall be a ſcorn unto them; the nobles, counſellors, and miniſters of ſtate; or leaders and commanders of armies, and general officers, in whom great confidence is often put; but theſe the king of Babylon and his forces would mock and laugh at, as being nothing in their hands, and who would fall an eaſy prey to them: they ſhall deride every ſtrong hold; in Jeruſalem, in the whole land of Judea, and in every other country they invade, or paſs thro', none being able to ſtand out againſt them: for they ſhall heap duſt, and take it; eaſily, as it were in ſport, only by raiſing a duſt-heap, or a heap of dirt; by which is meant a mount raiſed up to give them a little riſe, to throw in their darts or ſtones, or uſe their engines and battering-rams to more advantage, and to ſcale the walls, and get poſſeſſion. There are two other ſenſes mentioned by Kimchi; as that they ſhall gather a great number of people as duſt, and take it; or they ſhall gather duſt to fill up the trenches and ditches about the wall, that ſo they may come at it, and take it.

℣. 11. Then ſhall his mind change, &c.] The mind of the king of Babylon; not that when he had taken Jeruſalem, he altered his purpoſe, and laid aſide his deſigns of attacking other nations, and returned to his own country; where he became guilty of groſs idolatry, in ſetting up the golden image in the plain of Dura, which he required all his ſubjects to worſhip, and to which he aſcribed all his victories; for, five years after this, Joſephus [w] ſays, he led his army into Cœleſyria, and conquered the Moabites and Ammonites, and entered Egypt, and ſlew the reigning king of it: but rather the diſpoſition of his mind changed for the worſe upon his ſucceſs in ſubduing kings and princes, and their kingdoms; for tho' his mind was never good, but always proud, haughty and ambitious, inſolent, cruel and tyrannical; yet being fluſhed with his conqueſts, he grew more and more ſo: and he ſhall paſs over [x], or tranſgreſs all bounds of modeſty and ſobriety, of humanity and goodneſs: and offend, imputing this his power unto his god [y]; this particularly will be the ſin he will be guilty of, he will aſcribe all his atchievements to his idol Bel; or rather to himſelf, to his own proweſs and valour, his wiſdom and ſkill in military affairs; for ſo it will bear to be rendered, making this his own power to be his god; and perhaps the golden image Nebuchadnezzar ſet up to be worſhipped was for himſelf; ſee Dan. iv. 30. The Targum is, "therefore becauſe of the lifting up of his ſpirit, his kingdom was removed from him; and he committed an offence, in that he multiplied glory to his idol;" and ſome interpret the whole of this of the miſerable condition Nebuchadnezzar was brought into, being a prophecy of it: then ſhall his mind change; his heart from man's to a beaſt's, Dan. iv. 16: and he ſhall paſs over; from all ſociety and converſation with men, and have his dwelling with beaſts, ℣. 31, 32: and offend, or rather be puniſhed, and become deſolate and miſerable, for his pride, and idolatry, and other ſins: this his power is his god [z]; ſpoken ironically; ſee what his power is now, being changed into a beaſt, which he reckoned his god, or gloried in as what he had from his god: but I rather think the whole is a continuation of his ſucceſs, particularly in the land of Judea; and to be rendered, then ſhall he paſs thro', as the wind, and ſhall paſs over; and he ſhall bear the puniſhment of his ſin, whoſe power is his god; that is, the king of Babylon and his army, the Chaldeans ſhould paſs thro' all nations and kingdoms that were between them and Judea, like a ſtrong wind or whirlwind, to which they are compared, Jer. iv. 13. and carry all before them, none being able to reſiſt and oppoſe them; and ſhould paſs over rivers that lay in their way, and the boundaries of Judea, and ſpread themſelves over the whole country; and then that country, and the inhabitants of it, ſhould be puniſhed for their ſins, particularly for their confidence in themſelves; in their wealth and riches; in their fortreſſes and ſtrong towers; in their own works of righteouſneſs; all which they made idols of, and truſted not in their God, as they ought to have done.

℣. 12. Art thou not from everlaſting, O Lord my God, mine holy one? &c.] The prophet foreſeeing theſe calamities coming upon his nation and people, obſerves ſome things for their comfort in this verſe; and expoſtulates with God in the following verſes about his providential dealings, in order to obtain an anſwer from him, which might remove the objections of his own mind, and thoſe of other good men he perſonates, raiſed againſt them; being ſtumbled at this, that wicked men ſhould be ſuffered to ſucceed and proſper, and the righteous ſhould be afflicted and diſtreſſed by them: but for his own preſent conſolation, and that of others, in a view of the worſt that ſhould befal them, he ſtrongly aſſerts, we ſhall not die; meaning not a corporal death, for that all men die, good and bad; and this the Jews did die, and no doubt good men among them too, at the ſiege and taking of Jeruſalem by the Chaldean army, either by famine, or peſtilence, or ſword: nor a death of affliction, which the people of God are ſubject to, as well as others; is often their caſe, and is for their good, and in love, and not wrath: but a ſpiritual death, which none that are quickened by the Spirit and grace of God ever die; tho' grace may be low, it is never loſt; tho' ſaints may be in dead and lifeleſs frames, and need quickening afreſh, yet they are not without the principle of ſpiritual life; grace in them is a well of living water, ſpringing up to everlaſting life; their ſpiritual life can never fail them, ſince it is ſecured in Chriſt: and much leſs ſhall they die the ſecond, or an eternal death; they are ordained to eternal life; Chriſt is come, and given his fleſh for it, that they might have it; it is in his hands for them; they are united to him, and have both the promiſe and pledge of it: and this may be argued, as by the prophet here, from the eternity of God, art thou not from everlaſting? he is from everlaſting to everlaſting, the ancient of days, that inhabits eternity, is, was, and is to come: therefore we ſhall not die; none of his people ſhall periſh, becauſe he loves them with an everlaſting love; has made an everlaſting choice of them; has ſet up Chriſt from everlaſting, as their Surety and Saviour; entered into an everlaſting covenant with them in Chriſt; is their everlaſting Father, and will be their everlaſting portion; is the unchangeable Jehovah, and therefore they ſhall not be conſumed: this may be concluded from their covenant-intereſt in God, O Lord

Lord my God; they are his peculiar people, given to Chriſt to be preſerved by him, and covenant-intereſt always continues; he that is their God, is their God and guide unto death: and alſo from the holineſs of God, mine holy one; who has ſworn by his holineſs to them, and is faithful to his covenant and promiſe; and is the ſanctifier of them, that has ſanctified or ſet them apart for himſelf; made Chriſt ſanctification to them, and makes them holy by his Spirit and grace, and enables them to perſevere in grace and holineſs: moreover, this may be underſtood of the people of the Jews, as a church and nation; who, tho' they would be carried captive into Babylon, yet would ſtill continue as ſuch, and be returned again as ſuch, and not die, ſink and periſh; ſince the Meſſiah was to ſpring from them; and they might be aſſured of their preſervation for that purpoſe, from the perfections of God, his covenant with them, and their relation to him: nor ſhall the church of Chriſt in any age die and periſh, tho' in ever ſo low a ſtate; a particular church may, but the intereſt and church of Chriſt in general, or his ſpiritual ſeed, never ſhall. This is one of the eighteen paſſages, as Jarchi, Kimchi, and Ben Melech obſerve, called Tikkun-Sopherim, the correction of the ſcribes, of Ezra, and his company; it having been written in ſome copies, thou ſhalt not die [a]; aſſerting the immortality of God, or his eternity to come; and that as he was from everlaſting, ſo he ſhould continue to everlaſting; and to this ſenſe the Targum paraphraſes the words, "thy word remaineth for "ever;" and ſo the Syriac verſion follows the ſame reading: O Lord, thou haſt ordained them for judgment; that is, the Chaldeans; either to be judged and puniſhed themſelves for their ſins, as all wicked, chriſtleſs ſinners are, even righteouſly fore-ordained to condemnation for their ſins; or rather to be the inſtruments of puniſhing the wicked among the Jews; for this purpoſe were theſe people ordained in the counſels of God, and raiſed up in his providence, and conſtituted a kingdom, and made a powerful nation; O mighty God; or rock [b]; the rock and refuge of his people: thou haſt eſtabliſhed them for correction; or founded [c] them, and ſettled them as a monarchy, ſtrong and mighty for this end, that they might be a rod in the hand of the Lord, not for deſtruction, but for correction and chaſtiſement; and from hence it might be alſo comfortably concluded, that they ſhould not die and utterly periſh.

℣. 13. Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canſt not look upon iniquity, &c.] The Lord with his eyes of omniſcience beholds all things good and evil, and all men good and bad, with all their actions; but then he does not look upon the ſins of men with pleaſure and approbation; ſince they are contrary to his nature, repugnant to his will, and breaches of his righteous law: and tho' ſin in general may be included here, yet there ſeems to be a particular reſpect had to the evil or injury done by the Chaldeans to the Jews, in invading their land, ſpoiling their ſubſtance, and ſlaying their perſons; and to the iniquity, labour or grievance, by which may be meant the oppreſſion and violence the ſame people exerciſed upon the inhabitants of Judea; which, tho' permitted by the Lord, could not be well pleaſing in his ſight. The Targum interprets it of perſons, workers of evil, and workers of the labour of falſhood; ſee Pſ. v. 4, 5: wherefore lookeſt thou upon them that deal treacherouſly; the Chaldeans, who dealt treacherouſly with God, by worſhipping idols; and with the Jews, pretending to be their good friends and allies, when they meditated their ruin and deſtruction; and yet the Lord in his providence ſeemed to look favourably on theſe perſidious perſons, ſince they ſucceeded in all their enterprizes: this was ſtumbling to the prophet, and all good men; and they knew not how, or at leaſt found great difficulty to reconcile this to the purity and holineſs of God, and to his juſtice and faithfulneſs; ſee Jer. xii. 1, 2: and holdeſt thy tongue when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteous than he? the compariſon does not lie ſo much perſonally between Nebuchadnezzar and Zedekiah the laſt king of the Jews, whoſe eyes the king of Babylon put out, and whom he uſed in a cruel manner; who was, no doubt, comparatively ſpeaking, a more righteous perſon than the Chaldean monarch was; being not the worſt of the kings of Judea, and whoſe name has the ſignification of righteouſneſs in it: but rather between the Chaldeans and the Jews; who, tho' there were many wicked perſons among them, yet there were ſome truly righteous, who fell in the common calamity; and as to the bulk of them, were a more righteous people, at the worſt, than their enemies were, who devoured them, deſtroyed many with the ſword, plundered them of their ſubſtance, and carried them captive; and the Lord was ſilent all this while, ſaid nothing in his providence againſt them, put no ſtop to their proceedings; and by his ſilence ſeemed to approve of, at leaſt to connive at what they did; and this the prophet in the name of good men reaſons with the Lord about.

℣. 14. And maketh men as the fiſhes of the ſea, &c.] That is, ſuffereſt them to be uſed as the fiſhes of the ſea, which are eaſily taken in the net, and are common to every one; whoſoever will may take them up, and kill them, and uſe them for their food; and which alſo among themſelves are often hardly uſed, the leſſer being devoured by the greater; and in like manner the prophet ſuggeſts, that the people of the Jews, who were men made after the image of God, and made for ſociety and uſefulneſs, and moreover were God's covenant-people; and it might have been expected, that a more ſpecial providence would have attended them, more than other men, and eſpecially than what attended the fiſhes of the ſea; yet it looked as if there were no more care taken of them, than of theſe: as the creeping things that have no ruler over them; not the creeping things of the earth, but of the water, the leſſer ſort of fiſhes that move in the water; or thoſe that more properly creep, as crabs, prawns and ſhrimps; ſee Pſ. civ. 25. who have none to protect and defend them, and reſtrain others from taking and hurting them: this may ſeem contrary to what Ariſtotle [d] and Pliny [e] ſay of ſome fiſhes, that they go in company, and have a leader or governor; but as Bochart [f] obſerves, it is one thing to be a leader of the way, a guide and director, which way to ſteer their courſe in ſwimming; and another thing to be as the general of an army, to protect and defend, or under whoſe directions they might defend themſelves; ſuch an one the prophet denies they had: and ſo, the prophet complains, this was the caſe of the Jews; they were expoſed to the cruelty of their enemies, as if there was no God that governed in the world, and no providence to direct and order things for the preſervation of men, and to keep good men from being hurt by evil men; or thoſe that were weak and feeble, from being oppreſſed by the powerful and mighty: this he reaſons with the Lord about, and was deſirous of an anſwer to it.

℣. 15. They take up all of them with the angle, &c.] The prophet continues the metaphor of fiſhing, and obſerves the different ways of taking fiſh; which is to be applied to the caſe he is ſpeaking of: as fiſhermen take all they can with their angles, ſo they or he, for it is in the ſingular number, Nebuchadnezzar and his army, take up all out of the ſea of the world; are ambitious of getting all kingdoms and nations of the world under their power and dominion; particularly all Judea, and all the inhabitants of it, good and bad, without any diſtinction; for all were fiſh which came to their net: this may deſign the artful and alluring methods they firſt made uſe of to get the people into their hands, by making covenants with them, and drawing them into making of preſents, and paying of tribute: they catch them in their net, and gather them in their drag; with the angle the fiſherman catches fiſh one by one, but with the net great numbers; and what he miſſes by throwing the net, he gets by uſing the drag; all which may be expreſſive of the ways and methods uſed by the king of Babylon and his army, both in the times of Jeconiah, and of Zedekiah; under the former he uſed the net, and carried off large numbers, and with them the royal family and great ſubſtance, but left many behind; under the latter he came and ſwept away all, drained the land of its riches and its inhabitants: therefore they rejoice, and are glad; as fiſhermen do when they have good ſport; ſo theſe people rejoiced in their own ſucceſs, and in the calamities of their neighbours.

℣. 16. Therefore they ſacrifice unto their net, and burn incenſe unto their drag, &c.] Either to their idols, to fortune and the ſtars, as Aben Ezra; imagining they gave them ſucceſs, and proſpered them in the arts and methods they uſed: or to their arms, as the Targum; nor was it unuſual with the heathens to worſhip their ſpears, ſacrifice to them, and ſwear by them [g]. So Juſtin ſays [h], originally the ancients worſhipped ſpears for gods, in memory of whoſe religion ſpears are ſtill added to the images of the gods. Lucian [i] aſſerts, that the Scythians ſacrificed to a ſcymiter; and Arnobius [k] ſays the ſame: and Ammianus Marcellinus [l] reports, that the Quadi worſhip their ſwords or daggers inſtead of gods; and that it was uſual to ſwear by the ſpear is evident from others [m]. Or elſe the ſenſe is, they ſacrificed to their own valour and courage, ſkill and conduct. Becauſe by them their portion is fat, and their meat plenteous; that is, by their angle, net, and drag; or by thoſe things ſignified by them, the arts and methods they uſed to ſubdue nations, conquer kingdoms, and bring them into ſubjection to them; they enlarged their dominions, increaſed their riches and revenues, and had plenty of every thing that was deſirable for food and raiment, for pleaſure and profit; or to gratify the moſt unbounded ambition, having every thing that heart could wiſh for and deſire: the alluſion is to making ſumptuous feaſts, and rich banquets, on occaſion of victories obtained.

℣. 17. Shall they therefore empty their net, &c.] Or thus, after this manner, ſo Noldius; as fiſhermen do, when they have had a good caſt, and a large draught, ſpread the net, and take out the fiſhes, in order to throw it again, and catch more; and ſo it is aſked, ſhould theſe Chaldeans, when they have conquered one nation, and ſo filled their net or themſelves with the ſpoil, carry it to Babylon, and there lay it up, and then proceed to fight againſt another kingdom and nation, and plunder it in like manner: and not ſpare continually to ſlay the nations? the inhabitants of them one after another, and ſubdue them under them, and make themſelves maſter of all their treaſure, until they are arrived to univerſal monarchy by ſuch cruel and unmerciful methods. The Targum is, "ſhall "he ſend his armies continually to conſume na-"tions, and that without mercy?" This the prophet propoſes in the name of the whole body of the Lord's people, and leaves it with him to have an anſwer to it, which is given in the following chapter.

CHAP. II.

THIS chapter contains an anſwer from the Lord to the expoſtulations, pleadings, and reaſonings of the prophet, in the name of the people. The preparation of the prophet to receive this anſwer is deſcribed, ℣. 1. then follows the anſwer itſelf, in which he is bid to write and make plain the viſion he had, that it might be eaſily read, ℣. 2. and a promiſe is made, that viſion ſhould ſtill be continued to the appointed time, at which time the Meſſiah would come; and this the righteous man, in oppoſition to the vain and proud man, is encouraged to live in the faith of, ℣. 3, 4. and then the deſtruction of the enemies of the people of God is threatned for their pride, ambition, covetouſneſs, oppreſſion and murder, ℣. 5—12. which would be unavoidable, ℣. 13. and iſſue in the ſpread of the knowledge of the glory of God in the world, ℣. 14. and alſo the ruin of other enemies is threatened, for drawing men into apoſtacy, and for their violence and idolatry, ℣. 15—19. upon which would follow an univerſal ſilence in the earth, ℣. 20.

℣. 1. I will ſtand upon my watch, &c.] Theſe are the words of the prophet: ſo the Targum introduces them, "the prophet ſaid;" and this he ſaid in character as a watchman, as all the prophets were: as a watchman takes the proper place he watches in and looks out, eſpecially in time of danger and diſtreſs, if he can ſpy any one bringing tidings, that he may receive it, and notify it to the people that have appointed him a watchman; man; ſo the prophet retired from the world, and gave himſelf up to meditation and prayer, and put himſelf in a waiting poſture; looking up to the Lord, and expecting an anſwer to his expoſtulations with him, concerning the ſucceſs of the enemies of God's people, and the calamities that were like to come upon them, that he might report it to them; ſee Iſ. xxi. 8: and ſet me upon the tower; a place of eminence, from which he could behold an object at a diſtance: it ſignifies a ſtrait place, in which he was as one beſieged; and may be an emblem of the ſtraits and difficulties he was in, which he wanted to be extricated out of: the thoughts of his heart troubled him; he had a great many objections that roſe up in his mind, againſt the providences that were like to attend his people; he was beſet with the temptations of ſatan, and ſurrounded with objectors to what he had delivered, concerning the Chaldeans being raiſed up by God to the deſtruction of the Jewiſh nation; and amidſt theſe difficulties, he ſets himſelf to reading the word of God, and meditation on it, to pray to God for inſtruction and information in this matter; as Aſaph, in a like caſe, went into the ſanctuary of the Lord, where he got ſatisfaction, Pſ. lxxiii. 2, 3. 16, 17. as well as it may be expreſſive of the confidence he had in God, in his covenant and promiſes, which were as a fortreſs and ſtrong tower to him; in ſhort, he kept his place, he was found in the way of his duty, in the performance of his office, and was humbly and patiently waiting on God, to know more of his mind and will, and acquaint the people with it. And will watch to ſee what he will ſay unto me; or in me [n]; that is, what the Lord would ſay unto him, either outwardly by an audible voice; or inwardly by impreſſing things upon his mind; or in a viſion by the Spirit of prophecy, as Kimchi; ſo David, the Spirit of the Lord ſpoke by me, or in me, 2 Sam. xxiii. 2. he was determined to wait patiently for an anſwer, and to continue in the preſent poſture, and conſtantly attend to every motion and dictate of the Spirit of God, and take particular notice of what ſhould be ſuggeſted to him: and what I ſhall anſwer when I am reproved; either by the Lord, for uſing ſo much freedom and boldneſs in expoſtulations and reaſonings with him, who is under no obligation to give an account of his matters unto the children of men; or by others, how he ſhould be able to ſatisfy his own mind, and remove the ſcruples, doubts, and objections that aroſe there againſt the providence of God, in proſpering the wicked, and afflicting the righteous, and repel the temptation he was under to quarrel with God, and arraign his proceedings; and how he ſhould anſwer the objections that his people made, both againſt his prophecies, and the providence of God, for which they reproved him; or however he expected they would. The Targum is, "and what will be returned to my "requeſt."

℣. 2. And the Lord anſwered me, &c.] As he does his miniſters and people ſooner or later, in one way or another, when they call upon him with humility and reverence, with faith and fervency: and ſaid, write the viſion; which the prophet now had from him, concerning the coming of the Meſſiah, and the deſtruction of the enemies of the church and people of God: and this he has orders to write; not only to tell it to the people then preſent, for their particular information and ſatisfaction; but to write it, that it may be read over and over, and that it may remain, and be of uſe in times to come: and make it plain upon tables; engrave it in plain legible letters on tables of wood; on box-tree, as the Septuagint verſion; on which they uſed to write before paper was found out and uſed. Writing-tables are of ancient uſe; they were uſed in and before the times of Homer, for he ſpeaks [o] of writing very pernicious things on a two-leaved table; wherefore Joſephus muſt be miſtaken when he ſuggeſts [p], that letters were not found out in the times of Homer. Theſe tables were made of wood, ſometimes of one ſort, and ſometimes of another; ſometimes they were made of the pine-tree, as appears from Euripides [q]; but, for the moſt part, of box [r], according to the Greek verſion as above; and conſiſted ſometimes of two leaves, for the moſt part of three or five, covered with wax [s], on which impreſſions were eaſily made, and continued long, and were very legible; and theſe impreſſions or letters were formed with an iron ſtile or pen; ſee Jer. xvii. 1. this the Greeks and Tuſcans firſt uſed, but was afterwards forbid by the Romans, who inſtead of it ordered an inſtrument of bone to be uſed [t]: hence theſe tables were wont to be called wax, becauſe beſmeared with it; and ſo in wills and teſtaments wrote on them, the heirs are ſaid to be written either in the firſt wax, or in the bottom of the wax [u], that is, of the will, or in the loweſt part of the table, or what we ſhould call the bottom of the leaf or page: and it was a cuſtom among the Romans, as Cicero [w] relates, that the public affairs of every year were committed to writing by the Pontifex Maximus or high-prieſt, and publiſhed on a table, and ſet to view within doors, that the people might have an opportunity and be able to know them; yea, it was uſual to hang up laws, approved and recorded, in tables of braſs, in their market-places, and in their temples, that [x] they might be ſeen and read; the ſame we call annals. In like manner the Jewiſh prophets uſed to write, and expoſe their prophecies publickly on tables, either in their own houſes, or in the temple, that every one that paſſed by might read them. That he may run that readeth it; may run thro' the whole without any difficulty, without making any ſtop, being written in ſuch large capital letters; and thoſe cut ſo well, and made ſo plain, that a man might run it over at once with eaſe, or even read it as he was running; nor need he ſtop his pace, or ſtand to read. The Targum is, "write the prophecy, and explain it in the "book of the law, that he may haſten to obtain "wiſdom, whoever he is that reads in it."

℣. 3. For the viſion is yet for an appointed time, &c.] Not the preſent viſion only, but viſion or prophecy in general: it was a doubt that aroſe in the minds of the prophet and other good men, upon the notice given that the Chaldeans would be raiſed up to the deſtruction of the Jews; that then the law of God would ceaſe, his worſhip would not continue; viſion and prophecy would be no more; it would be all over with the doctrine of the law and the prophets: now in anſwer to this, and to remove this doubt, they are aſſured, that viſion or prophecy ſhould yet, or ſtill continue, and even to the appointed time; the time fixed for the continuance of it, notwithſtanding the people of the Jews ſhould be carried captive into another land: and accordingly ſo it was; there were prophets, as Daniel and Ezekiel, in the time of the captivity; and after it, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi; yea, the law and the prophets were until John; for viſion and prophecy were to be ſealed up by the Meſſiah, and not before; ſee Luke xvi. 16. Dan. ix. 24. it was true indeed with reſpect to the preſent viſion or prophecy concerning the Meſſiah, that that was not to be fulfilled preſently; there was ſome conſiderable time firſt to elapſe; there was a time appointed for the accompliſhment of it, and it would remain till that time, and then be moſt ſurely fulfilled; which would be before the ſcepter departed from Judah, while the ſecond temple was yet ſtanding, and when Daniel's ſeventy weeks, or 490 years, were come; which were the limited, determined, and appointed time for the Meſſiah's coming, the time appointed of the Father, the fulneſs of time; ſo there was an appointed time for his coming to take vengeance on the Jewiſh nation, for their rejection of him, to which the apoſtle applies theſe words, Heb. x. 37. and alſo for his ſpiritual coming, to viſit his people in a gracious way; there is a ſet time to favour Zion and her children; as well as there is a day fixed for his ſecond coming, or coming to judgment. But at the end it ſhall ſpeak, and not lie; or rather, he ſhall ſpeak [y]; and ſo in the following clauſes it ſhould be rendered, not it, but he; and ſo the apoſtle has taught us to interpret it of a perſon, and not a thing, Heb. x. 37. that is, at the end of the time appointed, or at the end of the Jewiſh ſtate, both civil and eccleſiaſtic, the Meſſiah ſhould appear, as he did, which is called the end of the world, 1 Cor. x. 11. Heb. ix. 26. when a new world began, the world to come, the goſpel-diſpenſation, of which Chriſt is ſaid to be the Father, in the Greek verſion of Iſ. ix. 5. ſee Heb. ii. 5. and being come, he ſhall ſpeak; or, as it may be rendered, at the end thereof ſhall be the ſpeaker, or preacher [z]; that ſhall publiſh and proclaim the glad tidings of the goſpel; and this agrees with Chriſt, the Logos, or word of God, the great prophet that ſhould be raiſed up in the church, the teacher ſent of God, the wonderful counſellor, and faithful witneſs; who ſpoke out the whole mind and will of God; publiſhed the everlaſting goſpel; delivered out the doctrines of grace and truth; and ſpoke ſuch words of grace as never man did, and with ſuch power and authority as the ſcribes and phariſees did not. Some render the words, and he ſhall break forth as the morning [a]; ſo the word is uſed in Cant. ii. 17. and iv. 6. and ſo the Septuagint verſion, he ſhall ariſe at the end; like the riſing ſun: this agrees with Chriſt, the day-ſpring from on high, and whoſe coming is ſaid to be as the morning, Luke i. 78. 2 Sam. xxiii. 4. Hoſ. vi. 3. and when he ſhould thus appear and exerciſe his prophetic office, he ſhould not lie; this is the character of God himſelf, as oppoſed to a mere man; who is ſubject to lying and deceit; and ſuits well with Chriſt, who is truly God, and not a mere man; and anſwers to his character in prophecy and fact, that there was no guile in his mouth and lips, Iſ. liii. 4. 1 Pet. ii. 22. and fitly deſcribes him as a preacher, who is truth itſelf; taught the way of God in truth; ſpoke the word of truth, the goſpel of our ſalvation; and no lie is of the truth; and who is infallible in all his doctrines, and does not, and cannot deceive any; all his words are to be depended upon as faithful and true. Though it tarry, wait for it; or though he tarry, wait for him; not that he really would or did tarry; but he might ſeem to do ſo, not coming ſo ſoon as the Old Teſtament-ſaints expected, and as they wiſhed for and deſired; it was a long time from the firſt promiſe of him; and ſometimes the ſaints were ready to give it up, and their hearts to ſink and faint, becauſe it was ſeemingly deferred. This ſhows that this prophecy does not reſpect the Babyloniſh captivity; for that had no ſeeming delay, but as ſoon as ever the ſeventy years were up, there was a deliverance from it; but the Meſſiah's coming was long expected, and ſeemed to be deferred, and the patience of the ſaints was almoſt wore out; but they are here encouraged, when this was the caſe, ſtill to wait for him, as good old Simeon and others did, about the time of his coming; and ſo his ſpiritual and ſecond coming ſhould be waited patiently for, tho' they may ſeem to be delayed. Becauſe it will ſurely come, it will not tarry; or for he that is to come, or is coming, will come [b], and not tarry; beyond the appointed time. This is a periphraſis of the Meſſiah; for being ſo often ſpoken of as to come, it became a deſcription of him, he that is to come; ſee Matt. xi. 3. and as it was foretold he would come, ſo aſſuredly he would come, and not ſtay a moment longer than the time appointed of the Father; in which fulneſs of time God ſent him, and he came, Gal. iv. 3, 4. The perſon here propheſied of is not Jeremiah, as Jarchi, but the Meſſiah; and this is acknowledged by ſome Jewiſh writers, ancient and modern; and removes the doubt and objection that might ariſe, from the Chaldeans coming upon the Jews, and carrying them captive, as if the promiſe of the Meſſiah would fail, whereas it would not. In the Talmud [c], they ſay, "God does not renew his world till after ſeven thouſand years; another ſays five thouſand. R. Nathan ſays, this ſcripture penetrates and deſcends into the abyſs; i. e. fixes no particular time; the viſion is for an appointed time, &c. not as our Rabbins, who enquire the meaning of a time, and times, and half a time; what then is meant, but at the end it ſhall ſpeak, and not lie? Let them burſt that compute the times, who uſed to ſay when the time comes, and he cometh not, he will never come; but wait for him, as it is ſaid, if he tarry, wait for him: perhaps you'll ſay, we wait, but he does not wait; this may be an inſtruction to you what he ſays, therefore the Lord waiteth to be gracious, &c." Maimonides ſays [d], their twelfth fundamental article of faith is, the days of the Meſſiah; that is, to believe, and be firmly perſuaded, that he will come, nor will he tarry; if he tarry, wait for him: tho' he obſerves, this ſcripture ture does not fix the certain time; nor is it to be ſo expounded, ſo as to gather from thence the exact time of his coming. This they don't chuſe to own, tho' it does, becauſe the time is long ago elapſed. Abarbinel [e] owns, that this viſion is different from that in the preceding verſe, which concerns the ſecond temple, but this another redemption; and would have it, that the words may be explained thus, he that ſhall come, will come, at the time appointed, which is mentioned; and after his coming, the king Meſſiah ſhall not tarry from coming to redeem you; which, tho' a wrong ſenſe, ſhows his conviction of the prophecy belonging to the Meſſiah. So Abendana [f] ſays, our Rabbins underſtand this, at the end it ſhall ſpeak, of the end of our redemption from this captivity in which we now are; and in this way it appears right to explain it, for the prophet was complaining of the proſperity of Nebuchadnezzar; and the Lord anſwers him, that he ſhould write the viſion of the deſtruction of Babylon, which ſhould be at the end of ſeventy years; and ſaid, do not wonder that I prolong to Babylon ſeventy years, for yet the viſion is for an appointed time; as if he ſhould ſay, yet there is a viſion for times afar off, and at the end it ſhall ſpeak: in all which there are plain traces of the ſenſe the ancient ſynagogue put on this text, tho' now perverted, to favour their hypotheſis of the Meſſiah being yet to come and ſave them.

℣. 4. Behold his ſoul which is lifted up, is not upright in him, &c.] This and the following clauſe deſcribe two ſorts of perſons differently affected to the Meſſiah, and the promiſe of his coming. Here it points at ſuch as were incredulous, as the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it; that diſbelieved his coming, and mocked and ſcoffed at the promiſe of it; as well as thoſe that did not believe in him when he came, tho' he had all the characteriſticks of the Meſſiah; and damnation was the certain conſequence of their unbelief. The proud and haughty ſcribes and phariſees are here plainly deſcribed, whoſe minds were elated with themſelves; whoſe hearts were like bubbles, blown up, full of wind; whoſe ſouls ſwelled with pride and vanity, and a high conceit of themſelves; of their merit and worth; of their holineſs and works of righteouſneſs; and treated thoſe they thought below them in theſe things with the utmoſt diſdain and contempt; and truſted in themſelves, and to their own righteouſneſs, to the great neglect of the true Meſſiah and his righteouſneſs [g]. The word for lifted up, has in it the ſignification of a hill, mountain, fortreſs, or tower; ſee Iſ. xxxii. 14. Mic. iv. 8. as Aben Ezra obſerves. So R. Moſes Kimchi interprets the paſſage, "he whoſe ſoul is not right in "him, places himſelf in a fortreſs or tower, to "ſet himſelf on high there from the enemy, and "does not return to God, nor ſeek deliverance "of him; but the righteous has no need to place "himſelf on high in a fortreſs, for he ſhall live "by his faith." Ophel was part of the hill of Zion, on which the temple was built; and Cocceius thinks there is a reference in the words to mount Moriah, on which the temple ſtood: and in this ſenſe the words aptly agree with the phariſaical Jews, who boaſted of their temple, and gloried in it, and truſted in the ſervice and ſacrifices of it; and betook themſelves to the obſervance of rites and ceremonies, and the traditions of their elders; and to their moral works of righteouſneſs, for their juſtification and ſalvation, as their tower of ſafety, and place of defence; neglecting the Meſſiah, the rock of ſalvation, the rock of Iſrael, the munition of rocks, the ſtrong-hold and tower, where only ſafety and ſalvation are. The apoſtle, following the Greek verſion, renders the word in Heb. x. 38. if any man draw back, &c. and De Dieu [h] obſerves, that the word in the Arabic language ſignifies to neglect or withdraw the mind from a perſon or thing; and may be fitly applied to the ſame perſons, who neglected Chriſt, and the great ſalvation by him; hid their faces from him; would not look at him, nor converſe with him, nor attend his miniſtry, nor ſuffer others to do it; they withdrew from his apoſtles and miniſters, and the chriſtian churches, and perſecuted them both in Judea, and in the Gentile world; and many of the Jews that did make a profeſſion, and joined themſelves to chriſtian churches, after a time ſeparated from them; being ſenſual, and not having the Spirit, went out from among them, not being truly of them, and forſook the aſſembling of themſelves together with them; and to theſe the apoſtle applies the words in the fore-mentioned place. Now of every ſuch perſon it may be ſaid, his ſoul is not upright in him; either in himſelf, as the Vulgate Latin verſion, and ſo Kimchi; he is not a juſt man, not truly upright and righteous, tho' he may think he is, and may be thought ſo by others; yet he is not in the ſight of God; his heart is not ſincere; he has not the truth of grace in him; a right ſpirit is not created and renewed in him; he never was convinced by the Spirit of God of ſin and righteouſneſs, or he would not be thus elated with himſelf: his ſoul is not upright towards God; he ſeeks himſelf, and his own applauſe, in all he does, and not the honour and glory of God, and the magnifying of his grace and goodneſs; he has no right notions of the righteouſneſs of God, and of his holy law; nor of Chriſt, his perſon, and offices; nor indeed of himſelf. Or his ſoul is not right in him [i]; that is, in Chriſt, who was to come, nor when he was come; that is, he is not rightly, ſincerely, and heartily affected to him; he has no true knowledge of him, real deſire unto him, hearty affection for him, or faith in him, or regard unto him, his goſpel and his ordinances; all which was moſt clearly true of the carnal Jews, and is of all ſelf-righteous perſons. The apoſtle in Heb. x. 38. ſeems to underſtand it of the ſoul of God, that that, or he, was not affected to, and pleaſed with, perſons of ſuch a character and complexion; ſee Luke xiv. 11. and xviii. 14. But the juſt ſhall live by faith; the juſt man is the reverſe of the former; he is one that believed in the coming of Chriſt, and believed in him when come; who has no over-weaning opinion of himſelf, and of his own righteouſneſs; nor does he truſt in it for his juſtification before God, and acceptance with him; but in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed to him, from whence he is denominated a juſt man: and ſuch a one ſhall live, not merely a corporal life, for righteous men die as well as others; nor an eternal life, tho' ſuch ſhall live this life, and have it now in ſome ſenſe, for this life is enjoyed not by faith, but by ſight; but a ſpiritual life, begun in regeneration, and maintained by the Spirit and grace of God; ſuch live a life of juſtification on Chriſt, of ſanctification from him, and of communion with him; they live chearfully, comfortably, and delightfully, a life of peace, joy, and comfort; which is greatly the ſenſe of the word here, as in Pſ. xxii. 26. Iſ. lv. 2. and this is by his faith; his own faith, and not another's; which tho' for its kind is the ſame in all, alike precious faith, yet as to its actings is peculiar to one, and is not another's: or by the faith of God; that is, by that faith which is the gift of God, and of his operation, and has him for its object; ſuch live by faith upon a promiſing God, and ſo live comfortably: or by the faith of Chriſt, promiſed to come in the preceding verſe; by that faith, of which he is the object, author, and finiſher: juſt men live not upon their faith, but by it on Chriſt, as crucified for them, as the bread of life, and as the Lord their righteouſneſs; and ſo have joy and peace in believing. There is a different accentuation of this clauſe. Some put the ſtop after juſt, and read the words, the juſt, by his faith ſhall live; that is, he who is a juſt man, in an evangelical ſenſe, he ſhall live by his faith, in the ſenſe before explained; not that he is a juſt man that lives righteouſly and unblameably before men; but who lives a life of faith on Chriſt, and whoſe hope of eternal life is not founded upon his holy life and converſation, but upon the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which he by faith lives upon; for neither eternal life, nor the hope of it, are to be aſcribed to faith in itſelf, but to the object of it. But the moſt correct Hebrew copies unite by the accent merca, the words by his faith, to the juſt man; and ſo they are to be read, the juſt by his faith, he ſhall live; that is, the man who is juſt, not by the works of the law, but by faith in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, or thro' the righteouſneſs of Chriſt received by faith; for it is not faith itſelf, or the act of believing, that is a man's juſtifying righteouſneſs, or is imputed to him for righteouſneſs, or denominates him righteous, but the righteouſneſs of Chriſt he lays hold on by faith; and ſuch a man ſhall live both ſpiritually and eternally. And this manner of accenting the words is approved of by Waſmuth [k], and by Reinbeck [l]. Burkius, a late annotator, thinks, it might be ſafeſt to repeat the word that is controverted, and read it thus, the juſt in or by his faith; in or by his faith he ſhall live; which takes in both ſenſes, and either of which rightly explained may be admitted. Junius, with whom Van Till agrees, is of opinion, that reſpect is had to the example of Abraham, of whom we read Gen. xv. 6. and he believed in the Lord, and he counted it to him for righteouſneſs; not his faith, but the object of it, or what he believed, the promiſed ſeed. And ſo the ancient Jews compare this faith with Abraham's; for mentioning the text in Gen. xv. 6. ſay they [m], "this is the "faith by which the Iſraelites inherit, of which "the ſcripture ſays, and the juſt by his faith ſhall "live." And they have alſo a ſaying [n], that the law, and all the precepts of it, delivered to Moſes on mount Sinai, are reduced by Habakkuk to one, namely this, the juſt by his faith ſhall live; which is true, if rightly underſtood; for the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, the juſt man becomes ſo by, and which by faith he lives upon, is anſwerable to the whole law. The apoſtle produces this paſſage three times to prove, that the righteouſneſs of Chriſt revealed in the goſpel is to faith; that no man is juſtified by the law in the ſight of God; that the juſt man ſhall live, and not die; ſhall not draw back to perdition, but believe to the ſaving of the ſoul, Rom. i. 17. Gal. iii. 11. Heb. x. 38, 39. which ſhows, that it belongs to goſpel-times and things. The Targum of the whole is, "behold the wicked ſay, all theſe "things ſhall not be, but the righteous ſhall re"main in their truth." Kimchi interprets the former part of Nebuchadnezzar and Belſhazzar his ſon; and the latter part of the Iſraelites carried into captivity with Zedekiah; but very wrongly.

[f] Not. in Miclol Yophi in loc. vid. Caphtor Uperah, fol. 6. 4. & 45. 1. 2.

[g] So Kimchi and Ben Melech obſerve the word has the ſignification of haughtineſs of heart, and of pride; and Jarchi of impudence; and the Arabic word Muthaphilin in Schindler, is rendered deſpiſers.

[h] So غفل according to Caſtel, is neglexit, Act. vi. 1. ſubſtraxit ſe, Jud. xx. 36. and ſo it is uſed in the Alcoran, Surat. Joſeph. ℣. 13. and in the Arabic verſion of Pſ. xxviii. 1. Matt. xxiii. 23. Heb. xii. 5.

[i] לא ישרה נפשו בו non recta (eſt) anima ejus in eo, Montanus, Calvin, Druſius, Burkius.

℣. 5. Yea alſo, becauſe he tranſgreſſeth by wine, &c.] Or rather, how much leſs or more [o], wine dealing treacherouſly; or a man of wine, as Aben Ezra ſupplies it; that is, a wine-bibber, as Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it: and the ſenſe in connexion with the preceding verſe is; if a Jew, elated with his works of righteouſneſs, his ſoul is not right in him, how much leſs a drunken, treacherous, proud, and ambitious heathen; if the ſcribes and phariſees, who expected the coming of the Meſſiah, yet withdrew from him, and oppoſed themſelves unto him when come, how much more will ſuch perſons ſet themſelves againſt him and his intereſt, thus deſcribed; by whom are meant, not the Babylonian monarchs, Nebuchadnezzar and Belſhazzar, and the Chaldeans, as uſually interpreted, though there are many things in the account applicable to them; but this is breaking the thread of the prophecy, which carries on the account of the enemies of Chriſt, and of his kingdom, from his firſt to his ſecond coming; whereas to interpret this prophecy of the Chaldeans, is to go back to times before the firſt coming of Chriſt; nor does it ſeem neceſſary to ſay any thing more concerning them, ſince the people of God might be ſatisfied that theſe would be in their turn deſtroyed, and they delivered from them; and that they, the Jews, could not be cut off as a people, ſince the promiſe of the Meſſiah, as ſpringing from them, is firmly eſtabliſhed; and it is ſo ſtrongly aſſerted, that he ſhould come at the appointed time, and not tarry: after which the prophet goes on to obſerve two different ſorts of people among the Jews; one ſort proud and vain-glorious, who oppoſed themſelves to Chriſt when he came; the other ſort true believers in him, who lived by faith upon him: ſo things would ſtand among the Jews when Chriſt came, and ſo they did; there was a ſeparation among them on his account: next the prophet proceeds to obſerve another ſort of enemies to Chriſt and his intereſt among the heathens, which was not to be wondered at, and therefore introduced by a comparative particle, how much more or leſs; and who muſt be removed to make way for his kingdom and glory in the latter day, manifeſtly pointed at in ℣. 14, 20. now who can theſe be but the Romans, both pagan and papal in ſucceſſion? and with theſe and their rulers, civil and eccleſiaſtical, do the characters given as well agree, as with the Babylonian monarchy, and the Chaldeans, or better; and therefore, after Cocceius and Van Till, I ſhall chooſe to interpret the whole of them; and it is well known, that ſeveral of the Roman emperors were greatly given to luxury and intemperance, the firſt character they ſtand deſcribed by in the text. Tiberius was greatly addicted to this vice; and becauſe of his greedineſs after wine [p], uſed to be called Biberius Caldius Mero, inſtead of Tiberius Claudius Nero: his ſucceſſor Caligula, ſpent the immenſe riches Tiberius had gathered together, in leſs than a year's time in luxury and intemperance [q]; and Claudius that ſucceeded him, ſcarce ever went out of his doors but he was drunk [r]; and Nero who came after him to the empire, was of unuſual luxury and ſumptuouſneſs, ss the hiſtorian ſays [s]; he uſed to keep on his banquets from the middle of the day to the middle of the night [t]; to ſay nothing of Domitian, Commodus, and other emperors that followed after them: and theſe men were deceitful and treacherous, both to their friends and enemies; and it is no wonder that ſuch as theſe ſhould oppoſe themſelves to the kingdom and intereſt of Chriſt, as they did. Kimchi interprets this of Nebuchadnezzar; and Jarchi of Belſhazzar; and moſt interpreters think it refers to his drinking in the veſſels of the temple, Dan. v. 2, 3: he is a proud man; the Roman emperors were exceſſively proud, like the unjuſt judge, neither feared God, nor regarded man; nay, ſet up themſelves for gods, and required divine worſhip to be given them. Caius Caligula claimed divine majeſty to himſelf, and ſet up himſelf to be worſhipped among his brother-gods; he built a temple to his own deity, and appointed prieſts and ſacrifices; and placed a golden image of himſelf in it, and clothed it every day with ſuch a garment as he himſelf wore [u]; he alſo ſet up his own image in the temple at Jeruſalem. Nero ſuffered himſelf to be called lord and god by Tiridates king of the Armenians, with bended knees and hands lift up to heaven. Domitian and Aurelianus took the ſame titles as Nero did; and Diocleſian would be worſhipped as a god, and called himſelf the brother of the ſun and moon; and no marvel that ſuch men as theſe ſhould be enemies to Chriſt, and perſecutors of his people: neither keepeth at home; or, dwells not in the fold [w]; in the ſheepfold of Chriſt, in his church, being none of his ſheep, an alien from the commonwealth of Iſrael; and ſo it denotes an infidel, an heathen; a fit character for the pagan emperors, who had no habitation in the houſe of God. Kimchi interprets it of Nebuchadnezzar's kingdom not being continued; or of his being driven from his habitation, his palace, from among men to live with beaſts; but it is the character, and not the puniſhment of the perſon that is here pointed at: who enlargeth his deſire as hell, and is as death, and cannot be ſatisfied; death and the grave, tho' ſuch vaſt numbers are continually ſlain by the one, and laid in the other, yet are never ſatisfied; ſee Prov. xxvii. 20. and xxx. 15, 16. This deſcribes the inſatiable thirſt of the Roman emperors after honour, riches, and univerſal monarchy; who were never ſatisfied with what they obtained: but gathereth unto him all nations, and heapeth unto him all people; that is, ſubdued them, and made them provinces of the Roman empire, and tributary to it, even almoſt all the then known world; hence the Roman empire is called the whole world, Luke ii. 1. ſo Agrippa in his orations to the Jews, mentions all nations as ſubject to the Romans [x].

[o] ואף כי quanto magis, Calvin, Druſius, Tarnovius, Cocceius, Van Till, Burkius.

℣. 6. Shall not all theſe take up a parable againſt him? &c.] A proverbial expreſſion, a ſhort ſentence, a laconic ſpeech, delivered in a few words, which contains much in them, concerning the vices of theſe emperors, and imprecating judgments upon them for them; took up and expreſſed by the nations brought into ſubjection unto them, and eſpecially by the chriſtians in thoſe nations ſpoiled and perſecuted by them: and a taunting proverb againſt him; or, whoſe explanation are riddles to him [y]; the proverb, when explained, would be a riddle to him, which he could not underſtand, nor would give any credit to; taking it not to belong to him or them, and in which they had no concern; tho' afterwards would find they had to their great mortification: and ſay, wo to him that increaſeth that which is not his; ſubſtance or goods, not his own, as the Targum explains it; which they had no right unto, nor property in, but were another's; and therefore guilty of great injuſtice in taking it from them, and might juſtly expect vengeance would purſue them for it; ſuch were the goods they ſpoiled the chriſtians of for not worſhipping their idols, and for profeſſing and abiding by the chriſtian religion: how long? that is, how long ſhall they go on increaſing their ſubſtance by ſuch unjuſt and unlawful methods? how long ſhall they keep that which they have ſo unjuſtly got? this ſuggeſts as if it was a long time, which, as Cocceius obſerves, does not ſo well agree with the Babylonian, as the Roman empire, which ſtood much longer: and to him that ladeth himſelf with thick clay; ſuch is gold and ſilver, no other than yellow and white duſt and dirt; and may be called clay, becauſe dug out of the earth, as that; and as clay is defiling, ſo are gold and ſilver, when ill gotten, or ill uſed, or the heart ſet too much upon them; and as that is very ponderous and troubleſome to carry, ſo an abundance of riches bring much care with them, and often are very troubleſome to the owners of them, and frequently hinder their ſleep, reſt and eaſe; and as clay when it ſticks to the heels hinders walking, ſo riches, when the affections are too much ſet on them, are great obſtacles in the way of true religion and godlineſs; hence our Lord obſerves, how hard it is for them that truſt in riches to enter into the kingdom of God, Mark x. 24. they are even a weight, a clog to good men. The phraſe ſeems to point at the meanneſs of them, as well as the hurt that ſometimes comes by them, and the contempt they ſhould be had in, in compariſon of the true riches; hence, agreeable to this way of ſpeaking, a good man Druſius makes mention of uſed to call gold yellow earth; and a certain Greek writer [z] ſays, gold is aſhes, and ſo is ſilver. The word uſed is a compound; and, as Kimchi obſerves, ſignifies an abundance of riches; but our countryman Mr. Fuller [a], chuſes rather to render it, an abundance of pledges; and thinks it has reſpect to the many pledges which the perſon here ſpoken of, by whom he ſuppoſes is meant the Baby-

Babylonian monarch, had in an unjuſt manner took of ſeveral nations, and heaped up like an uſurer; and which ſhould in due time be taken from him, by thoſe whom he had plundered of them: but this expreſſes the greedy deſire of the Romans after money, as well as the unlawful methods they took to acquire wealth, and the vaſt ſums they became maſters of, ſo that they were even loaded with it; but getting it in an unrighteous manner, it brought the curſes and imprecations of the people upon them, eſpecially thoſe they defrauded of it. Joſeph Kimchi, as his ſon David obſerves, interprets it, "he ſhall make thick clay lie heavy on his "grave;" and it was a cuſtom with the Romans, as Druſius[b] relates, that when one imprecated evil upon another, he uſed to wiſh a heavy load of earth upon him, that is, when he was dead; as on the contrary, when one was wiſhed well after death, it was deſired he might have a light earth upon him: ſo Julian the emperor, ſpeaking of Conſtantius, ſays[c], "when he is become happy, or "departs out of this life, may the earth be light "upon him;" which is wiſhing all felicity, and freedom from puniſhment; whereas the contrary, to have a load of earth or thick clay, is an imprecation of the heavieſt puniſhment.

ỳ. 7. Shall not they riſe up ſuddenly that ſhall bite thee? &c.] Or, thy uſurers, or creditors[d], as ſome render it; the chriſtians, whoſe money, goods and ſubſtance they had ſpoiled them of, but now ſhould be repaid with great uſury and gain; theſe, that is, their princes and emperors, as Conſtantine and Theodoſius, roſe up ſuddenly, and conquered the heathen emperors, and took away their power and authority from them, and their wealth and riches, and gave them to the chriſtians, what they and thoſe under them had plundered them of: and awake, that ſhall vex thee? or move thee[e]; the emperor, from the throne of the empire; and other ſubordinate magiſtrates from their places of dignity, truſt and profit; the prieſts out of their temples; and change the face of things every where; and which is expreſſed in language agreeable to this, in Rev. vi. 14. and has reſpect to the ſame times and things, and the heaven departed as a ſcrowl when it is rolled together, and every mountain and iſland were moved out of their place; which is to be underſtood of the fall of the pagan Roman empire: and thou ſhalt be for booties unto them? the wealth and riches found in the Roman empire, as it fell into the hands of Conſtantine, were converted to the uſe of the chriſtians for the building of their temples, and the maintenance of their miniſters, the relief of their poor, and for the reparation of loſſes others had ſuſtained under the perſecutions: thus the chriſtian emperors roſe up at once, and exerted themſelves; and who before ſeemed to be aſleep awoke, and ſeized upon the empire, and the riches of it, and divided the ſpoil among themſelves and their people.

ỳ. 8. Becauſe thou haſt ſpoiled many nations, all the remnant of the people ſhall ſpoil thee, &c.] Thoſe that ſurvived the perſecutions of the Roman emperors; thoſe that were left of the great numbers put to death by them; thoſe under Conſtantine roſe up, and by juſt retaliation ſpoiled them of all their power and wealth: becauſe of mens blood; the blood of the ſaints and martyrs of Jeſus, of thoſe under the altar, whoſe blood cried for vengeance; Rev. vi. 9, 10. which was ſhed under the ten bloody perſecutions: or becauſe of the blood of a man; of Adam[f], as it may be rendered; the blood of Chriſt the ſecond Adam, which, tho' ſhed at the inſtance of the Jews, yet by the order of Pontius Pilate the Roman governor: and for the violence of the land, and of the city, and of all that dwell therein; that is, for the violence and injuries done to the land of Iſrael and city of Jeruſalem, and the inhabitants thereof, as the Targum, and ſo Jarchi; and which were done by the Romans to thoſe places and people, under Titus Veſpaſian, when he invaded the country of Judea, and made it deſolate; beſieged and took Jeruſalem, and burnt it with fire; deſtroyed great numbers of its inhabitants, and carried them captive, and ſent great multitudes of them to the mines; as well as for what were done to the chriſtians in every country and city where they dwelt; and to the city of the living God, the church, the heavenly Jeruſalem, and the citizens of it, who were uſed by them in a very cruel and inhuman manner; and for which vengeance would be, and was taken upon them.

ỳ. 9. Wo to him that coveteth an evil covetouſneſs to his houſe, &c.] The biſhops of Rome being enriched by the donations of Conſtantine, were not ſatisfied, but coveted more; theſe are the greedy dogs Iſaiah ſpeaks of, that could never have enough, Iſ. lvi. 11. but were ſtill ſeeking and gaping after more for themſelves and families, and for their own houſe or church; which, from the time of their apoſtacy, became their own houſe, in diſtinction from, and in oppoſition to, the houſe or true church of God; and of thoſe covetous biſhops, or Rome papal, are theſe and the following words to ỳ. 14. to be underſtood: that he may ſet his neſt on high; in alluſion to birds, eſpecially the eagle, which builds its neſt in high places, that it may be ſecure from any that would otherwiſe diſturb it, or take it away: ſo theſe covetous and ambitious biſhops, getting great wealth and riches, and large dominions into their hands, ſecular power and authority, as well as eccleſiaſtical; ſet themſelves up, and advanced their ſee and ſeat, not only above all other biſhops, but even above the kings and princes of the earth, above all that are called gods, 2 Theſſ. ii. 4. and by ſuch means endeavoured to gain their point, the main thing they had in view: that he may be delivered from the power of evil; that they might be ſafe and ſecure againſt all worldly power, and be out of the juriſdiction of the princes of the earth, and in no danger of being diſpoſſeſſed or cruſhed by them.

ỳ. 10. Thou haſt conſulted ſhame to thy houſe, &c.] Inſtead of bringing real honour and glory to their church, and that into the eſteem of men, by ſuch covetouſneſs, ambition and arrogance they brought it into ſhame and diſgrace, eſpecially with all good men; and which they as effectually did, as if they had ſtudied it, and as if this was the thing they had in view in all their ſchemes and meaſures: this they procured by cutting off many people; by making war with the ſaints, and killing great multitudes of them with the ſword, as the Waldenſes and Albigenſes, and many of the proteſtants by fire and faggot; and alſo by cutting off all ſuch they called heretics and ſchiſmatics, with their anathemas and excommunications; neither of which were to their honour, but to their eternal infamy: and haſt ſinned againſt thy ſoul; and expoſed it to eternal damnation; that is, they ſinned againſt the light and dictates of their own conſciences, which is an aggravation of their ſin, and might juſtly cauſe ſhame and confuſion of mind.

℣. 11. For the ſtone ſhall cry out of the wall, &c.] Of their own houſe; ſome from among themſelves, that truly feared God, ſeeing the evil practices done among them, and abhorring them, ſuch as their covetouſneſs, ambition, murders, excommunications and anathemas, ſhould cry out againſt them in their ſermons and writings; ſuch as were lively ſtones, eminent for religion and godlineſs, as Bernard, Wickliff, Huſs, and others: and the beam out of the timber ſhall anſwer it; ſuch as were of eminent note in things civil, as beams and rafters in the houſe; emperors, and governors of provinces, who obſerved the complaints of godly miniſters and people, anſwered to them, and checked the evil biſhops and clergy, and hindered them in the purſuit of their ſchemes, and ſo brought them to ſhame and confuſion. Aben Ezra obſerves, that the word ſignifies the hard place in the wood; or the harder part of it, the knotty part, or the knot in it; and which is confirmed by the uſe of the word in the Arabic language, as Hottinger [g] obſerves; and ſo may have reſpect to ſuch perſons as were raiſed up at the beginning of the reformation, who were of rough diſpoſitions, and hardy ſpirits, fit to go thro' the work they were called to; ſuch as Luther, and others, who anſwered and were correſpondent to the doctrines of thoſe before-mentioned, who preceded them: for not a beetle, as the Septuagint verſion, which breeds, and lives not in wood, and ſo repreſents heretics, as Jerom; much better, as ſome other Greek verſions, a worm; tho' rather the word may ſignify a brick, as it is uſed by the Talmudiſts [h], for one of a ſpan and an half, which anſwers well enough to a ſtone in the former clauſe; nor is it unuſual with heathen writers [i] to repreſent ſtones and timber ſpeaking, when any criminal ſilence is kept; ſee Luke xix. 40.

℣. 12. Wo to him that buildeth a town with blood, and eſtabliſheth a city by iniquity.] This is what the ſtone and beam ſhould ſay, if others were ſilent. The town and city are the church of Rome, myſtical Babylon, the great city, called ſpiritually Egypt and Sodom; the builder of this is the pope of Rome, the biſhops of it in ſucceſſion, who built it with blood: the pope of Rome received his title as head of the church from Phocas, that murdered the emperor Mauritius; the foundation of the church of Rome is the blood of the ſaints, ſhed in perſecutions and wars; hence ſhe is ſaid to be drunk with the blood of them, and to have the blood of prophets and ſaints found in her, Rev. xvii. 6. and xviii. 24. and it is eſtabliſhed by unjuſt exactions of tribute from all countries ſubject to it, and by indulgences, proceſſions, and various methods taken to extort money from the people, to ſupport its pageantry, pomp and grandeur; but there's a wo denounced againſt ſuch that are concerned herein, and which will take place in due time, nor can it be awarded, as follows:

℣. 13. Behold, is it not of the Lord of hoſts? &c.] That which follows; the judgments of God upon the bloody city, which they that labour to prevent labour in vain. So the Targum, "lo ſtrong "and mighty blows or judgments come from the "Lord of hoſts;" the mighty God, the Lord of armies, whoſe hand when ſtretched out none can turn back; he does what he pleaſes, and none can hinder him; when the decree is gone forth from him, it is in vain to attempt to ſtop it: that the people ſhall labour in the very fire, and the people ſhall weary themſelves for very vanity? words of the ſame import, and expreſſed in much the ſame language, were uſed of the deſtruction of literal Babylon by fire, and of the vain attempts of the Chaldeans in labouring and wearying themſelves to quench it, Jer. li. 58. and here of myſtical Babylon, and the vanity of the people of it, in labouring to ſupport it by their wars, for recovering the holy land from the Turks, and againſt the Waldenſes, Huſſites, and Bohemians; for notwithſtanding all their ſucceſſes, and the vaſt number of perſons ſlain by them, yet they could never prevail ſo as to root out the kingdom and intereſt of Chriſt: and their city and ſtate ſhall fall, and they will not be able to uphold it; and a conſiderable blow and ſhock it received at the time of the reformation; and this great city Babylon will be deſtroyed by fire, which its beſt friends cannot prevent; even the ten kings that have given their kingdom to the beaſt, will hate the whore, and burn her with fire; and thoſe antichriſtian kings that will continue friends to her, when they ſee her burning, will find it in vain to attempt to help her, and will ſtand afar off lamenting her caſe, Rev. xvii. 16 and xviii. 9, 10. Kimchi begins here to ſee that this ſection and paragraph does not belong to Nebuchadnezzar and the Chaldeans, but to the times of the Meſſiah; and interprets it of the vengeance of God that ſhall come upon all the nations that come along with Gog againſt Jeruſalem in the latter day; but he miſtakes: it deſigns what will come on myſtical Babylon; ſo Abarbinel owns, that from ℣. 12. what is ſaid belongs to the Roman empire, which he calls the kingdom of Edom.

℣. 14. For the earth ſhall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, &c.] Of the glory of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; of the glory of his perſon, as the Son of God, and truly God; which is eſſential to him, and underived; the ſame with his Father's, and what tranſcends the glory of all created beings; and of the glory of his office as Mediator, which itſelf is glorious and honourable: and this his glory lies in his fitneſs for it; in his faithful performance of it, and the honour given him by his Father upon it; as well as in the fulneſs of grace in him, which makes him appear glorious to his people: and who are continually giving glory to him as the Lord their righteouſneſs, by exerciſing faith on his righteouſneſs, and glorying in it; and as their only Saviour and Redeemer, by looking to him, and believing in him as ſuch; and as the only head of the church, by owning and holding to him; and as the only Mediator between God and man, by making uſe of him for that purpoſe, and not angels and ſaints; and as their prophet, by hearkening to his voice, yielding a ſubjection to his goſpel, and ſubmiſſion to his ordinances; and as their prieſt, by dealing with his blood and ſacrifice for the atonement and pardon of their ſins; and as their king, by obedience to his commands; and who will now take to himſelf his great power, and reign gloriouſly before his ſaints; the glory of his kingly office will be now ſeen and known, when this prophecy ſhall have its full accompliſhment, and which ſeems greatly intended. The knowledge of all this glory will not be a mere notional and ſpeculative one, but ſpecial and ſpiritual; an experimental knowledge accompanied with affection, approbation, confidence and appropriation: and the earth will be filled with this; that is, the inhabitants of it: this had an accompliſhment in part in the times of the apoſtles, when they were ſent into all the world to preach the goſpel to every creature, and diffuſed the ſavour of the knowledge of Chriſt every where; and had a further accompliſhment in the times of Conſtantine, when the whole Roman empire, or all the world became chriſtians; and again at the time of the reformation, when many nations, eſpecially in Europe, were freed from popiſh darkneſs by the pure light of the goſpel; but will have its final accompliſhment in the latter day; and which will bring on the deſtruction of antichriſt, and ſeems here intended; ſince this is given as a reaſon why it will be all labour in vain to attempt the prevention of it. It will be by means of the goſpel ſpreading the knowledge of Chriſt every where, that antichriſt will fall; this is the brightneſs of Chriſt's coming, with which he will be deſtroyed; hence the angel, with the everlaſting goſpel to preach to all nations, and with whoſe glory the whole earth will be lightened, is repreſented as preceding the fall of Babylon, and as the means of it; ſee 2 Theſſ. ii. 8. Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8. and xviii. 1, 2. and the great ſpread and large abundance of this knowledge communicated by the preaching of the goſpel is thus illuſtrated and exemplified, as the waters cover the ſea; expreſſing the nature of goſpel-doctrines, revealing the glory of Chriſt and his grace, which, like waters, refreſh and make fruitful; and the force and power of them, bearing down all before them, like an inundation of water when it breaks its banks; and likewiſe the depths of them, theſe being the deep things of God; and more eſpecially the general ſpread and large abundance of them, and of the knowledge conveyed by them; which will fill the earth, as the waters of the ſea fill up and cover the vaſt chaſm prepared for them; ſee Iſ. xi. 9.

Et canis, & poſtes, & marmora.—— Juvenal. Satyr. 9.

℣. 15. Wo unto him that giveth his neighbour drink, &c.] Before the full accompliſhment of the above prophecy concerning the abundance of the knowledge of the Lord in the earth, and before the utter deſtruction of antichriſt; between that and the reformation, when it had its fulfilment in part; the following practices inveighed againſt would be uſed, as we find they are, and for which the man of ſin and his followers will be puniſhed: one of which is expreſſed by a man's giving his neighbour drink; which is a commendable action, when drink is given to a perſon in want to quench his thirſt, or in ſorrowful and diſtreſſed circumſtances to refreſh and cheer him; but when this is done to intoxicate him, and draw him into uncleanneſs, it is an evil one; and which is the ſenſe of the phraſe here, as appears by the wo denounced, and by what follows; and is to be underſtood, not in a literal ſenſe, but in a figurative one; and is expreſſive of the various artful methods and alluring ways uſed by the Papiſts, eſpecially the Jeſuits, after the reformation, with the Proteſtants, to forſake their religion, and to draw them into the ſuperſtition and idolatry of the church of Rome; and which are in the New Teſtament ſignified by the wine of her fornication, with which the kings, nations and inhabitants of the earth are made drunk, Rev. xvii. 2. crying up the devotion and religion of their church, its antiquity, purity, holineſs and unity; pretending great love to the ſouls of men, that they ſeek nothing but their ſpiritual good; promiſing them great advantages, temporal and ſpiritual, worldly riches and honour, and ſure and certain ſalvation within the pale of their church, without which they ſay there is none; and by ſuch means they have intoxicated many princes, kingdoms, and multitudes of people, ſince the reformation; and have drawn them off from the profeſſion of the Proteſtant religion, and brought them back to popery again, as in Poland, Bohemia, Hungary, Germany, France, and other places; and theſe methods they are now taking in all Proteſtant countries, and in ours, and that with great ſucceſs, as is notorious, and time will more abundantly ſhew; but there is a wo lies againſt them for it: that putteſt thy bottle to him; giving him not only a glaſs or cup at a time, but a whole bottle to drink off at once, in order to inebriate him. The word is by ſome tranſlated thy gall, or thy poiſon[k]; which fitly enough expreſſes the poiſonous doctrines of the church of Rome, which men inſenſibly imbibe, infuſed in her wine of fornication, or drink in thro' the alluring and enſnaring methods taken. It properly ſignifies heat or wrath. The Targum is, "that pours it with "heat, that he may drink, and be inebriated." The Syriac verſion is, "wo to him that gives his "neighbour to drink the dregs of fury." The words may be truly rendered, adding thy wrath[l]; that is, to the alluring and enticing methods before mentioned, adding menaces, wrathful words, and furious perſecutions: and this the Papiſts do where they can; when good words and fair ſpeeches will not prevail, and they can't gain over proſelytes with flattery, deceit and lying, they threaten them with racks and tortures, with priſons and galleys, and death itſelf in various ſhapes, to force men into their communion; and which they have put in execution in many places, in Bohemia, Hungary, and in France even to this day; and this is what in the New Teſtament is called the wine of the wrath of her fornication, Rev. xiv. 8. and xviii. 3: and makeſt him drunken alſo; that thou mayeſt look on their nakedneſs; as Ham did on his father's nakedneſs, when in ſuch circumſtances: all the above methods are taken in order to intoxicate them, deprive them of the uſe of their reaſon, as is the caſe of a drunken man; and ſo bring them to believe, with an implicit faith, as the church believes; to believe things contrary to reaſon; to give into the ſpiritual whoredom and idolatry of that church, as men when drunk are eaſily drawn into uncleanneſs; to caſt off their profeſſion of the true religion, as a garment is caſt off, as men when drunk are apt to do; and particularly to reject the doctrine of juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which is the only robe to cover the nakedneſs of men, and receive the doctrine of merit and juſtification by works; in ſhort, to apoſtatize wholly from the religion they have profeſſed, and join in communion with the whore of Rome, that ſo they may look upon their apoſtacy, which is their nakedneſs, with the utmoſt pleaſure and delight.

℣. 16. Thou art filled with ſhame for glory, &c.] This is ſaid by the Lord to the man that gives his neighbour drink to intoxicate him, that he may draw him into uncleanneſs, and pleaſe himſelf with it; who, inſtead of being filled with the glory of the Lord, and the knowledge of it, as the earth is before ſaid to be, ſuch are filled with ſhameful doctrines and abominable practices, as thoſe of the church of Rome are; and inſtead of ſeeking the glory of God, and the honour of their neighbours, they are ſatiated with the ſhameful ſpectacle of their apoſtacy, they have been the inſtruments of; and yet, inſtead of taking ſhame to themſelves, as they ought to do, they glory in their ſhame; count it an honour they have been the inſtruments of bringing them into ſuch uncleanneſs and idolatry; and glut themſelves with the delightful ſight; which, in the eſteem of God, was filling themſelves with ſhame, inſtead of bringing any glory to him, to themſelves, or their neighbours; and therefore ſhould ſeverely ſmart for it: drink thou alſo; of another cup, the cup of the wine of the wrath of God; as a juſt retaliation for giving to others the wine of wrath of fornication to drink, and to intoxicate men with; which will be given to myſtical Babylon at the time ſhe comes into remembrance before God, or when the time to puniſh her is come, and to all the followers and worſhippers of the beaſt; ſee Rev. xiv. 10. and xvi. 19: and let thy foreſkin be uncovered; in retaliation for uncovering the nakedneſs of others, and looking with pleaſure on it; by which it will appear, that the men here ſpoken of, that take all the above methods to draw or force others into the communion of their church, are no other than Heathens; their religion conſiſting greatly of Gentiliſm; or what has a very great likeneſs to it; hence the Papiſts are ſometimes called Heathens and Gentiles; ſee Pſ. x. 16. Rev. xi. 2: the cup of the Lord's right-hand ſhall be turned unto thee; who, in their turn ſhall drink of it, when his right-hand, in which it is, ſhall reach it out; for there is no reſiſting the power of that; when he gives the orders to drink it, they muſt; and this cup in his right-hand is a cup of red-wine, of the wrath, fury and indignation of God, the dregs of which theſe wicked men muſt wring out, and drink up; ſee Pſ. lxxv. 8. It is no unuſual thing in ſcripture for the wrath, vengeance and judgments of God to be repreſented by a cup, as in Iſ. li. 17. Jer. xxv. 15, 16, 17: and ſhameful ſpewing ſhall be on thy glory; ſignifying, that they ſhould be like a man intoxicated with wine, that vomits it up again; and which, falling on his fine cloaths, ſpoils the glory of them: ſo when this cup of wrath and vengeance ſhould be given unto them, and they be made to drink of it, they ſhould be ſo full of it, that all their glory ſhould be covered with ſhame; or all their glorious things ſhould be ſpoiled, and they deprived of all their riches and honours, their titles and grandeur; the magnificence of their temples, altars, idols and veſtments, &c.

℣. 17. For the violence of Lebanon ſhall cover thee, &c.] Lebanon was a mountain on the borders of the land of Iſrael, from whence cedar-wood was brought, of which the temple was built, and for that reaſon is ſometimes ſo called, as in Zech. xi. 1. and ſo the Targum and Jarchi interpret it, “the violence of the houſe of the ſanctuary ſhall cover thee;” and this was a type of the church of Chriſt, the violence of which is that which is offered to it, and which it ſuffers; and deſigns all the injuries, oppreſſions and perſecutions of it by the Papiſts; who ſhall be ſurrounded with the judgments of God, and covered with his wrath and vengeance for the violence done to his people, as a man is covered with a garment: or elſe the ſenſe is, that the ſame, or a like judgment ſhould come upon them, as did on Lebanon, or the material temple of Jeruſalem, which with great force and violence deſtroyed it; as that was conſumed by fire for the ſins of the Jews in rejecting Chriſt and perſecuting his people; ſo ſhall Rome be burnt with fire for the oppoſition of the inhabitants of it to Chriſt, and the injuries they have done to his church and people: and the ſpoil of beaſts which made them afraid; or, the ſpoil of the beaſts ſhall cover thee which made them afraid; we read of two beaſts, one riſing out of the ſea, and the other out of the earth; and both deſign the pope of Rome in different capacities, as conſidered in his ſecular and eccleſiaſtical power; and the ſpoil he has made of thoſe that oppoſe him, the calamities of fire and ſword he has brought upon them, are what have greatly terrified the ſheep of Chriſt; but for all the ſpoil and havock he has made, the judgments of God ſhall come upon him on all ſides, and utterly deſtroy him; the beaſt and falſe prophet ſhall be caſt into the lake of fire and brimſtone; ſee Rev. xiii. 1, 11. and xvii. 8. and xix. 20: becauſe of mens blood, and for the violence of the land, of the city, and of all that dwell therein; the ſame that is ſaid in ℣. 8. and here repeated, as reſpecting another body of men, guilty of the ſame or like crimes: there Rome pagan, concerned in the crucifixion of Chriſt, the deſolation of the land of Judea, and city of Jeruſalem, and their inhabitants, as well as in perſecuting the ſaints, the citizens of the church of God; here Rome papal, where our Lord has been crucified again, and his blood, and the efficacy of it, ſet at nought; the blood of the ſaints and martyrs of Jeſus ſhed in great abundance, and violent perſecutions of the churches of Chriſt, and the members of them; for all which the above judgments ſhall come upon them; ſee Rev. xi. 8. and xviii. 24.

℣. 18. What profiteth the graven image, that the maker thereof hath graven it, &c.] The graven images the church of Rome enjoins the worſhip of; the images of the Trinity, of Chriſt, of the Virgin Mary, of angels and ſaints departed, and which are ſtill continued ſince the reformation; but of what profit and advantage are they? they may be profitable to the graver, who is paid for graving them; and the metal or matters of which they are made, if ſold, and converted to another uſe, may turn to account; but as deities, and worſhipped as ſuch, they are of no profit to them that worſhip them; they can't hear their prayers, nor anſwer them; can't beſtow any favours on them, and deliver them out of any diſtreſs; and particularly can't ſave them from the judgments before denounced: the molten image, and a teacher of lies; nor is a molten image any ways profitable, which is made of liquid matter, gold or ſilver melted and poured into a mould, from whence it receives its form: it may be profitable to the founder, and the metal to the owner, if put to another uſe; but as a god is of no ſervice; and both the graven and molten image, the one and the other, each of them is a teacher of lies, and ſo unprofitable: if they are laymens books, as they are ſaid to be, they don't teach them truth; they don't teach them what God is, in his nature and perfections; what Chriſt is in his perſon and offices; what angels are, who are incorporeal; nor the ſaints, they neither deſcribe the ſhape and features of their body, nor expreſs their characters, minds or manners; they teach men to believe lies, and to worſhip falſe deities, as they are. So the Targum renders it, a falſe deity; which impoſes on men, and therefore cannot profit them: or this may be underſtood of an idolatrous prieſt, as Aben Ezra; as the idol itſelf cannot profit, ſo neither can the prieſt that teaches men ſuch lies as to worſhip the idol, and put truſt in it: that the maker of his work truſteth therein, to make dumb idols? or, whilſt making dumb idols [m]; which is great ſtupidity indeed! that whilſt a man is graving an image, or caſting an idol, which are lifeleſs, ſenſeleſs things, that can neither move nor ſpeak, yea are his workmanſhip, yet puts his truſt and confidence in them, that they can do him ſervice he needs, help him in diſtreſs, and ſave him out of his troubles; what profit can be expected from theſe, tho' ever ſo nicely framed, when he conſiders they are of his own framing; and that they are idols which are nothing in the world, as the word [n] here uſed ſignifies; and dumb ones, which can give no anſwer to the requeſts of their votaries? The Targum is, "idols in whom there is no profit."

℣. 19. Wo to him that ſaith to the wood, awake, &c.] That ſaith to a wooden image, let him go by what name he will; ſaint ſuch an one, or ſuch an one; awake, ariſe, exert thyſelf on our behalf; deliver us from preſent danger; ſave us from our enemies; or pray and intercede for us, that we may be delivered and ſaved, as the Papiſts do; addreſſing a block of wood as they would God himſelf, or as his people do, Pſ. xliv. 23. This muſt be very diſpleaſing and deteſtable to God, and therefore a wo is threatened to ſuch idol-worſhippers: who alſo ſay to the dumb ſtone, ariſe; to the idol of ſtone, as the Targum; the ſtone-ſtatue, an image made of ſtone, ſuch as the Papiſts have, even of wood, and of ſtone, as well as of gold, and ſilver, and braſs, Rev. ix. 20. and ſo ſtupid as to ſay to ſuch ſtocks and ſtones, ariſe, ſtand up, and help us: it ſhall teach; the ſtone itſelf would teach them better, would they but conſider what it is; look upon it, and handle it, when they would find it to be a mere ſtone, and no deity: or, ſhall it teach? ſo Jarchi, Kimchi, and Ben Melech; no, it cannot teach any true doctrine, or direct to right worſhip; it can't teach men their duty, or where they may have help; it is a dumb idol; it can't teach men the nature of God, and the knowledge of him; or inſtruct in his mind and will; or inform of things ſecret or future: it is laid over with gold, and ſilver; it is made of ſtone, and covered with gold and ſilver; how ſhould it teach? and there is no breath at all in the midſt of it; or, no ſpirit [o]; ſo far from having the ſpirit of divinity in it, or the ſpirit of God, that it has not the ſpirit of a man in it, nor even the ſpirit of a brute creature; it has not ſo much as animal breath, and ſo no life, motion, or activity in it; and therefore muſt be quite unprofitable to the worſhipper of it; incapable of teaching thoſe who apply to it; and they muſt be ſtupid that do it, and moſt righteouſly bring themſelves under the diſpleaſure and wrath of God, and expoſe themſelves to the wo here denounced againſt ſuch perſons.

℣. 20. But the Lord is in his holy temple, &c.] Not in graven and molten images; not in idols of wood and ſtone, covered with gold and ſilver; but in heaven, the habitation of his holineſs, the place of his reſidence, where he is ſeen and worſhipped by the holy angels and glorified ſaints; and from whence he ſurveys all the children of men, and their actions; obſerves the folly and ſtupidity of idol-worſhippers; and hears and anſwers the prayers of his own people: or this intends his church, which is his temple, ſanctified by him, and ſet apart for his ſervice, worſhip and glory: here he grants his gracious preſence to thoſe who worſhip him in ſpirit and in truth; and here he will appear as king of ſaints, in a moſt glorious manner, when theſe ſeveral woes beforementioned have taken place; as on Rome pagan already, and in part on Rome papal at the reformation, ſo completely on it, and all worſhippers of images hereafter. The word היכל here uſed, ſignifies, that part of the temple, called the holy place, as diſtinct from the holy of holies; which was the proper ſeat of the divine majeſty, and a figure of heaven, as the holy place was of the church; and ſo he was, as it were, removed from the one to the other; hence the more obſervable and remarkable, and the greater reaſon for what follows; and this ſerves to illuſtrate and confirm the ſenſe given: let all the earth keep ſilence before him; ſtand in awe of him, and reverence him; be ſubject to him, and ſilently adore him; as all the inhabitants of the earth will, when the above enemies of his are entirely removed out of it; there will be no more clamours and objections againſt the chriſtian religion by Jews and Mahometans, on account of image-worſhip, which will be no more; no more wars, or rumours of wars, but a profound peace every where; no more perſecutions of the ſaints; no more will be heard the cry of violence and oppreſſion, all their enemies being deſtroyed; no more repinings and murmurings among the people of God, thro' impatience and unbelief, all afflictions being at an end; there will be an entire ſilence of this kind every where; only the voice of the goſpel, of prayer, praiſe and thankſgiving, will be heard. This is not the caſe now, nor was there ever as yet ſuch a time on earth; this ſhows that the prophecy regards time to come.

CHAP. III.

THE title of this chapter is a prayer of Habakkuk the prophet, compoſed after the manner of a Pſalm of David, and directed to the chief ſinger, ℣. 1, 19. The occaſion of it is expreſſed, ℣. 2. in which the prophet declares his concern for the work of the Lord, and the promotion of the kingdom and intereſt of Chriſt; and obſerves the various ſteps that were, or would be taken, for the advancement of it; for which he prays, and ſuggeſts that theſe would be after the manner of the Lord's dealing with the people of Iſrael, and ſettling them in the land of Canaan, ℣. 3—15. and there being ſeveral things awful in this account, both with reſpect to the judgments of God on his enemies, and the conflicts and trials of his own people, it greatly affected the mind of the prophet, ℣. 16. and yet, in the view of the worſt, he expreſſes his ſtrong faith in the Lord, as to better times and things, that would moſt aſſuredly come, ℣. 17, 18, 19.

℣. 1. A prayer of Habakkuk the prophet upon Sigionoth.] Of the name, character, and office of the prophet, ſee the note on ch. i. 1. This chapter is entitled a prayer of his, a ſupplicatory one, put up in an humble and earneſt manner, and in the exerciſe of faith, and under the influence of a ſpirit of prophecy. He before had a viſion of the coming of Chriſt, and of what enemies would riſe up, and obſtruct his kingdom and intereſt in the world; and here he prays that theſe obſtructions might be removed, and that the kingdom of Chriſt, in its full extent and glory, might take place in the world; and is a prayer of faith, as he prayed it might be, he believed it would be; and left this prayer behind him, for the uſe and inſtruction of the church in all ages, until the whole ſhould be accompliſhed. It ſeems to be compoſed after the manner of the Pſalms of David, to make it the more pleaſant and agreeable; and that it might be the more regarded, and be more fitted for the public uſe and ſervice of the ſanctuary: this appears from the ſtile of it, which is poetical, lofty and ſublime; from the frequent uſe of the word Selah, peculiar to the pſalms of David, ℣. 3, 9, 13. and from the direction of it to the chief ſinger on the ſtringed inſtruments, ℣. 19. and from the phraſe upon, or according to Sigionoth here, which the Septuagint verſion renders with a ſong; and ſo the Arabic verſion, after the manner of a ſong; for this word ſeems to be the plural of Shiggaion, the title of the ſeventh pſalm; which was either the name, title, or firſt word of ſome ſong or ſongs, according to which this was to be ſung; or the name of the tune with which it was to be ſung; or of the inſtrument on which it was to be ſung: it very probably deſigns, and may be called, an erratic, or wandring ſong, becauſe of the variableneſs of its metre, and of its tune. The Vulgate Latin verſion wrongly interprets it, for ignorances; as if this was a prayer of the prophet's for the pardon of ſins of error and ignorance committed by himſelf, or by others, or both; which ſenſe is favoured by the Targum, “a prayer which Habakkuk the “prophet prayed, when it was revealed unto him “concerning the length (of time) which (God) “gave to the wicked; that if they would return “to the law with a perfect heart, they ſhould be “forgiven all the ſins which they had committed “before him as ignorance:” but there does not appear throughout the whole prayer one ſingle petition for the pardon of any ſin at all.

℣. 2. O Lord, I have heard thy ſpeech, and was afraid, &c.] Or, thy hearing [p]; which the Lord had cauſed to be heard from, and of himſelf; the report that had been made to him, and other prophets before him, particularly Iſaiah, who ſays, who hath believed our report? Iſ. liii. 1. where the ſame phraſe is uſed as here; tho' it ſeems here not ſo much to regard the evangelical part of that report, concerning the coming of Chriſt, his ſufferings and death, in order to obtain redemption and ſalvation for his people; for this would have been, and was matter of joy, and not of fear and conſternation: but the truth is this, the Lord in the preceding ſpeech, being a report he made to the prophet concerning the Meſſiah, had ſignified that Chriſt would have many enemies from the Jews, and from the Gentiles, from Rome pagan, and Rome papal; that the church of Chriſt would meet with great afflictions and perſecutions, and be attended with many conflicts, temptations and difficulties; that the intereſt of the Redeemer would be ſometimes very low, and the work of the Lord at a ſtand in the world, yea ſeemingly dead, quite loſt and gone; this is what cauſed the fear and diſtreſs in the prophet's mind, and gave him that pain and uneaſineſs: and hence the following petition, O Lord, revive thy work in the midſt of the years; which refers not to the deliverance from the Babyloniſh captivity, which was fixed to a term of years, when, and not before, not in the midſt of them it would be wrought; but to the great work of the Lord in the times of the goſpel. There is a double reading of theſe words in the Septuagint verſion of them, and both very different from the Hebrew text. The one is, in the midſt of two lives thou ſhalt be known; the life that now is, and that which is to come. The other, by a change of the accent, is, in the midſt of two animals thou ſhalt be known; ſo the Arabic verſion. Theodoret makes mention of both, and inclines to the former; “ſome (he ſays) by two animals un“derſtand angels and men; ſome the incorporeal “powers near the divine glory, the cherubim and “ſeraphim; others the Jews and Babylonians; but “to me it ſeems, that the prophet does not ſay “animals, but lives, the preſent and future, in “the midſt of which he was a juſt judge:” but the latter reading is followed by many of the ancients, whoſe different ſenſes are given by Jerom on the place; ſome interpreting them of the Son and Spirit, by whom the Father is made known; others of the two cherubim in Exodus, and of the two ſeraphim in Iſaiah; and there were ſome who underſtood them of the two Teſtaments, the Old and New, in the midſt of which the Lord may be known; and others of Chriſt's being crucified between two thieves, by which he might be known: but beſides theſe different ſentiments, many of the ancients concluded from hence, that Chriſt lay in the manger between two animals, the ox and the aſs, and to which they refer in their ancient hymns [q]; but tho' this is a wrong verſion of the text, and a wrong ſenſe which is put upon it, together with Iſ. i. 3. yet, as Burkius obſerves, there is in this miſtake a certain and ancient truth, that the text of Habakkuk belongs to the work of God in Chriſt, and eſpecially to the nativity of our Lord Jeſus; and ſo ſome later writers apply this to the wonderful work of the incarnation of Chriſt, that new, unheard-of, and amazing thing the Lord would work in the earth; the promiſe of which being delayed, might ſeem to be dead; and therefore it is intreated it might be revived, and the performance of it haſtened; and others to the work of redemption by Chriſt, which the Father gave him to do, and he promiſed to come and perform; but being deferred, the Old Teſtament-ſaints were impatient of it. Cocceius and Van Till reſtrain it to the reſurrection of Chriſt from the dead, his coming being propheſied of before; and render the words, O Lord, thy work is his life [r], in the midſt of the years; the reſurrection of Chriſt from the dead, or the quickening of him is propheſied of in many places as a work that would be done, and in which the hope and expectation of the ſaints were placed; this being a work of great importance both to Chriſt, his exaltation and glory, and to his people; their quickening together with him; their regeneration, or paſſing from death to life; their juſtification of life, and reſurrection from the dead, depending upon it; and this is the Lord's work, and owing to the exceeding greatneſs of his power, and is frequently aſcribed to God the Father, who raiſed Chriſt from the dead, and gave him glory: and this was in the midſt of the years, or between the years of the Old and of the New Teſtament; the former was the year of God's long-ſuffering and forbearance, the time when the Jewiſh church like children were under governors and tutors, until the time appointed of the Father; the latter is the acceptable year of the Lord, and the year of the redeemed; and between theſe two years, at the end of the one, and the beginning of the other, the Meſſiah came, was cut off or died, and was quickened and raiſed again: but I ſhould chuſe rather to underſtand this more generally of the work of the Lord in the chriſtian churches throughout the whole goſpel-diſpenſation, or at leaſt in ſome certain periods of it. The church itſelf is the work of the hands of the Lord, Iſ. xlv. 11. which ſometimes has ſeemed to have been in a very dead and lifeleſs ſtate and condition, as in the dark times of popery; and tho' there was a reviving of it upon the reformation, yet there has been a decline ſince; and the Sardian church-ſtate, in which we now are, is deſcribed as having a name, that it lives, and yet is dead; and the intereſt of religion, and the church of Chriſt will be lower ſtill, when the witneſſes are ſlain, and their dead bodies lie unburied, before the Spirit of the Lord enters into them, and revives them: now the prophet having in view theſe ſeveral intervals, and eſpecially the laſt, prays for a reviving of the intereſt and church of Chriſt, and the work of the Lord in it; and which will be done when Chriſt will come in a ſpiritual manner, and deſtroy antichriſt; when the Spirit will be poured down plentifully from on high; when the goſpel will be purely and powerfully preached all over the world; when the ordinances of it will be adminiſtred as at the beginning; when multitudes of churches will be raiſed and formed, the Jews will be converted, and the fulneſs of the Gentiles brought in: this will be a reviving time indeed! and there never will be a thorough one till this time comes; and this will be in the midſt of the years; between the years of the reign of antichriſt, the 1260 days or years of it, which will now expire, and the thouſand years of Chriſt's perſonal reign on earth; between theſe two periods will be this reviving time or ſpiritual reign of Chriſt [s]. The words may to good purpoſe be applied to the work of grace in the hearts of true believers in Chriſt, which is the Lord's work, and his only; not men, not miniſters, not angels, but Jehovah only is the author and finiſher of it. This ſometimes ſeems as it were to be dead, when the graces of the ſpirit are not in exerciſe; when ſaints are in dead and lifeleſs frames of ſoul; when they are backward to ſpiritual and religious exerciſes; when the world, and the things of it have got power over them, and they are unconcerned for the things of Chriſt, the honour of his name, and the good of their own ſouls; when they are under the power of ſome ſin, and are carried captive by it, as was the caſe of David, Peter, and others: now this work is revived, when the graces of the Spirit are called forth again into lively exerciſe; when the affections go out ſtrongly after divine objects and things; when the thoughts of the mind, and the meditations of the heart are on ſpiritual ſubjects; when the talk and converſation turns chiefly on things of a religious and heavenly nature; when there is a forwardneſs to ſpiritual exerciſes, a ſtirring up of themſelves and others to them, and a continuance in them; when there is a viſible growing in grace, and a fruitfulneſs in every good work: this is to be prayed for, and is from the Lord; and is owing to his ſetting his hand a ſecond time to the work; to his being as the dew to his people; to Chriſt the ſun of righteouſneſs ariſing on them, with healing in his wings; and to the ſouth-wind of the ſpirit blowing upon them, and cauſing their ſpices to flow out; and this is deſirable in the midſt of their years, before the years come on in which they have no pleaſure, or before they go hence, and be no more: in the midſt of the years make known; which Cocceius and Van Till reſtrain to the notification of Chriſt's reſurrection from the dead by the miniſtry of the goſpel, for the benefit of the Lord's people, both Jews and Gentiles; as being a matter of great conſequence to them, and for the confirmation of the chriſtian religion, as it undoubtedly was: but it ſeems better to underſtand it in a more general ſenſe, that God would make known more of himſelf, as the covenant-God and Father of his people, of his mind and will, of his love, grace and mercy in Chriſt; that he would make known more of Chriſt, of his perſon, offices and grace; that he would make known more clearly the work of his Spirit and grace upon their hearts, and diſplay his power, and the efficacy of his grace, in reviving it, and carrying it on; that he would make known more largely his covenant and promiſes, his truth and faithfulneſs in the performance of them; that he would grant a larger meaſure of knowledge of all divine things of the goſpel, and the truths of it; ſuch as is promiſed, and is expected will be in the latter day, when the earth ſhall be every where filled with the knowledge of the Lord, ch. ii. 14: in wrath remember mercy; the above interpreters refer this to the time of God's wrath and vengeance upon the Jewiſh nation for their rejection of the Meſſiah; and which the prophet does not pray might be averted, but that mercy might be remembered to his own people among them, as was; who had the goſpel firſt preached to them, and were called by grace and ſaved; and who had an opportunity given them of eſcaping from Jeruſalem, before the deſtruction of that city: but it may be more agreeable to interpret this of the ſtate of the churches of Chriſt and true believers; who, when under affliction and diſtreſs, or in temptation and deſertion, are ready to conclude that God is dealing with them in wrath; and whom the prophet perſonates, and by him they are taught to pray, that at ſuch ſeaſons God would remember his covenant, his promiſes, his loving-kindneſs and tender mercies, the favour he bears to his own people, and ſmile on them again, and comfort their ſouls.

[s] The Targum interprets theſe years of the time in which God will renew the world.

ỳ. 3. God came from Teman, &c.] Or, may God come from Teman [t]; ſince it is part of the prayer of Habakkuk: or, as from Teman [u]; as he of old came from thence, a city in the land of Edom, Jer. xlix. 7. Amos i. 12. it was five miles from Petra in Idumea, where was mount Seir, from whence the Lord aroſe, and ſhone forth from mount Paran at the giving of the law, Deut. xxxiii. 2. to which the alluſion is here. So the Targum, "at the "giving of the law to his people, God was re-"vealed from the ſouth;" for ſo Teman ſignifies. The prophet to encourage his own faith, and the faith of others, takes notice in this and the following verſes, of the inſtances of the grace, goodneſs, and power of God to his people Iſrael, in appearing to them at mount Sinai, going before them in the wilderneſs, deſtroying their enemies, caſting them out before them, and introducing them into the land of Canaan, and ſettling them there; ſuggeſting, that he that had done theſe great and wonderful things, would ſupport and maintain, carry on and promote, his own kingdom and intereſt in the world; in order to which the prophet prays to God the Father for the coming of his Son, either in the fleſh, that the incarnate God would appear in the world, and ſet up his kingdom in it; or in prayer, he propheſies of it, and expreſſes his faith in it: God cometh from the ſouth; or, he ſhall come [w], as it may be rendered: he knew from the prophecy of Micah, that he that was to be ruler in Iſrael was to come from Bethlehem, Mic. v. 2. which lay to the ſouth of Jeruſalem; and from hence he expected him, and believed he would come, and prayed for it as being moſt deſirable and welcome: or elſe this reſpects the coming of the Meſſiah, in the miniſtration of the word to Jews and Gentiles, after his reſurrection from the dead, and aſcenſion to heaven, and the pouring forth of his Spirit on the day of Pentecoſt; that as the Lord came from the places here mentioned, when he gave the law on mount Sinai, ſo he would ſend forth his goſpel out of Zion and Jeruſalem, and go forth himſelf along with it, riding in his glory, and in his majeſty, conquering and to conquer; cauſing his miniſters to triumph in him, and by them ſubdue multitudes of ſouls to him, both in Judea, and in the Gentile world, whereby his kingdom might appear in it: and the holy one from mount Paran; or, even the holy one [x]; that came or ſhined forth from mount Paran formerly; for it was Chriſt then that appeared on mount Sinai, and gave to Moſes the lively oracles of God; ſee Pſ. lxviii. 17, 18. Acts vii. 38. he, as he is truly God, God manifeſt in the fleſh, Immanuel God with us; ſo he is the holy one of God, infinitely and eſſentially holy, as a divine perſon; and holy, and harmleſs, and without ſin in his human nature and life; and is the ſanctifier and ſanctification of his people. Mount Paran was ſituated to the ſouth of the land of Canaan, as well as Teman, which ſo ſignifies, as before obſerved. It is called by Ptolemy, Pomponius Mela, and others, Strobilus, from its likeneſs to a pine-apple. It had its name from the city Paran, which lay between Egypt and Arabia [y]; ſee 1 Kings xi. 18. which Jerom ſays [z], was three days journey from Aila to the eaſt; mention is made of Ail or El-paran in Gen. xiv. 6. near to which was the wilderneſs of Paran, frequently ſpoken of in ſcripture, Gen. xxi. 21. Numb. x. 12. and xiii. 3, 26. 1 Sam. xxv. 1. the ſame which Joſephus [a] calls the valley or plain of Pharan, where Simon of Geraſa made caves and dens, and hid the treaſure he plundered from the people: according to Adrichomius [b], it was a moſt dreadful, barren deſert, where nothing grew, or was to be had, thro' which the children of Iſrael journied; and was ſometimes taken for the firſt part of the deſert of Arabia near mount Sinai, and ſometimes for the laſt part of it towards the land of promiſe; ſometimes it was called the deſert of Sin, and ſometimes the deſert of Sinai, from that mountain; but its moſt general name was that of Paran, and contained eleven days journey from mount Sinai to Cadeſh-barnea. Mount Paran (he ſays [c]) is thick and ſhady, near to mount Sinai, and even contiguous, as it ſhould ſeem to be from Deut. xxxiii. 2. to which the reference is here. So Hillerus [d] interprets it, full of boughs, or branches; or elſe he would have it to ſignify the corner of Aran, the ſon of Diſhan, a ſon of Seir the Horite, who inhabited this country; ſee Gen. xxxvi. 20, 28. and both Teman and Paran being to the ſouth, may point to the place of the Redeemer, by whom the great work was to be done, referred unto. Jerom ſays he heard an Hebrew man diſcourſe on this paſſage, thus, "that Bethlehem lies to the ſouth, where the Lord and Saviour was born: and that he it is of whom it is here ſaid, the Lord ſhall come from the ſouth; that is, ſhall be born in Bethlehem, and thence ariſe; and becauſe he who is born in Bethlehem, formerly gave the law on mount Sinai; he is the holy one that came from mount Paran; ſeeing Paran is a place near to mount Sinai; and the word Selah ſignifies always; and the ſenſe is, he who is born in Bethlehem, and who on mount Sinai, that is, on mount Paran, gave the law, always is the author, and giver of all bleſſings paſt, preſent, and to come." The word Selah ſtands here in the middle of the verſe. It is interpreted by ſeveral of the Jewiſh writers, for ever, as by the fore-mentioned Hebrew; and by others as an affirmation, and render it, verily, truly, as anſwering to Amen. Some underſtand it as a pauſe or full ſtop, denoting attention to ſomething ſaid that is remarkable; and others take it to be a note, directing the finger to the elevation of his voice, where it ſtands; and ſo it is no other than a muſical note; hence the Septuagint render it, διαψαλμα. A very learned man [e] has wrote a diſſertation upon it, ſhewing that it is one of the names of God; and uſed differently, as the ſenſe requires, either in the vocative caſe, as Selah, that is, O God; or in the other caſes, of God, to God, &c. his glory covered the heavens; that is, the glory of God, the holy one, when he came, or ſhould come: this was true of him when he deſcended on mount Sinai, and his glory abode upon it; and the ſight of this glory was like devouring fire; and the elders ſaw the God of Iſrael, under whoſe feet was as a paved work of ſapphire, and as the body of heaven in its clearneſs; yea, ſo great as to make the light and glory of the celeſtial bodies uſeleſs, even to cover and hide the ſhining of them; ſee Exod. xxiv. 10, 16, 17. and may reſpect the glorious appearances at the birth of Chriſt, when the heavenly hoſt deſcended, and ſung glory to God in the higheſt, and when the glory of the Lord ſhone round about the ſhepherds, Luke ii. ix. 14. and at his baptiſm, when the heavens were opened, the Father's voice was heard, and the Spirit deſcended on Chriſt, as a dove; and at his transfiguration, when his face ſhone as the ſun; and Moſes and Elias appeared in glorious forms, and a bright cloud overſhadowed them, and a voice was heard from the excellent glory, Matt. iii. 16, 17. and xvii. 2, 3, 4, 5. 2 Pet. i. 19. or rather it may be, this may reſpect Chriſt as the brightneſs of his Father's glory, and the glory of God in the face of Chriſt, as ſet forth in the light of the glorious goſpel of Chriſt, when carried throughout the world by his apoſtles; whereby his glory was ſo ſpread in it, that the heavens were covered with it, and declared it; yea, it was ſet above the heavens, and the name of the Lord became excellent in all the earth, as follows; ſee Pſ. xix. 1—4. and viii. 1: and the earth was full of his praiſe; with the words of his praiſe, as the Targum; ſo the fame of the mighty things done by the Lord in Egypt, at the Red-ſea, and in the wilderneſs, for his people, reached the nations of the world, and eſpecially thoſe of the land of Canaan, and ſtruck them with awe and dread, Joſh. ii. 9, 10. and the fame of Chriſt, his miracles and doctrines, went thro' the land of Iſrael, and all Syria; and multitudes glorified God, and praiſed him for what was done by him, Matt. iv. 23, 24. and xv. 31. and more eſpecially the earth was filled with his glory and praiſe, when his goſpel was carried into all the parts of it by his apoſtles; which occaſioned univerſal joy to all ſenſible ſinners, and filled their hearts and mouths with praiſe to God for ſuch a Saviour, and for ſuch bleſſings of grace and good things that came by him: or, the earth was full of his light [f]; of the light of his goſpel, and of the knowledge of himſelf by it.

℣. 4. And his brightneſs was as the light, &c.] Of fire, of devouring fire on the top of the mount, to which the ſight of his glory was like, Exod. xxiv. 16. to which Kimchi refers it. Aben Ezra thinks the pillar of fire is intended, in which the Lord went before his people in the wilderneſs, Exod. xiii. 21, 22. or as the light and ſplendor of Bereſhith, as the Targum, of that primogenial light which was produced on the firſt day of the creation; or as the light of the ſeven days of the creation, as Jarchi; ſee Iſ. xxx. 26. or rather as the light of the ſun ſhining in its full ſtrength, Chriſt being the light of the world, and the ſun of righteouſneſs; and ſo may deſcribe him as the brightneſs of his Father's glory; or his glory, as the only begotten of the Father, ſeen by his own diſciples in the days of his fleſh, ſhining thro' his works and miracles; or as exhibited in the light of his glorious goſpel, which is the great light that ſhined on men; and in, and by which, they that ſat in darkneſs ſaw light, and who were darkneſs itſelf were made light in the Lord: what a glory, luſtre, brightneſs, and light did the goſpel ſpread in the world at the firſt publication of it! he had horns coming out of his hand; which the Jewiſh interpreters underſtand of Moſes having horns or beams of light and glory from the hand and power of God, when he converſed with him on the mount, and the ſkin of his face ſhone, where the ſame word is uſed as here, Exod. xxxiv. 29, 35. tho' ſome of them interpret it of the two tables of the law, which came from the hand of the Lord, edged with glory and brightneſs, and looked like fire; hence called a fiery law, Deut. xxxiii. 2. The words may be rendered, as in the margin, he had beams coming out of his ſide [g]; and be underſtood of Chriſt, who has beams and rays of glory on all ſides of him, all around him; he is all glory [h]; he is crowned with glory and honour, and highly exalted at his Father's right-hand, above all principalities and powers: and horns being an emblem of power and might, authority and dominion, the phraſe may denote, that all power and authority in heaven and in earth are given to him as Mediator, and exerciſed by him. Van Till obſerves, that the word horns is a military term, and is uſed for the wings of armies, the right and left; and as Chriſt is here deſcribed as a general of an army, marching forth in a warlike manner; theſe may denote the armies or companies under him, at his hand, and under his command, accoutred, and ready to obey his orders; and particularly may have reſpect to the diviſion made among the apoſtles, whom he ſent forth to ſubdue men to him; committing the goſpel of the circumciſion to Peter, and of the uncircumciſion to Paul, Gal. ii. 7, 8. whoſe miniſtrations were made ſucceſsful to the pulling down of the ſtrong holds of ſin and ſatan, and reducing many to the obedience of Chriſt: and there was the hiding of his power; that is, in his hand; there his power, which before was hidden, was made manifeſt; and yet ſo little diſplayed, in compariſon of what it is in itſelf, that it may be rather ſaid to be hid than revealed; or there, in his hand, lies his power, with which he hides and covers his people in the day of battel; eſpecially his miniſtring ſervants, whom he holds in his right-hand, and preſerves them amidſt a thouſand dangers and difficulties, and keeps them for further uſefulneſs; ſee Acts xviii. 10. Rev. ii. 1. The Targum is, "ſparks "went out from the chariot of his glory; there "he revealed his majeſty, which was hid from the "children of men, with ſublime power." Aben Ezra thinks, the ark is meant by the hiding of his power, called the ark of his ſtrength, Pſ. cxxxii. 8.

ỷ. 5. Before him went the peſtilence, &c.] Either in the land of Egypt, when he marched thro' that, and ſlew all their firſt-born, Pſ. lxxviii. 50, 51. or rather, which he ſent before him, and Iſrael his people among the nations of the land of Canaan, with other diſeaſes and judgments, and deſtroyed them to make way for his people, which may be here alluded to, Exod. xxiii. 27, 28. and may point at the judgments of God, and thoſe peſtilential diſeaſes which ſeized upon the perſecutors of the chriſtians, both among the Jews, as Herod, Acts xii. 23. and among the Gentiles, as many of the Roman emperors, who died violent and grievous deaths; and particularly it may regard the peſtilence, famine, and other ſore judgments preceding the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the inhabitants of it, for their rejection and crucifixion of the Meſſiah: and burning coals went forth at his feet; which ſome underſtand of hail-ſtones mingled with fire, to which the alluſion may be, being one of the plagues of Egypt, Exod. ix. 23, 24. Some interpret it of hot diſeaſes, burning fevers, ſo Kimchi; which are at the command of God, and ſent forth by him when he pleaſes, to do his will. The ancient fathers expound all this of the deſtruction of death, and the devil, and his principalities by Chriſt upon the croſs; and the Targum is, "from before him was ſent forth the "angel of death, and his word went forth in a "flame of fire;" but this ſeems to have reſpect to the burning of the city and temple of Jeruſalem, which was done by the Romans as inſtruments, but according to the direction, order and will of Chriſt, Matt. xxii. 7. ſee Pſ. xviii. 12, 13.

ỷ. 6. He ſtood and meaſured the earth, &c.] This alludes to the ark of the Lord, the ſymbol of his preſence, ſtanding and abiding at Gilgal for the ſpace of fourteen years, whilſt the land of Canaan was ſubdued by Joſhua; and then meaſured out by him, and divided by lot, as an inheritance to the children of Iſrael, according to the direction and appointment of the Lord, Joſh. xiii. &c. here it may have reſpect to the miſſion of the apoſtles into the ſeveral parts of the world, and the diſtribution of it among them; ſome being ſent into one part, and ſome into another, called their particular line and meaſure, 2 Cor. x. 14, 15, 16. ſome into India, others into Ethiopia; ſome into Aſia, and others into Europe; by which means the goſpel was preached every where, and great part of the world became chriſtians: he beheld, and drove aſunder the nations; with a look of his he made them give way; he drove the Canaanites out of the land, and ſeparated them from one another, and ſcattered them about, to make room for his people Iſrael, Pſ. lxxviii. 55: and the everlaſting mountains were ſcattered; or, were broken [l]; the perpetual hills did bow; the mountains and hills that were from the beginning of the creation, that were ſettled upon their baſes, and never moved; now trembled, ſhook and bowed, as Sinai, and others did, at the preſence of the God of Iſrael; ſee Judg. v. 5. Pſ. lxviii. 8, 16. or rather figuratively, theſe may deſign the kingdoms and ſtates, kings and princes, greater and leſſer, belonging to the land of Canaan, which were ſhaken, moved, and taken by the Iſraelites, and brought into ſubjection to them; and in like manner kings and kingdoms, comparable to mountains and hills, thro' the preaching of the goſpel, and the power of Chriſt attending it, were brought to yield unto him, at the downfal of paganiſm in the Roman empire: this is ſignified by every mountain and iſland being moved out of their places, and kings and great men calling to the rocks and mountains to fall on them, and hide them from the wrath of the Lamb, Rev. vi. 14—17: his ways are everlaſting; and what he has done in ages paſt, he can do again; his power, his wiſdom, and his grace are unchangeably the ſame; and all he does in time, every ſtep he takes, is according to his counſels, purpoſes and decrees in eternity, which infallibly come to paſs; nor can he be hindred and fruſtrated in the execution of them; as he has begun, he'll go on; as he has ſet up his kingdom in the world, he'll ſupport and maintain it; and tho' there are many obſtructions and remoras in the way of it, he'll go on, and remove them, until he has thoroughly eſtabliſhed it, and brought it to its higheſt glory, which he has deſigned; all mountains and hills are nothing before him; he can ſoon make them a plain; ſee Rev. xi. 15, 17: or, the ways of the world [k] are his; the world is under his government, and all things in it ſubject to his providence; he can rule and over-rule all things for his own glory, and the good of his intereſt, and he will do it; every thing is ſubject to his controul, and under his direction; not a ſtep can be taken without his will. This the prophet obſerves along with the above things, to encourage the faith and expectation of the ſaints, that the work of the Lord will be revived, and his kingdom and intereſt promoted and eſtabliſhed in the world; tho' there may, and will be, many difficulties and diſtreſſes previous to it.

ỷ. 7. I ſaw the tents of Cuſhan in affliction, &c.] The ſame with Cuſh or Ethiopia; hence the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions render it, the tents of the Ethiopians; and theſe are the ſame with the curtains of Midian in the next clauſe, tents being made of curtains, and the Ethiopians and Midianites the ſame people; ſo the daughter of the prieſt of Midian, whom Moſes married, is called an Ethiopian woman, Exod. ii. 21. Numb. xii. 1. This ſeems to have reſpect to that pannic which ſeized the neighbouring nations by whom the Iſraelites paſſed, as well as the Canaanites, into whoſe land they were marching, when they heard what wonderful things were done for them in Egypt, at the Red-ſea, and in the wilderneſs, which was predicted by Moſes in Exod. xv. 14, 15. and not only fulfilled in the Canaanites, as appears from what Rahab ſays, Joſh. ii. 9, 10, 11. but particularly in the Moabites and Midianites, who ſent to each other, and conſulted together againſt Iſrael; and by the advice of Balaam, found ways and means to draw them into fornication, and ſo to idolatry; for which the Iſraelites having ſuffered, were ſtirred up to avenge themſelves on them, and ſlew five of their kings, and a great multitude of their people; and ſo the words may be rendered, for iniquity [l]; and the word is often uſed for idolatry; that is, for the ſin they drew the Iſraelites into, they were brought into trembling and great diſtreſs, which the prophet ſaw, perceived and underſtood by reading the hiſtory of thoſe times; ſee Numb. xxii. 3, 4, 7, and xxv. 6, 17, 18. and xxxi. 2—8. tho' the Jewiſh commentators, and others, generally refer this to the caſe of Cuſhan-Riſhathaim king of Meſopotamia, who carried Iſrael into captivity, from whence they were delivered by Othniel, who prevailed againſt Cuſhan, and into whoſe hands he fell; and ſo then he and his people were ſeen in affliction, Judg. iii. 7—10. but Cuſhan here is not the name of a man, but of a country: and whereas it follows, the curtains of the land of Midian did tremble; this is thought to refer to the times of Gideon, when the Midianites were overcome by him with three hundred men, and in their fright fell upon and deſtroyed each other; ſignified by a barley-cake tumbling into the hoſt of Midian, and overturning a tent, as repreſented in a dream to one of Gideon's men, Judg. vii. 13, 21, 22. but the former reference ſeems beſt; and it ſhould be obſerved, that Cuſh or Ethiopia, and Midian were parts of Arabia; for not only the Arabians are ſaid to be near the Ethiopians, or at the hand of the Cuſhites, 2 Chron. xxii. 16. but Sinai a part of Horeb, where Moſes fed the flock of his father-in-law the prieſt of Midian, is expreſsly ſaid to be in Arabia; compare Exod. iii. 1. Gal. iv. 25. and with thoſe Arabians called Scenitæ, from their dwelling in tents, agree the characters in the text: now the people, inhabiting thoſe places, the prophet foreſaw by a ſpirit of prophecy under vanity [m], as it may be rendered; that is, ſubject to it, as the whole Gentile world was, Rom. viii. 20. or under the power of idolatry; but it was foretold that theſe ſhould be converted in goſpel-times, Pſ. lxviii. 31. and lxxxvii. 4. which was brought about, partly by the apoſtles Matthew and Matthias, ſaid to be ſent into Ethiopia; and partly by the Ethiopian eunuch, converted and baptized by Philip, who doubtleſs was the means of ſpreading the goſpel in his own country, when returned to it, Acts viii. 27. and chiefly by the apoſtle Paul, who went into Arabia, and preached there, quickly after his converſion; and here were churches in the firſt times of chriſtianity; ſee the note on Gal. i. 17. and at this time Cuſhan or Ethiopia was in affliction; and the Midianites trembled, ſuch of them to whom the word came in power; and they were made ſenſible of their danger and miſery, as the apoſtle did, the inſtrument of their converſion, Acts ix. 6. once more, as an Ethiopian is an emblem of a man in a ſtate of nature, and deſcribes very aptly wicked and profligate perſons, apoſtates from religion, and ſuch as are perſecutors of good men, Jer. xiii. 23. Amos ix. 7. it may deſign ſuch here; and be expreſſive of their diſtreſs and trouble, the fear and dread they would be ſeized with on ſeeing chriſtianity prevail, and paganiſm falling in the Roman empire; which diſtreſs and trembling are in a very lively manner ſet forth in Rev. vi. 15, 16, 17.

℣. 8. Was the Lord diſpleaſed againſt the rivers? was thine anger againſt the rivers? &c.] Referring, as is commonly thought, either to the rivers in Egypt turned into blood, which was one of the plagues of that land, Exod. vii. 20. when the reſentment of the Lord was not ſo much againſt them, as againſt the Egyptians; and as a puniſhment of them for drowning the infants of the Iſraelites in them, and in order to obtain the diſmiſſion of his people from that land: or elſe to the river Jordan, called rivers, becauſe of the largeneſs of it, and the abundance of water in it; againſt which the Lord was not angry, when he divided the waters of it, which was done only to make a paſſage thro' it for his people into the land of Canaan, Joſh. iii. 16, 17: was thy wrath againſt the ſea, that thou didſt ride upon thine horſes, and thy chariots of ſalvation? the Red-ſea, when a ſtrong eaſt-wind was ſent, and divided the waters of it, which was no mark of diſpleaſure againſt that; but for the benefit of the people of Iſrael, that they might paſs thro' it as on dry land; and for the deſtruction of Pharaoh and his hoſts, who, entring into it with his horſes and chariots, were drowned; the Lord coming forth againſt him, riding on his horſes and chariots, the pillar of fire and cloud, by which he defended Iſrael, and thro' which he looked and diſcomfited the hoſt of the Egyptians, and wrought ſalvation for his people; ſee Exod. xiv. 19—28. with which compare Pſ. cxiv. 3, 5. The clouds are the chariots of the Lord, Pſ. civ. 3. ſo angels, who are ſometimes ſignified by horſes and chariots, Pſ. xviii. 10. and lxviii. 17. 2 Kings ii. 11. and vi. 17. Zech. i. 8. and vi. 1—5. and here they may deſign the angels of Michael, or Chriſt, Rev. xii. 7, 8. the chriſtian emperors, Conſtantine and Theodoſius, whom the Lord raiſed up, and made uſe of as inſtruments to demoliſh paganiſm, eſtabliſh chriſtianity, and deliver and ſave his people from their perſecutors, who came in like a flood upon them; and who, for their number and force, were comparable to rivers, yea to the ſea; and upon whom the Lord ſhewed ſome manifeſt tokens of his wrath and diſpleaſure; ſo people, tongues and nations are compared to many waters, Rev. xvii. 15. and monarchs and their armies, Iſ. viii. 7, 8. and the Targum here interprets the rivers of kings and their armies: and it may be obſerved, that ſome parts of the Roman empire are ſignified by the ſea, and rivers, and fountains of waters, on which the blowing of the ſecond and third trumpets brought deſolation; as the antichriſtian ſtates are deſcribed by the ſame, on which the ſecond and third vials of God's wrath will be poured, when he will indeed be diſpleaſed and angry with the rivers and the ſea, figuratively underſtood, Rev. viii. 8, 10. and xvi. 3, 4.

℣. 9. Thy bow was made quite naked, &c.] It was took out of its caſe, and arrows out of their quiver, and theſe made uſe of againſt the enemies of his people: this is put for all weapons of war; the ſword was unſheathed, and all military weapons employed, and the power of the Lord was exerted; or, as the Targum, "the Lord was re- "vealed in his power;" fighting the battels of his people, as in the times of Joſhua: according to the oaths of the tribes, even thy word. Selah; that is, to fulfil his word of promiſe, to which he had annexed his oaths, he at ſeveral times ſwore to Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, and to the fathers of the Iſraelites, that he would put them in poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan; and which being worthy of notice, and to be remarked, the word Selah is added. So the Targum, "in revealing thou art "revealed in thy power, becauſe of thy covenant "which thy word made with the tribes for ever." The bow here is an emblem of the goſpel, with which Chriſt the captain of our ſalvation, the antitype of Joſhua, went forth, more eſpecially in the firſt ages of chriſtianity, conquering and to conquer, Rev. vi. 2. The arrows of this bow are the doctrines of the goſpel, which are ſharp in the heart of Chriſt's enemies, his elect; who are ſo in a ſtate of nature, whereby they are brought into ſubjection to him, Pſ. xlv. 5. and hereby the promiſes of God confirmed by his oaths are accompliſhed, that the ſpiritual ſeed of Chriſt ſhall endure for ever; or he ſhall never want a ſeed to ſerve him, Pſ. lxxxix. 35, 36: thou didſt cleave the earth with rivers; which is generally ſuppoſed to allude to the ſmiting of the rock, from whence waters guſhed out, and ran in dry places like a river; for which channels or canals were made in the earth, in which they flowed and followed the Iſraelites wherever they went, and ſupplied man and beaſt with water. So the Targum, "for thou "didſt break ſtrong rocks, rivers came forth over- "flowing the earth;" ſee Pſ. cv. 41. 1 Cor. x. 4. but this ſeems to be going back in the hiſtory; rather therefore this refers to the rivers formed in the land of Canaan, whereby it became fertile; hence it is called a land of brooks of water, of fountains and depths, that ſpring out of vallies and hills, Deut. viii. 7. This may reſpect in futurity, either the proviſions of grace, and the large abundance of the bleſſings of it, made for the ſupply and ſatisfaction of the children of God in times of diſtreſs and difficulty, Iſ. xli. 17, 18. or that help and aſſiſtance againſt, protection and deliverance from, the flood of perſecution, caſt out after the church by ſatan, in order to overwhelm her, by the earth opening its mouth, and ſwallowing up the flood, Rev. xii. 15, 16.

[m] Subjecta vanitati, Heb. ſub vanitate, Piſcator, Cocceius, Van Till.

℣. 10. The mountains ſaw thee, and they trembled, &c.] At the power and preſence of God, as Sinai of old; ſee the note on ℣. 6. by which are ſignified mighty people and nations, kings and great men, ſtruck with terror at the amazing providences of God in the world, on the behalf of his own people, and againſt their enemies; ſee Rev. vi. 14—17: the overflowing of the water paſſed by; which is uſually referred to the overflowing of the river Jordan at the time of the paſſage of the Iſraelites thro' it, when the waters above ſtood and roſe up as an heap, and thoſe below failed, and were cut off, and paſſed away into the ſalt ſea, Joſh. iii. 15, 16. but perhaps it may refer to the times of David, when he conquered all his enemies round about, who were like an overflowing flood; but now paſſed away, particularly the Philiſtines, who had always been very troubleſome to Iſrael, but now were overcome by David at Baal-Perazzim; where the Lord, on the contrary, broke forth upon his enemies as the breach of waters, from whence the place had its name, 2 Sam. v. 20. and as this reſpects time that was then to come, when this prayer was made, it may regard the flood of perſecution, which ceaſed in Conſtantine's time, when paganiſm was aboliſhed, and chriſtianity eſtabiſhed; concerning which it might be ſaid, the winter is paſt, the rain is over and gone, Cant. ii. 11. and the word [n] here uſed ſignifies a large ſhower of rain, cauſing an inundation, a ſtorm, a tempeſt; and ſo fitly expreſſes the violence of perſecution, now at an end: the deep uttered his voice, and lift up his hands on high; language very poetical, exceeding ſtriking, very beautiful and elegant. It is generally underſtood of the deep waters of the Red-ſea, or of Jordan, or both, when divided for the Iſraelites to paſs thro'; at which time, when they roſe up, they made a great noiſe, and ſtood on an heap; and ſo the phraſes are expreſſive of the roaring and raging of them as they roſe up, which was as if they had ſpoken; and of the poſition in which they were, ſtanding up on high, as if they had hands, and theſe lifted up: but rather they figuratively refer to the mighty nations conquered by David, who aſked favour and mercy of him, and ſignified their ſubjection to him; and having reſpect to times to come, may denote the ſubjection of the multitude of people and nations in the Roman empire to Chriſt, when heatheniſm was aboliſhed in it; and the joy and rejoicing of chriſtians upon it, and the ceaſing of perſecution in it, even high and low, rich and poor, all ranks and degrees of men; height and depth, men in high or low circumſtances, ſignified by the depth uttering his voice, and the height lifting up its hands, in token of praiſe and thankfulneſs; for ſo the latter clauſe may be rendered, the height lift up his hands [o]; and anſwers to the deep in the preceding clauſe; agreeable to this ſenſe is Jarchi's note, "the deep uttered his voice; the inhabitants "of the earth praiſed him; the height lift up his "hands; the hoſt of heaven confeſſed unto him;" every creature in heaven, on the earth, and under the earth, and in the ſea, aſcribed bleſſing, honour, glory, and power to the Lord on this occaſion, Rev. v. 13. The Targum is, "the powers "on high ſtood wondring;" amazed at what was done, and lift up their hands with aſtoniſhment.

℣. 11. The ſun and moon ſtood ſtill in their habitation, &c.] This is generally thought to refer to the miracle in the times of Joſhua, Joſh. x. 12, 13. but a different word is there uſed, eſpecially of the ſtanding ſtill of the ſun; nor are the ſun and moon ſaid there to ſtand in their habitation; nor will the ſeries of the hiſtory of times paſt, or the thread of prophecy of things to come, admit of this reference; nor do the words expreſs the clear ſhining of the ſun and moon at their ſtanding ſtill, but the reverſe; for the phraſe, in their habitation, may be rendered, within their tent [p], or pavilion; ſee Pſ. xix. 4. and the note there; which is no other than their being incompaſſed and covered with clouds; which is juſt ſuch a pavilion as God is ſaid to be in, when darkneſs was his ſecret place, his pavilion round about him, dark waters and thick clouds of the ſkies, Pſ. xviii. 11. and ſo is expreſſive of the dark times of antichriſt, which followed, when the pagan perſecutions were over, chriſtianity ſupported by ſecular powers, and the chriſtian churches raiſed to the height of riches and honour; and then the man of ſin ſhewed himſelf, the pope of Rome took upon him the title of univerſal biſhop, and introduced falſe doctrines, ſtrange worſhip, and bad diſcipline into the church, and obſcured the glorious light of it; and Mahomet alſo aroſe with his locuſts, the Saracens, out of the bottomleſs pit opened, from whence came a ſmoke which darkened the ſun and air, Rev. ix. 1, 2: at the light of thine arrows they went, and at the ſhining of thy glittering ſpear; the commonly received ſenſe of the words is, either at the light and ſhining of the ſun and moon, when they ſtood ſtill in Joſhua's time; the arrows of the Almighty, and the lightning of his ſpear, that is, hail-ſtones mingled with fire, and thunder, and lightning, which the heathens call Jupiter's arrows; theſe ſteered their courſe, being directed againſt the enemies of the Lord's people, and fought for them, Joſh. x. 10, 11. or at the light of theſe, which looked very bright and dazzling thro' the rays of the ſun upon them, the Iſraelites marched againſt their enemies, and avenged themſelves on them: but theſe bright arrows and glitering ſpear, and the light and ſhining of them, ſeem to deſign no other than the weapons of the chriſtian miniſtry or warfare; the goſpel, and the doctrines of it; the light of which broke forth at the reformation, the ſame that is meant by the morning-ſtar, Rev. ii. 28. irradiated by which, the miniſters of it eſpecially went forth with courage againſt their antichriſtian enemies, and prevailed, and ſpread the goſpel in many countries. It may be rendered as a petition, let them walk at the light [q], &c. a prayer of faith that it might be, and which is a prophecy that it would be.

℣. 12. Thou didſt march thro' the land with indignation, &c.] Not the land of Canaan, fighting againſt the inhabitants of it, diſpoſſeſſing them to make room for the Iſraelites, whatever alluſion may be to it; but the antichriſtian land, the whole Romiſh juriſdiction, and all the ſtates of it, thro' which the Lord will march in wrath and fury, when he pours out the vials of it upon them; or this is deſired, and prayed for; for it may be rendered, do thou march thro' the land [r], &c. foreſeeing and believing that he would: thou diſt threſh the heathen in anger; or, do thou threſh [s], &c. theſe are the papiſts, called Heathens and Gentiles in ſcripture, becauſe of the heatheniſh cuſtoms and practices they have introduced into the chriſtian religion, Pſ. x. 16. Rev. xi. 2. theſe are the nations that will be gathered together like ſheaves of corn on a floor to be threſhed; and when Zion the church of Chriſt, and chriſtian princes will be called upon to ariſe, and threſh them; and the Lord by them will do it, namely, ſeparate his own people from them, which are like wheat, and utterly deſtroy them, as chaff and ſtubble, Mic. iv. 12, 13.

℣. 13. Thou wenteſt forth for the ſalvation of thy people, even for ſalvation with thine anointed, &c.] Or, thy Meſſiah; which Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret of Meſſiah the ſon of David; and read and give the ſenſe of the words thus, "as "thou wenteſt forth for the ſalvation of thy peo-"ple, by bringing them into the land of Canaan, "ſo do thou go forth for ſalvation with thy Meſ-"ſiah." God of old went forth in his power and providence for the ſalvation of his people, whom he choſe above all people to be his ſpecial and peculiar people; making uſe of Moſes and Aaron in bringing them out of Egypt, and leading them thro' the wilderneſs, and of Joſhua to introduce them, and ſettle them in the land of Canaan; who were all types of Chriſt in the ſalvation of the choſen people. Joſhua particularly was a type of Jeſus; they agree in their name, which ſignifies a Saviour, the ſalvation of God, or God the ſalvation; and in their character, office, and uſefulneſs to the people of God. Jeſus is the Lord's anointed; anointed with the Holy Ghoſt, the oil of gladneſs, above his fellows, which he received without meaſure; anointed to the office of prophet, prieſt and king; and from whom his people receive the unction, and are denominated chriſtians, or anointed ones: and the people of God, for whoſe ſalvation he went forth with him, are not all mankind, who are not all ſaved; nor the people of the Jews only, or all of them; but a peculiar people, out of Jews and Gentiles, loved with a ſpecial love; choſen to ſalvation, ſecured in the covenant of grace, and given to Chriſt as his portion and people, and ſo ſaved by him, Matt. i. 21. The ſalvation of them is a ſpiritual one, a ſalvation from all their ſins; from the power and dominion, pollution and guilt, the damning power of them, and at laſt from the very being of them; as well as from ſatan, the law, death, hell, and wrath to come: it is perfect and complete, and endures for ever. Jehovah the Father went forth with Chriſt his Son for this ſalvation, in his purpoſes and decrees concerning it; in his council and covenant relating to it; in the miſſion of him into this world to effect it; and by helping and aſſiſting him in it, as man and Mediator. The words may be rendered, thou wenteſt forth; or, thou goeſt forth; thou wilt do ſo; and mayeſt thou do ſo, to ſave thy people, to ſave thy anointed [t]; and ſo reſpect not the ſalvation of Iſrael by Moſes or Joſhua; nor the ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation of God's elect by the Meſſiah; but the ſalvation of the Lord's people from myſtical Babylon, from the oppreſſion and tyranny of antichriſt, and from all his falſe doctrines, ſuperſtition and idolatry, and ruin by them; and particularly the ſalvation of the two witneſſes, the two olive-trees, the two anointed ones that ſtand before the Lord of the whole earth; the ſingular being put for the plural, anointed for anointed ones; and ſo the Alexandrian copy of the Septuagint verſion, and the Arabic verſion render it, thy Chriſts, or thy anointed ones; now this will be done when the Lord ſhall go forth in his power and providence, and quicken and raiſe their dead bodies, when they have lain three days and a half, and ſhall cauſe them to aſcend to heaven in the ſight of their enemies; ſee Zech. iv. 14. Rev. xi. 3, 4, 11, 12: thou woundedſt the head out of the houſe of the wicked; not the princes of the families of the land of Canaan, as ſome; nor the firſt-born of Pharaoh's family in Egypt, or him and his hoſt at the Red-ſea, as others; nor Goliah of Gath, ſmitten by David, as Burkius; nor ſatan and his principalities and powers by Chriſt on the croſs; but antichriſt the man of ſin, that wicked and lawleſs one, who is at the head of a wicked houſe or family, the antichriſtian party; who received a wound at the reformation; and ere long the kings of the earth will hate the whore, eat her fleſh, and burn her with fire; and Chriſt will utterly conſume and deſtroy this wicked one with the breath of his mouth, and the brightneſs of his coming, Rev. xiii. 3. and xvii. 16. 2 Theſſ. ii. 8. ſee Pſ. cx. 6. Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret this of the head of the army of wicked Gog, the king of Magog, taking it to belong to future time; and ſo ſome render all thoſe phraſes, thou wilt go forth, thou wilt wound [u], &c. by diſcovering the foundation unto the neck; or razing the foundation, as in Pſ. cxxxvii. 7. There ſeems to be a double metaphor in the words, expreſſing the utter ruin and deſtruction of antichriſt and his party; who, being compared to a building, will be demoliſhed, and razed to the very foundation; that will be dug up, and laid bare, and no trace of an edifice to be ſeen any more; and being compared to an human body, will be plunged into ſuch diſtreſſes and calamities, as to be as it were up to the neck in them, from whence there is no eſcape and deliverance. Some underſtand this of the princes of this head, or of his friends, and thoſe of his family that are neareſt to him, as the neck is to the head; or of the whole body of the people under him, of which he will be deprived; and ſo be as a head without a body, and who cannot long ſurvive them. Selah is added as a mark of attention, ſomething of moment and importance being obſerved.

℣. 14. Thou didſt ſtrike thro' with his ſtaves the head of his villages, &c.] Of his warriors, mighty men, princes; ſo the Vulgate Latin, Septuagint, Syriac and Arabic verſions; or of his armies, as Jarchi and Kimchi; which ſome interpret of Pharaoh and his hoſt, who were deſtroyed by the ſteps and methods which they themſelves took, going into the ſea of themſelves, and ſo were ſtruck thro' with their own ſtaves: others of the princes and armies of the Canaanites, who deſtroyed one another with their own weapons of war, as the Midianites did; tho' we have no inſtance of it on record: others of Goliah, as Burkius, called before the head out of the houſe of the wicked, with reſpect to his riſe from Gath; here, the head of his pagans, as he renders it, or Gentiles, with reſpect to his pre-eminence over the common ſoldiers, and all the Philiſtines: others of Sennacherib and his army, as Jarchi; but Kimchi's ſenſe is much better, who interprets it of Gog and his army; and which, if underſtood of the Turk, the eaſtern antichriſt, is not amiſs; and ſo as the weſtern antichriſt and his deſtruction are pointed at in the preceding verſe, the ruin of the other is intimated here; whoſe armies are expreſſed by a word which ſometimes has the ſignification of villages; becauſe he ſaid, I will go up to the land of unwalled villages, Ezek. xxxviii. 11. in the land of Judea about Jeruſalem, where he will diſtribute and quarter his ſoldiers; and where he and they at the head of them in theſe villages will be cut to pieces with their own weapons; as it is ſaid, every man's ſword ſhall be againſt his brother, Ezek. xxxviii. 21. Cocceius and Van Till render the words, thou haſt deſigned, marked out, or expreſſed by name, in his tribes, the head of his villages; and underſtand them, not of the enemy, but of Chriſt the anointed one, and his people; the proteſtants or reformed churches, who being ſeparated from antichriſt, are repreſented as divided into tribes, and as dwelling in villages alone, and in ſeparate ſtates and kingdoms; and ſuppoſe that God has deſigned in his purpoſes and decrees ſome particular place, called the head or beginning of theſe villages, where his great and glorious work in the latter day will firſt appear; but what and where that place is, is not ſaid: they came out as a whirlwind to ſcatter me; the prophet perſonating the true Iſrael, or the whole church of Chriſt: it is not unuſual for mighty armies to be compared to a whirlwind coming forth with great force, ſuddenly and ſwiftly; ſee Jer. iv. 13. and particularly it is ſaid of the army of Gog or the Turk, which ſhall invade Judea, in order to diſpoſſeſs the Jews of their land, when converted and returned to it; thou ſhalt aſcend and come like a ſtorm, thou ſhalt be like a cloud, to cover the land, thou and all thy bands, and many people with thee, Ezek. xxxviii. 9. who will think to ſcatter the people of the Jews again among the nations, as they have been: their rejoicing was to devour the poor ſecretly; the poor people of the Jews, to ſtrip them of their ſubſtance, to carry off their gold and ſilver, their cattel and their goods; and which they thought they ſhould as eaſily accompliſh, as a rich man gets the maſtery over a poor man, and ruins him, that has none to help him; and that they ſhould do this in a ſtill, private, ſecret manner, ſo as that the chriſtian princes ſhould have no knowledge of it, and come in to their aſſiſtance; and this they rejoiced at in themſelves, and pleaſed themſelves with it; ſee Ezek. xxxviii. 10, 11, 12, 13. and Pſ. cviii. 10. The above interpreters render this clauſe as a prayer, let them tremble for fear; or be filled with horror, who come to ſcatter me, whoſe rejoicing is as to devour the poor in ſecret; which is interpreted of the papiſts being terrified by ſome chriſtian princes ſince the reformation, from carrying ſome of their deſigns into execution; and of the clandeſtine arts and ſecret methods the Jeſuits particularly uſe to do injury to the intereſt of Chriſt and true religion.

℣. 15. Thou didſt walk thro' the ſea with thine horſes, &c.] And as thou didſt of old, ſo do again; as Jehovah walked thro' the Red-ſea in a pillar of cloud and fire, which were his horſes and chariots, and deſtroyed the Egyptians; ſo may he walk thro' another ſea by his inſtruments, and deſtroy the enemies of his church and people; ſee the note on ℣. 8. The ſea here ſignifies the world, compared to it for the multitude of its people; the noiſe, fluctuation and uncertainty of all things in it; and particularly the Roman empire, the ſea out of which the antichriſtian beaſt aroſe, Rev. xiii. 1. The horſes are the angels or chriſtian princes, with whom the Lord will walk in majeſty, and in the greatneſs of his ſtrength, pouring out the vials of his wrath on the antichriſtian ſtates: thro' the heap of many waters; or the clay, or mud of many waters [w]; that lies at the bottom of them; which being walked thro' and trampled on by horſes, is raiſed up, and troubles them, as the Septuagint and Arabic verſions render it: theſe many waters are thoſe on which the whore of Rome is ſaid to ſit; and which are interpreted of people, multitudes, nations and tongues, Rev. xvii. 1, 15. and the mud of them is expreſſive of their pollution tion and corruption, with her falſe doctrines, idolatry, ſuperſtition and immoralities; and of their diſturbed ſtate and condition, thro' the judgments of God upon them, ſignified by his horſes walking thro' them; trampling upon them in fury; treating them with the utmoſt contempt; treading them like mire and clay, and bringing upon them utter ruin and deſtruction.

℣. 16. When I heard, my belly trembled, &c.] His bowels, his heart within him, at the report made of what would come to paſs in future time; and not ſo much at hearing of the judgments of God that ſhould come upon the enemies of his church, antichriſt and his followers; tho' even theſe are awful and tremendous to good men; ſee Pſ. cxix. 120. but upon hearing what troubles and diſtreſſes would come upon the churches of Chriſt, previous to theſe, afterwards called a day of trouble in this verſe, and more particularly deſcribed in the next: my lips quivered at the voice; at the voice of theſe words, as the Targum; at the voice of the Lord, expreſſing and foretelling theſe calamities, thro' fear and dread, conſternation and amazement; under which circumſtances, the natural heat of the outward parts of the body retires to defend the heart, and leaves them trembling and quivering, particularly the lips, ſo that they loſe their uſe for a time; and a perſon in ſuch a caſe can hardly ſpeak: rottenneſs entered into my bones; he became weak and ſtrengthleſs, as if he had long been in a waſting conſumption; or was at once deprived of all his ſtrength, and it was turned into corruption; ſee Dan. x. 8: and I trembled in myſelf; within himſelf, in all his inward parts, as well as in his outward parts: or, under myſelf [x]; was not able to keep his place, could not ſtand upon the ground that was under him; his knees trembled, as the Syriac verſion: that I might reſt in the day of trouble; rather, as Noldius [y] renders the particle, yet, or notwithſtanding, I ſhall reſt in the day of trouble; which had been repreſented to him in viſion; and which he had a ſight of by a ſpirit of prophecy, as coming upon the church of Chriſt, and had given him that concern before expreſſed. The Syriac verſion of this and the next clauſe, which it joins, is, he ſhewed me the day of calamity, which is about to come upon the people. Here begins the prophet's expreſſion of his ſtrong faith and joy in the midſt of all the diſtreſſes he ſaw were at hand; herein perſonating the church, and all true believers helped to exerciſe faith in thoſe worſt of times. This day of trouble is the ſame with the hour of temptation, that ſhall come upon all the earth to try the inhabitants of it; the time of the ſlaying of the witneſſes, which will be ſuch a time of trouble as never was in the world; ſee Rev. iii. 10. Dan. xii. 1. The reſt, the people of God will have then, which the prophet had faith in for them, will lie in the Lord's protection and keeping of his people; his perfections, power and providence are the chambers of reſt and ſafety he will call them unto, and the ſhadow of his wings, which they will make their refuge till theſe calamities and indignation be overpaſt, Iſ. xxvi. 20. Pſ. lvii. 1: when he cometh up unto the people, he will invade them with his troops; or rather him; not the people, the people of God, he the Lord or Chriſt comes unto; but the enemy of them: this is the ground of the prophet's faith and confidence before expreſſed, or of the church's he perſonated; namely, that when Chriſt, Michael the great prince ſhould come up to his people, appear for them, and ſtand on their ſide, he would lead his troops, and march his army againſt their grand enemy antichriſt; and cut him to pieces [z], as ſome render the word: ſo Chriſt is repreſented as a mighty warrior, marching at the head of his troops, the armies of heaven following him upon white horſes, clothed in fine linen, white and clean, who are the called, choſen and faithful; and with theſe he will fall upon the beaſt, the falſe prophet, and the kings of the earth, gathered together at Armageddon, and utterly deſtroy them, Rev. xvi. 14, 16. and xvii. 14. and xix. 14—21.

℣. 17. Altho' the fig-tree ſhall not bloſſom, &c.] Or rather, as the Septuagint verſion, ſhall not bring forth fruit; ſince the fig-tree does not bear bloſſoms and flowers, but puts forth green figs at once. This was a tree common in the land of Canaan, and its fruit much in uſe, and for food; hence we read of cakes of figs among the proviſions Abigail brought to David, 1 Sam. xxv. 18. ſo that when there was a ſcarcity of theſe, it was a bad time: neither ſhall fruit be in the vines; no grapes or cluſters of them, out of which wine was preſſed; a liquor very refreſhing and reviving to nature; and is ſaid to cheer God and man, being uſed in ſacrifices and libations to God, and the common drink of men, Judg. ix. 13. ſo that when it failed, it was a public calamity: the labour of the olive ſhall fail; or lie [a]; diſappoint the expectation of thoſe who planted and cultivated it with much toil and labour, it not producing fruit as looked for. This tree yielded berries of an agreeable taſte, and out of which oil was extracted, the Jews uſed inſtead of butter, and for various purpoſes; ſo that when it failed of fruit, it was a great loſs on many accounts: and the fields ſhall yield no meat; the graſs-fields no herbage for beaſts; the corn-fields no corn for man; the conſequence of which muſt be a famine to both; and this muſt be very diſmal and diſtreſſing: the flock ſhall be cut off from the fold; flocks of ſheep; either by the hand of God, ſome diſeaſe being ſent among them; or by the hand of man, drove off by the enemy, or killed for their uſe; ſo that the folds were empty of them, and none to gather into them: and there ſhall be no herd in the ſtalls; or oxen in the ſtables where they are kept, and have their food; or ſtalls in which they are fattened for uſe; and by all theſe are ſignified the neceſſaries of life, which, when they fail, make a famine, which is a very diſtreſſing caſe; and yet, in the midſt of all this, the prophet perſonating the church, expreſſes his faith and joy in the Lord, as in the following verſe; tho' all this is to be underſtood, not ſo much in a literal, as in a figurative ſenſe. Fig-trees, vines, and olives are often uſed as emblems of truly gracious perſons, Cant. ii. 13. Pſ. lii. 8. partly becauſe of their fruitfulneſs in grace and good works, and partly becauſe of their perſeverance therein; all theſe trees being fruitful ones; and ſome, as the olive, ever green: of ſuch perſons there is ſometimes a ſcarcity, as is complained of in the times of David and Micah, Pſ. xii. 1. Mic. vii. 1. and eſpecially there will be in the latter day; for righteous and merciful men will be taken away from the evil to come, Iſ. lvii. 1. and however there will be very few, lively, ſpiritual and fruitful chriſtians, ſuch as abound in the exerciſe of grace, and are diligent in the diſcharge of duty; for when the ſon of man cometh, he will not find faith on the earth; and he will find the virgins ſleeping, Luke xviii. 8. Matt. xxv. 5. The fields not yielding meat, may ſignify that the proviſions of the houſe of God will be cut off; there will be no miniſtration of the word, or adminiſtration of ordinances; the word of the Lord will be ſcarce, rare and precious; there will be a famine, not of bread and of water, but of hearing the word of the Lord; one of the days of the ſon of man will be deſired, but not enjoyed; ſo no ſpiritual food in the uſe of means to be had; a very uncomfortable time this will be, Amos viii. 11. Luke xvii. 22. The flock being cut off from the fold, may denote that the ſheep of Chriſt will be given up to the ſlaughter of the enemy, or be ſcattered abroad in this dark and cloudy day of perſecution; ſo that there will be no fold, no flock, no ſheep gathered together; and perhaps ſuch will be the caſe, that there will not be one viſible congregated church in due order throughout the whole world; all will be broke up, and diſperſed here and there: no herd or oxen in the ſtall, may ſignify that the miniſters of the goſpel, compared to oxen for their ſtrength, induſtry, and laboriousneſs in the work of the Lord, will be removed, or not ſuffered to exerciſe their miniſtry, nor be encouraged by any in it: this will be the caſe at the ſlaying of the witneſſes, and a moſt diſtreſſing time it will be; and yet the prophet, or the church perſonated by him, expreſſes an uncommon frame of ſpirit in the following verſe. The Targum interprets all this figuratively, of the ſeveral monarchies of the world, which ſhould be no more; "the kingdom of Babylon ſhall not "continue, nor ſhall it exerciſe dominion over Iſ-"rael; the kings of the Medes ſhall be killed; and "the mighty men of Greece ſhall not proſper; and "the Romans ſhall be deſtroyed, and ſhall not col-"lect tribute from Jeruſalem; therefore for the "wonder, and for the redemption, thou ſhalt work "for thy Meſſiah; and for the reſt of thy people "who ſhall remain, they ſhall praiſe, ſaying: the "prophet ſaid;" as follows:

℣. 18. Yet I will rejoice in the Lord, &c.] In the word of the Lord, as the Targum; the eſſential word of the Lord, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; in his perſon, the greatneſs and glory of it; in his offices, as prophet, prieſt and king, the only Mediator and Saviour; in his relations, as head and huſband, father, brother, friend; in his fulneſs, grace and righteouſneſs; in his ſpiritual preſence, and comfortable communion with him, which may be expected in a remarkable manner, after the above day of trouble is over; and in his perſonal appearance, which will ſhortly be, and when his tabernacle will be with men on earth: I will joy in the God of my ſalvation; in Chriſt who is God, and ſo able to ſave his people; to make every thing he did and ſuffered in human nature effectual and available to them; to ſupply all their wants, and to keep what they commit unto him, and to preſerve them ſafe to his kingdom and glory: and who alſo joy in the ſalvation of their God, or which he is the author of, both temporal and ſpiritual, eſpecially the latter; which is ſo great and glorious in itſelf, ſo ſuitable to their caſe, ſo complete and perfect, and makes ſo much for the glory of all the divine perfections, and is all of free grace, and laſts for ever: this ſalvation is peculiar to the people of God; it is theirs, and theirs only; it is what they chooſe and prefer to all other ways of ſalvation; it is brought and applied to them by the Spirit, and which they appropriate to themſelves under his witneſſings; and then it is they can and do rejoice: particularly ſalvation and deliverance from antichriſtianiſm in all the branches of it may be chiefly pointed at, as the matter and ground of joy; and the enjoyment of goſpel-privileges in the full extent of them; the word and ordinances in their power and purity; and the preſence of Chriſt in them.

℣. 19. The Lord God is my ſtrength, &c.] The author and giver of natural and ſpiritual ſtrength, as he is to all his people; he is the ſtrength of their hearts when ready to faint and ſink, and of their graces, faith, hope, love, patience, &c. and continues, and increaſes them, and draws them forth into lively acts and exerciſe; and of their lives, natural and ſpiritual, which he ſupports and maintains, ſecures and defends; from him they have their ſtrength to perform the duties of religion, to oppoſe their ſpiritual enemies, ſin, ſatan, and the world; and to bear them up under all trials and afflictions, and carry them thro' them, and deliver out of them, and which is principally intended here: the church, tho' in diſtreſs, and preſſed with ſorrows, yet believed the ſtrength of Chriſt would be made perfect in her weakneſs, and ſhe ſhould be upheld by him under all, and brought out of it: and he will make my feet like hind's feet; ſwift as they, as the Targum, which are very ſwift; and on account of the ſwiftneſs of them is the compariſon uſed: and which is to be underſtood, not barely of the Jews being ſwift of foot to return to their own country, when the time of their converſion is come; or to purſue their enemies, as Kimchi; that is, Gog or the Turks, having got the victory over them: but of all chriſtians, whoſe feet will be ſwift to run in a lively, chearful manner, the way of Chriſt's commandments; their ſouls being ſtrengthened, and their hearts enlarged with the love and grace of God; and to ſurmount with eaſe all difficulties and obſtructions that lie in their way: and chiefly this regards the miniſters of the goſpel, and the ſwift progreſs they will make in ſpreading it in the world; as the apoſtles and firſt miniſters of the word, having their feet ſhod with the preparation of the goſpel of peace, went ſwiftly thro' all parts of the world, even to the ends of the earth with it; ſo in the latter day many will run to and fro, every where preaching the everlaſting goſpel to all nations; the knowledge of it ſhall greatly increaſe; ſee Dan. xii. 4. Rev. xiv. 6. this paſſage ſeems to be taken out of Pſ. xviii. 34. and there may be not only an alluſion to the ſwiftneſs of thoſe creatures, but to the ſtrength and firmneſs of their feet; ſo that they can go upon rocks and mountains ſecurely, and tread and walk, and even run upon them with ſafety; and this ſenſe is directed to, not only by what follows, concerning walking on high places; but by the word here uſed, which ſignifies to make, or ſet, fix, place, order, and ſettle [b]; and this agrees with the nature of thoſe creatures, whoſe feet are not only ſwift, but firm, they tread ſure and ſtable; hence hinds and harts are by the poets[c] called, the brazen footed hinds or harts, becauſe of the firmneſs and ſtability of their going; and it is an obſervation of Jarchi's[d], that the feet of the females ſtand firmer and more upright than the feet of the males; wherefore both here, and in Pſ. xviii. 34. not harts, but hinds are made mention of; and ſo this may alſo denote the ſtability of the ſaints in thoſe times, both miniſters and common chriſtians, in the exerciſe of grace, and in the performance of duty; their hearts will be eſtabliſhed in the faith of Chriſt, and in love to him, and in the hope of eternal life by him; all which they will be ſettled in, and will hold faſt, and not let go; and will be ſtedfaſt and immoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord their God; and ſo in the goſpel of Chriſt, and in the ordinances of it; their ſouls will be eſtabliſhed in and with the doctrines of grace, and will continue ſtedfaſtly in them, and abide by, and keep the ordinances as they have been delivered to them; nor will any difficulties, which may ſeem like hills, and mountains, and cragged rocks, deter or diſcourage them, or move them from the hope of the goſpel, or from their duty; but they ſhall walk on ſecurely and firmly: and he will make me to walk upon mine high places; meaning not ſo much the high places of the land of Judea, ſome part of it being mountainous, tho' there may be ſome reference to them; but it ſignifies the exalted ſtate of the church after the troubleſome times, when it ſhall be exalted above the hills, and eſtabliſhed on the top of the mountains; when Chriſt the Lamb, with his 144000 ſealed ones ſhall ſtand upon mount Zion with harps in their hands, having gotten the victory over the antichriſtian beaſt and his image; and when the ſaints ſhall have the dominion of the world; and the kingdom and the greatneſs of it, under the whole heaven ſhall be given to them, Iſ. ii. 2. Rev. xiv. 1. and xv. 1. Dan. vii. 27. as well as they ſhall be in lively, ſpiritual and heavenly frames of ſoul; mount up with wings as eagles; ſoar aloft in the exerciſe of faith; dwell on high in the contemplation of divine things; have their affections ſet on things above; and their converſation in heaven, whilſt they are on earth: eſpecially this may be ſaid of them, when they ſhall have the glory of God upon them in the new Jeruſalem-ſtate, and ſhall dwell in the new heavens, and the new earth, with Chriſt at the head of them; and when they ſhall poſſeſs the ultimate glory in the higheſt heavens to all eternity; ſee Deut. xxxiii. 29. and thus ends this prayer of Habakkuk; which ſerves to draw out the deſires of good men after the flouriſhing eſtate of the kingdom and intereſt of Chriſt; to aſſiſt their faith in the belief, hope, and expectation of it; and to lead their views to its ſummit and perfection, notwithſtanding all the difficulties and diſcouragements that may lie in its way: and being of ſo much moment and importance, that it might remain and continue, and be of uſe to the church in ſucceeding ages; the prophet delivered or directed it to the chief ſinger, to be ſet to tune, and ſung by him, as David's prayers, and others, ſometimes were, and to be preſerved for future uſefulneſs: and this he would have ſung (he ſays) upon my ſtringed inſtruments; which were either invented by him, or uſed by him in the temple, or were his own property: or he ſent this prayer or ode to him, who was over theſe inſtruments, had the care and uſe of them; and which were ſuch as were to be ſtricken with the hand, bone or quill; and are the ſame that are called Neginoth in the title of the fourth Pſalm, and others.

[d] Comment. in Pſ. xviii. 34.

ZEPHANIAH.

THIS book in ſome Hebrew copies is called Sepher Zephaniah, the book of Zephaniah. Its title in the Vulgate Latin verſion is, the prophecy of Zephaniah; and in the Syriac verſion, the prophecy of the prophet Zephaniah; and ſo the Arabic verſion calls him a prophet; and he is the laſt of the minor prophets that propheſied before the Babyloniſh captivity. The time of his propheſying, as well as his parentage, are expreſſed ch. i. 1. and therefore need not be enquired into; only the ſad miſtake of Hobbes [a] may be obſerved, who makes him to be the moſt ancient of the prophets, and to be cotemporary with Amaziah and Uzziah kings of Judah, when he is expreſsly ſaid to propheſy in the days of Joſiah. Pſeudo-Epiphanius [b] calls him a prophet of Sarabatha, of a mountain of that name, and ſays he was of the tribe of Simeon; and in this Iſidore [c] agrees with him; and both affirm that he died and was buried in his own native place; but the author of the Cippi Hebraici [d] ſays, he was buried at Geba in mount Lebanon, in the midſt of a cave ſhut up, where his ſchool continues; and from which place the clouds never depart, and where alſo are flowing fountains. His name, according to Jerom, ſignifies, either the Lord's watch-tower, or watchman; or elſe, the ſecret of the Lord; or, his hidden one; deriving his name, either from צפה, which ſignifies to look out, as a watchman from his tower; or from צפן, to hide; which latter derivation is beſt; and ſome interpret it, a revealer of the ſecrets, or hidden things of the Lord; and take it to be much the ſame with Zaphnath-Paaneah, the name given to Joſeph by Pharaoh, Gen. xli. 45. and is of the ſame ſignification: but Hillerus [e] interprets the name of Zephaniah, the Lord hid himſelf; which agrees with the times in which he lived. That this prophecy was wrote by himſelf, there need be no doubt of; nor of the authentickneſs of it, being always received by the Jewiſh ſynagogue as authentic; and as it appears to be from its ſtile and manner of compoſition; from the ſubject-matter of it agreeing with other parts of ſcripture, eſpecially with Jeremiah and Ezekiel; and from the accompliſhment of various prophecies in it. There are indeed ſome ſpurious things which have been aſcribed to him, as the analepſis or aſſumption of Zephaniah the prophet, and the prophecy of Zephaniah, conſiſting of ſix hundred verſes; but theſe are apocryphal, and have no likeneſs to this prophecy; in which he foretels the deſtruction of the Jews by the Chaldeans for their ſins, which he inveighs againſt, and calls them to repentance for them; as alſo the ruin of many other nations, all which came to paſs; as well as he propheſies of the calling of the Gentiles, and the converſion of the Jews, and of the comfortable ſtate of the church in goſpel-times, and eſpecially in the latter day.

CHAP. I.

AFTER the title of the book, ℣. 1. follows the Lord's threatning of the land of Judea with an utter conſumption of it, and of all creatures in it, for the ſins of its inhabitants, eſpecially their idolatry and apoſtacy, ℣. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. and this is repreſented under the notion of a ſacrifice, to which gueſts are bid; and which even princes, and thoſe of the blood royal ſhould not eſcape, nor miniſters of ſtate, or ſuch who filled their maſters houſes with violence, ℣. 7, 8, 9. Some particular places are mentioned, where there ſhould be a great noiſe of crying and howling, and eſpecially Jeruſalem, which ſhould be diligently ſearched, and its goods become a booty, and its houſes deſolate, ℣. 10, 11, 12, 13. This deſtruction is ſpoken of as near at hand, and is deſcribed as very terrible and diſtreſſing, ℣. 14, 15, 16, 17. and as inevitable, nothing would be able to deliver from it, ℣. 18.

℣. 1. The word of the Lord which came unto Zephaniah the ſon of Cuſhi, &c.] This is the title of the book, which expreſſes the ſubject-matter of it, the word of the Lord; the word of prophecy from the Lord, as the Targum; and ſhews the divine authority of it; that it was not of himſelf, nor from any man, but was of God; as well as deſcribes the pen-man of it by his deſcent: who or what this his father was; whether a prophet, according to the rule the Jews give, that when the name of a prophet and his father's name are mentioned, he is a prophet, the ſon of a prophet; or whether a prince, a perſon of ſome great family, and even of the blood royal, as ſome have thought, is not certain; or who thoſe after-mentioned: the ſon of Gedaliah, the ſon of Amariah, the ſon of Hizkiah; which laſt name, conſiſting of the ſame letters with Hezekiah king of Judah, ſome have thought, as Aben Ezra, that he is intended; and that Zephaniah was a great grandſon of his; and which ſome think is confirmed by his ſtile and diction, and by the freedom he uſed with the king's family, ℣. 8. but it is objected, that if ſo it was, Hizkiah or Hezekiah would have been called king of Judah; that it does not appear that Hezekiah had any other ſon beſides Manaſſeh; and that there was not a ſufficient diſtance of time from Hezekiah for four deſcents; and that, in fact, there were but three generations from him to Joſiah, in whoſe days Zephaniah propheſied, as follows; tho' it is very probable that theſe progenitors of the prophet were men of note and character, and therefore mentioned, as well as to diſtinguiſh him from others of the ſame name, who lived in the days of Joſiah the ſon of Amon king of Judah; not Amos, as the Arabic verſion: Amon and Manaſſeh, who reigned between Hezekiah and Joſiah, were both wicked princes, and introduced idolatrous worſhip among the Jews; which Joſiah in the twelfth year of his reign began to purge the people from, and endeavoured a reformation; but whether it was before or after that Zephaniah delivered out this prophecy, is not certain; it may ſeem to be before, by the corruption of the times deſcribed in it; and ſo it may be thought to have ſome influence upon the after reformation; though it is thought by many it was after; ſince had he been in this office before the finding of the book of the law, he, and not Huldah the propheteſs, would have been conſulted, 2 Kings xxii. 14. nor could the people ſo well have been taxed with a perverſion of the law, had it not been as yet found, ch. iii. 4. and beſides, the reformation ſeems to be hinted at in this prophecy, ſince mention is made of the remnant of Baal, which ſuppoſes a removal of many of his images; and alſo notice is taken of ſome that apoſtatized after the renewal of the covenant, ch. i. 4, 6. moreover, the time of the Jews deſtruction and captivity is repreſented as very near, ℣. 7, 14. which began a little after the death of Joſiah, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim; to which Dr. Lightfoot [f] adds, that the prophet propheſies againſt the king's children, Jehoahaz, Jehoiakim, and Zedekiah, for their new faſhions, and new fangled apparel, ℣. 8. and therefore it muſt be in the latter part of his reign; and if ſo, it ſhews how a people may relapſe into ſin after the greateſt endeavours for their good, and the beſt of examples ſet them. Mr. Whiſton [g] and Mr. Bedford [h] place him in the latter part of his reign, about 611 or 612 before Chriſt: there were three that propheſied about this time, Zephaniah, Jeremiah, and Huldah the propheteſs; of whom the Jewiſh Rabbins ſay, as Kimchi quotes them, Jeremiah propheſied in the ſtreets, Zephaniah in the ſynagogues, and Huldah among the women.

℣. 2. I will utterly conſume all things from off the land, ſaith the Lord.] That is, from the land of Judah, by means of the Chaldeans or Babylonians: this is a general denunciation of the judgments of God, the particulars follow: or, in gathering I will gather; all good things out of the land; all the neceſſaries of life, and bleſſings of providence; all that is for the ſuſtenance and pleaſure of man, as well as all creatures by death or captivity; and ſo the land ſhould be entirely ſtripped, and left naked, and bare. The phraſe denotes the certainty of the thing, as well as the utter, entire and total conſumption that ſhould be made, and the vehemence and earneſtneſs in which it is expreſſed.

℣. 3. I will conſume man and beaſt, &c.] Wicked men for their ſins, and beaſts for the ſins of men; and as a puniſhment for them, the creatures whom they have abuſed to the gratifying of their luſts: I will conſume the fowls of the heaven, and the fiſhes of the ſea; ſo that there ſhall be none for the uſe of man, which are both delicate food; the latter were not conſumed at the general deluge. Kimchi thinks this is ſaid by way of hyperbole; but it is poſſible for theſe to be conſumed, as men by famine, peſtilence and captivity, and beaſts by murrain; ſo the fowls of the air by the noiſomneſs of it; and the fiſhes of the ſea, that is, ſuch as were in the ſea of Tiberias, and other lakes in Judea, by the ſtagnation of the waters, or by ſome diſeaſe ſent among them; unleſs wicked men, comparable to them, are intended; tho' they are expreſsly mentioned, both before and after: and the ſtumbling-blocks with the wicked; that is, idols, which are ſtumbling-blocks to men, and cauſe them to offend and fall; theſe, together with thoſe that made them, and the prieſts that ſacrificed unto them, and the people that worſhipped them, ſhould be conſumed from off the land: or, the ſtumbling-blocks of the wicked; for את is ſometimes uſed as a ſign of the genitive caſe, as Noldius [i] obſerves; and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion, and the Targum render it: and I will cut off men from off the land, ſaith the Lord; this is repeated for the certainty of it; or elſe this deſigns another ſort of men from the former; and that, as before wicked men are deſigned, here ſuch as are not perfectly wicked, as Kimchi obſerves; yea, the righteous ſhould be carried captive, ſo that the land ſhould be left deſolate, without men, good or bad; for even good men may fall in a general calamity, and be cut off from the land, tho' not from the Lord. The Septuagint indeed here render it, wicked men. The phraſe, ſaith the Lord, is twice expreſſed for the certain confirmation of it; for it may be concluded it will be, ſince God has ſaid it again and again that it ſhall be.

℣. 4. I will alſo ſtretch out mine hand upon Judah, &c.] Under whom the tribe of Benjamin is comprehended, which are only deſigned; the ten tribes having been carried captive in Hezekiah's time many years before this: not to Judah, as beckoning to come and hearken to him, as calling to repentance and reformation; this he had done, but was rejected, and therefore determines to ſtretch out his hand upon them; nor over Judah, to protect and defend them; but upon Judah, exerting his power, ſtirring up his wrath, and executing his vengeance; and this is dreadful and intolerable to bear! and when his hand is ſtretched out, it cannot be turned back; and when laid on, can never be removed, till he pleaſes: and upon all the inhabitants of Jeruſalem; the metropolis of Judea, the royal ſeat of the kings of the houſe of David; where were the temple of the Lord; the ark, the ſymbol of his preſence; the altar, where his prieſts ſacrificed, and the place where his people worſhipped; and yet theſe inhabitants ſhould not eſcape the hand of the Lord, having ſinned againſt him; nor ſhould theſe things be any ſecurity to them: and I will cut off the remnant of Baal from this place; either what of the idolatry of Baal, or belonging to it, remained among the Jews after the ten tribes were carried captive; which muſt be the ſenſe, if this prophecy was before the reformation was begun by Joſiah; or if after, the meaning is, what was left unremoved by him, as any of the images of Baal, or altars erected for his worſhip, or veſſels conſecrated to his ſervice, or groves that were for his uſe; all which would be cut off and deſtroyed by the Chaldeans, as well as the worſhippers of him that remained: and the name of the Chemarim with the prieſts; prieſts; that is, the prieſts of Baal, with the prieſts of the tribe of Levi, who ſometimes tampered and officiated with them in idolatrous ſervice; for the word Chemarim is tranſlated, idolatrous prieſts, 2 Kings xxiii. 5. ſaid to be put down by Joſiah, in whoſe days Zephaniah propheſied; and muſt be the ſame with theſe, and it is uſed for ſuch in Hoſ. x. 5. ſo called, either from the black garments they wore, as ſome think; or from the colour of their faces, ſmutted with the ſmoke of the incenſe they frequently offered; or of the fires in which they ſacrificed, or made the children to paſs thro' to Moloch. Hillerus [k] thinks they are the ſame with thoſe heathen prieſts called Phallophori; deriving the word from one in the Arabic language, which has the ſignification of the Phalli; which were obſcene images, carried about in an impudent manner by the prieſts of Bacchus, in the performance of his ſacred rites: the carrying of them was firſt inſtituted by Iſis, as Plutarch [l] ſays; and if this was the caſe here, it is no wonder they ſhould be ſo ſeverely threatened. Some take them to be a ſort of ſervants or miniſters to the prieſts of Baal, who waited on them at the time of ſervice; and ſo are diſtinguiſhed from them in this clauſe, taking the word prieſts in it to deſign the prieſts of Baal; and the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, the name of ſextons with the prieſts. The word is uſed now by the Jews for popiſh monks that live in cloiſters; and Elias Levita [m] thinks, theſe here are ſo called from their living in ſuch like recluſe places. The Targum is, "and the name of their worſhippers with "their prieſts;" one and the other; prieſts of Baal, and apoſtate prieſts of the Lord; the worſhippers of Baal, and thoſe that attend upon his prieſts, ſhall all feel the weight of Jehovah's hand, and the lighting down of his arm with indignation.

℣. 5. And upon them that worſhip the hoſt of heaven upon the houſe-tops, &c.] The ſun, moon, and ſtars, which ſome worſhipped upon their houſe-tops; the roofs of their houſes being flat, as the roofs of the houſes of the Jews generally were; from hence they had a full view of the hoſt of heaven, and worſhipped them openly; and fanſied the nearer they were to them, the more acceptable was their ſervice; ſee Jer. xix. 13: and them that worſhip, and that ſwear by the Lord, and that ſwear by Malcham; that is, that worſhip the true God, or at leaſt pretend to do ſo, and ſwear by him when they take an oath: or, that ſwear to the Lord, as the words [n] may be rendered; that ſwear allegiance to him, to be true and faithful to him, to ſerve and obey him, and to keep his ſtatutes and ordinances; and yet they ſware by Malcham alſo, or Milchom, or Melchom, the ſame with Molech, or Moloch, the god of the Ammonites. Theſe were ſuch as partly worſhipped God, and partly idols; they divided their religion and devotion between them, ſometimes ſerved the one, and ſometimes the other; they halted between two opinions, and were a ſort of occaſional conformiſts; and ſuch were as deteſtable to God, as thoſe that worſhipped idols; as the papiſts are, who pretend to worſhip God and their images, or God in them, and with them; and ſo all ſuch perſons that ſeek for juſtification and ſalvation, partly by their own works, and partly by Chriſt, are diſpleaſing to the Lord, and miſs of the thing, ſtumbling at the ſtumbling-ſtone, and ſo fall and periſh.

℣. 6. And them that are turned back from the Lord, &c.] Who once were worſhippers of him, but now become apoſtates, and had turned their backs on him, and his worſhip. Some think this deſcribes thoſe who renewed their covenant with God in Joſiah's time, and after that revolted from him, who muſt be very abominable to him; and therefore he threatens to ſtretch out his hand, and pour out his wrath upon them: and thoſe that have not ſought the Lord, nor inquired for him; profane, abandoned ſinners, that lived without God in the world, and as if there was no God; never concerned themſelves about the worſhip of him, having no faith in him, love to him, or fear and reverence of him; ſo far were they from ſeeking him in the firſt place diligently, zealouſly, and with their whole heart, that they never ſought him at all; nor took any pains to get any knowledge of him, or of his mind and will, and manner of worſhip; but were altogether careleſs about theſe things, and unconcerned for them.

℣. 7. Hold thy peace at the preſence of the Lord God, &c.] When he comes forth, and appears in the way of his judgments, don't diſpute the point with him, or pretend to offer reaſons againſt his proceedings, or in order to diſprove the juſtice of them; ſtand in awe and reverence of him, who is the Lord God omniſcient and omnipotent, holy, juſt and true; humble yourſelves under his mighty hand; be ſtill, and know that he is God; and let not one murmuring and repining word come out of your mouth. The Targum is, "let all the "wicked of the earth periſh from before the Lord "God:" for the day of the Lord is at hand; the time of his vengeance on the Jewiſh nation for their ſins, which he had fixed in his mind, and had given notice of by his prophets: this began to take place at Joſiah's death, after which the Jews enjoyed little peace and proſperity; and his ſucceſſor reigned but three months, was depoſed by the king of Egypt, and carried thither captive, and there died; and Jehoiakim that ſucceeded him, in the fourth year of his reign was carried captive into Babylon, or died by the way thither; ſo that this day might well be ſaid to be at hand: for the Lord hath prepared a ſacrifice; his people the Jews, who were to fall a victim to his vengeance, and a ſacrifice to his juſtice, to atone in ſome meaſure for the injury done to it by their ſins; thus they that had offered ſacrifice to idols, and neglected the ſacrifices of the Lord, and eſpecially the great ſacrifice of Chriſt typified by them, the only proper atoning one, ſhould themſelves become a ſacrifice to the juſt reſentment of God; this he had prepared in his mind, determined ſhould be done, and would bring about in his providence; ſee Iſ. xxxiv. 6: he hath bid his gueſts; or called ones [o]; the Chaldeans, whom he invited and called to this ſacrifice and feaſt: or whom he prepared, or ſanctified [p]; he prepared them in his purpoſe and providence; he ſet them apart for this ſervice, and called them to it; to be the ſacrificers of this people, and to feaſt upon them, to ſpoil them of their goods and riches, and enjoy them. Theſe gueſts may alſo deſign, as Kimchi obſerves, the fowls of the heaven, and the beaſts of the field, invited to feaſt upon the ſlain; ſee Ezek. xxxix. 17. Rev. xix. 17.

✠. 8. And it ſhall come to paſs in the day of the Lord's ſacrifice, &c.] When the above ſacrifice prepared ſhall be offered, and the ſlaughter of his people made, when his wrath ſhall be poured out upon them, within the time of its beginning and ending: that I will puniſh the princes, and the king's children; either the children of Joſiah, who, tho' a good prince, his children did evil in the ſight of the Lord, and were puniſhed by him: Jehoahaz after a three months reign was carried down to Egypt, and died there; Jehoiakim his elder brother, that ſucceeded him, rebelling againſt the king of Babylon, in the fourth year of his reign, fell into his hands, and died, and was buried with the burial of an aſs; and Jeconiah his ſon was carried captive into Babylon, and there remained to the day of his death; and with him were carried the whole royal family, and all the princes, and all the mighty men of valour, 2 Kings xxiii. 14. or elſe the children of Zedekiah, another ſon of Joſiah, and the laſt of the kings of Judah, who was carried captived by Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, who before his eyes ſlew his ſons, and all the princes of Judah, and then put out his eyes, and bound him in chains, Jer. lii. 10, 11. and thus this prophecy had its accompliſhment: and all ſuch as are clothed with ſtrange apparel; either which they put on in honour of the idols they worſhipped, as Jarchi; ſo the heathens wore one ſort of garments for one idol, and another ſort for another; or theſe were men of a phariſaical caſt, who wore garments different from others, that they might be thought to be very holy and religious, which ſenſe is mentioned by Kimchi; or they were ſuch, which he alſo obſerves, who, ſeeing ſome to have plenty of good cloaths, ſtole them from them, and put them on; or ſuch who arrayed themſelves in garments that did not belong to their ſex, men put on womens garments, and women clothed themſelves with mens, and both ſtrange apparel; or rather this points at ſuch perſons, who, in their apparel, imitated the faſhions and cuſtoms of foreign nations; which probably began with the king's children and courtiers, and were followed by others. The Targum is, "and upon all thoſe "that make a noiſe at the worſhip of idols."

✠. 9. In the ſame day alſo will I puniſh all thoſe that leap on the threſhold, &c.] Not in a ludicrous way, who, by dancing and leaping, made ſport for perſons, and brought their maſters much gain, as the damſel poſſeſſed with a ſpirit of divination did, Acts xvi. 16. rather, that entered raſhly and irreverently into the houſe of God; or elſe in an idolatrous way, who, when they went into an idols-temple, did not tread upon the threſhold, but leaped over it, as the prieſts of Dagon, after the fall of that idol on the threſhold, 1 Sam. v. 4, 5. So the Targum, "and I will viſit all thoſe "that walk in the laws (or according to the cu- "ſtoms) of the Philiſtines;" whoſe idol Dagon was: but it ſeems better to interpret it of ſuch, who, ſeeing houſes full of good things, in a rude, bold, inſolent manner thruſt themſelves, or jumped into them, and took away what they pleaſed; or when they returned to their maſters houſes with their ſpoil, who ſet them on, and encouraged them in theſe practices, leaped over the threſhold for joy of what they had got, as Aben Ezra obſerves; which agrees with what follows: which fill their maſters houſes with violence and deceit; that is, with goods got by rapine and force, and by fraudulent ways and methods: this is to be underſtood of the ſervants of great men, who, to feed the ambition and avarice of their maſters, uſed very oppreſſive methods with inferior perſons, to get their ſubſtance from them, and gratify their maſters. Cocceius interprets theſe three verſes of the day of Chriſt's coming in the fleſh being at hand, when the true ſacrifice ſhould be offered up, and God would call his people to feed by faith upon it; when all civil power and authority in the Sanhedrim, and family of David ſhould be removed from the Jews; and all friendſhip with the nations of the world, ſignified by likeneſs of garments; and the prieſtly dignity, the prieſts, according to him, being thoſe that leaped over the threſhold; that is, of the houſe of the Lord, the temple, and filled it with the ſpoil of widows houſes, unſupportable precepts, and falſe doctrines.

✠. 10. And it ſhall come to paſs in that day, ſaith the Lord, &c.] In the day of the Lord's ſacrifice, when he ſhall puniſh the inhabitants of Judah and Jeruſalem by the Chaldeans; which, as well as what follows, ſhall ſurely come to paſs, becauſe the Lord has ſaid it; for not one word of his ſhall paſs away, but all be fulfilled: that there ſhall be the noiſe of a cry from the fiſh-gate; a gate of the city of Jeruſalem ſo called, which ſuffered as the reſt in the deſtruction of the city by the Babylonians, and after the captivity was rebuilt by the ſons of Haſſenaah, Neh. iii. 3. according to Jerom, it was on the weſt-ſide of the city, and led to Dioſpolis and Joppa; and was the neareſt road to the Mediterranean-ſea of any of the roads to Jeruſalem, from whence fiſh were brought, and brought in by this gate; and very probably the fiſh-market was near it, from whence it had its name; tho' Cocceius places it in the north-corner of the eaſt-ſide of the city, and ſo was nearer Jordan, the ſea of Tiberias, and the city of Tyre, from whence fiſh might be brought hither, and ſold, Neh. xiii. 16. however, be it where it will, the enemy it ſeems would attack it, and enter in by it; upon which a hideous cry would be made, either by the aſſailants, the Chaldeans, at their attack upon it, and entrance thro' it; or by the inhabitants of it, or that were neareſt to it upon their approach, or both: and an howling from the ſecond; either from the ſecond gate; and if the fiſh-gate is the ſame with the firſt gate, Zech. xiv. 10. then this may be pertinently called the ſecond. Jarchi calls it the bird-gate, which was the ſecond to the fiſh-gate. So the Targum, "from the bird, or the "bird-gate;" tho' ſome copies of it read, from the tower or high fortreſs: or elſe this deſigns the ſecond wall, and the gate in that which anſwered to the fiſh-gate; for Jeruſalem was encompaſſed with three walls; the fiſh-gate was in the outermoſt, and this was in the ſecond, to which the Chaldeans came next, and occaſioned a dreadful howling and lamentation in the people that dwelt near it. Kimchi interprets it, of the ſchool or univerſity that was in Jeruſalem; the ſame word is rendered the cottage in which Huldah the propheteſs lived, 2 Kings xxii. 14. and there, by the Targum, "the houſe of doctrine or inſtruction;" ſo then the ſenſe is, a grievous outcry would be heard from the univerſity or ſchool of the prophets; the enemy having entered it, and were ſlaying the ſtudents, or ſeizing them in order to carry them captive: and a great craſhing from the hills; either that were in Jeruſalem, as mount Zion and Moriah, on which the temple ſtood; or thoſe that were round about it, as Gareb, and Goath, and others; tho' ſome interpret this of the houſes of nobles that ſtood in the higher parts of the city, where there would be a ſhivering, a breaking to pieces, as the word ſignifies, of doors and windows without, and of furniture within.

℣. 11. Howl ye inhabitants of Makteſh, &c.] The name of a ſtreet in Jeruſalem, as Aben Ezra; perhaps it lay low in the hollow of the city, and in the form of a mortar, from whence it might have its name, as the word [q] ſignifies; which is uſed both for a hollow place, and for a mortar, Judg. xv. 19. Prov. xxvii. 22. unleſs it might be ſo called from ſuch perſons dwelling in it, that uſed mortars for ſpice, and other things. The Targum is, "howl all ye that dwell in the valley "of Kedron;" and Jerom thinks the valley of Siloah is intended, which is the ſame; which Adrichomius [r] ſays, was broad, deep and dark, and ſurrounded the temple in manner of a foſs, or ditch; and was diſpoſed in the form of a mortar, called in Hebrew, machtes; in Latin, pila;—in which merchants and tradeſmen of all kinds dwelt. It is thought by others to be the ſame which Joſephus [s] calls the valley of the cheeſemongers, which lay between the two hills Zion and Acra. The reaſon of their howling is, for all the merchant people are cut down; either cut to pieces by the ſword of the enemy, and become ſilent, as the word [t] ſometimes ſignifies, and the Vulgate Latin verſion here renders it; become ſo by death, and laid in the ſilent grave, and no more concerned in merchandiſe; or elſe ſtripped of all their wealth and goods by the enemy, and ſo cut down, broke, and become bankrupts, and could trade no more. The word for merchant ſignifies a Canaanite; and the Targum paraphraſes it thus, "for all the people "are broken, whoſe works are like the works of "the people of the land of Canaan:" all they that bear ſilver are cut off; that have large quantities of it, and carry it to market to buy goods with it as merchants; theſe ſhall be cut off, and ſo a great loſs to trade, and a cauſe of howling and lamentation; or ſuch that wear it in their garments, embroidered with it; or rather in their purſes, who are loaded with this thick clay, abound with it. The Targum is, "all that are rich in ſubſtance "ſhall be deſtroyed."

℣. 12. And it ſhall come to paſs at that time, that I will ſearch Jeruſalem with candles, &c.] To find out the ſins of the inhabitants of it, and the authors of them, and puniſh them for them, however hid and concealed from the eyes of others, or thought to be: this muſt be underſtood conſiſtent with the omniſcience of God, who knows all perſons and things; nothing is hid from him; men may fanſy their ſins are hid, being privately and ſecretly committed; but all will be manifeſt, ſooner or later; if not now, yet at the day of judgment; and ſometimes they are made manifeſt by God in this life, as here; for what the Lord here ſays he would do, he did it by inſtruments, by the Chaldeans, whom he ſent to Jeruſalem; and to whom the gates of the city, the doors of houſes, and the innermoſt receſſes of them were opened, and plundered by them; and all for the ſins of the people, which were hereby expoſed. So the Targum, "and "it ſhall be at that time that I will appoint ſearch"ers, and they ſhall ſearch Jeruſalem, as they "that ſearch with candles;" and no doubt but this was literally true of the Chaldeans, who with candles might ſearch vaults and cellars, and ſuch like dark places, where they ſuppoſed goods and riches were concealed. The alluſion may be to the ſearching with lamps for leaven on the fourteenth of Niſan, when the paſſover began, in every corner of a houſe, and when they found it, burnt it [u]; or in general to ſearching for any thing which lies concealed in dark places, where the light of the ſun comes not, and can only be diſcovered by the light of candles; and denotes that nothing ſhould eſcape the ſight and knowledge of God, by whom a full diſcovery would be made of their perſons and ſins, and cognizance taken of them in a vindictive way, as follows: and puniſh the men that are ſettled on their lees; like wine on the lees, quiet and undiſturbed; in a good outward eſtate and condition, abounding in wealth and riches, and truſting therein; and which, as the Targum paraphraſes it; they enjoy in great tranquillity; Moab-like, having never been emptied from veſſel to veſſel, Jer. xlviii. 11. and ſo concluded they ſhould ever remain in the ſame ſtate, and became hardened in ſin, or curded, and thickened, as the word [w] ſignifies; and were unconcerned about the ſtate of religion, or the ſtate of their own ſouls; and fearleſs and thoughtleſs of the judgments of God; but ſhould now be viſited, diſturbed in their tranquil ſtate, and be troubled and puniſhed: that ſay in their heart; not daring to expreſs with their lips, the following atheiſm and blaſphemy; but God, who ſearched and tried their hearts, knew it: the Lord will not do good, neither will he do evil; which is a flat denial of his providence; ſaying that he takes no notice of what is done by men on earth, whether good or bad; and neither rewards the one, nor puniſhes the other. So the Targum, as Kimchi quotes it, "it is not the good "pleaſure of God to do good to the righteous, "or to do evil to the wicked;" than which nothing is more falſe! the Lord does good to all in a providential way, and to many in a way of ſpecial grace; and rewards with a reward of grace all good men, both here and hereafter; and tho' he does not do any moral evil, yet he executes the evil of puniſhment in this world, and in that to come, on evil doers.

℣. 13. Therefore their gods ſhall become a booty, &c.] To the enemy; the riches they truſted in, and thought themſelves ſo ſecure of; and therefore denied divine providence, which ought to be depended upon amidſt the greateſt affluence; or otherwiſe the Lord has various ways by which he can ſoon ſtrip men of all their enjoyments, and diſpoſe of them to others: and their houſes a deſolation; be pulled down by the enemy; or left uninhabited, they being killed or carried captive, even their whole families: they ſhall alſo build houſes, but not inhabit them; not long, at leaſt; not always, as they expected, and promiſed themſelves when they built them: and they ſhall plant vineyards, yards, and not drink the wine thereof; but before the vines planted by them bring forth grapes, and theſe are preſſed, and wine made of them, they ſhould fall into the hands of the enemy, who would drink it, and not they; and all this agreeable to what was threatened them in the law of Moſes, which they ought to have regarded, Deut. xxviii. 30.

℣. 14. The great day of the Lord is near, it is near, and haſteth greatly, &c.] Not the day of judgment, but the day of God's vengeance upon the Jews, which yet bore ſome reſemblance to that day of the Lord, and it may be therefore ſo called; as the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by the Romans had ſome likeneſs to it, and therefore the ſigns of the one and of the other are given together by our Lord in Matt. xxiv. and this was a day in which he would do great things, by the Chaldeans, and againſt the Jews; and this is repreſented as very near; and repeated again for the confirmation of it, and to arouſe the thoughtleſs and careleſs about it, and who put away this evil day far from them; yea it is ſaid, to make great haſte, and to fly away ſwiftly, even faſter than time uſually does; tho' in common it has wings aſcribed unto it: even the voice of the day of the Lord; in which the Lord's voice will be heard; not his voice of grace and mercy, as in the day of ſalvation; but of wrath and vengeance, which will be terrible; hence it follows: the mighty men ſhall cry there bitterly; not the voice of the mighty men beſieging the city, making a hideous noiſe to animate the ſoldiers in making the aſſault, as ſome; but the mighty men within the city of Jeruſalem beſieged, who, when they ſee the city broken up, would be in the utmoſt terror, and cry bitterly, like women and children, being quite diſmayed and diſpirited; even the men of war upon the walls, and in the garriſons, with their officers and generals; and if this would be the caſe with them, how muſt it be thought to be with others, the weak and timorous?

℣. 15. That day is a day of wrath, &c.] Both of the wrath of God againſt his people for their ſins; theſe judgments being the effects of his wrath, provoked by their iniquities; and of the wrath and cruelty of the Chaldeans, exerciſed in a furious manner: a day of trouble and diſtreſs; to the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, they being taken and led captive, their houſes plundered and demoliſhed, and the whole city and temple laid in ruins: a day of waſteneſs and deſolation; of the whole country of Judea, and the metropolis of it; of their houſes, fields and vineyards: a day of darkneſs and gloomineſs, a day of clouds and thick darkneſs; as it might be in a natural ſenſe; the diſpleaſure of God being ſhewn in the very heavens, by the darkneſs and gloomineſs of them, and the thick clouds with which they were covered; and made ſtill more dark and gloomy by the burning of the city, and the ſmoke of it; and in ſuch circumſtances, gloomineſs and melancholy muſt ſit upon the minds of men: and thick clouds and darkneſs portend greater troubles and calamities coming on; and the whole is expreſſive of great adverſity; for as light frequently deſigns proſperity, ſo darkneſs adverſity.

℣. 16. A day of the trumpet, and alarm againſt the fenced cities, &c.] The trumpet of the enemy, ſounding the alarm of war againſt the fenced cities of Judea, which were taken before Jeruſalem; calling and gathering the ſoldiers together, and animating them to the aſſault of them; and blowing them in a way of triumph, and as expreſſive of victory, having got poſſeſſion of them: and againſt the high towers; or corners [x]; towers being uſually built corner-wiſe, and full of corners, and on the corners of walls of cities; ſometimes theſe ſignify princes, magiſtrates, and great men, Zech. x. 4.

℣. 17. And I will bring diſtreſs upon men, &c.] Not upon men in general, but particularly on the men of Judea, and inhabitants of Jeruſalem; and eſpecially thoſe that were in the fenced cities and high towers; and who might think themſelves ſafe and ſecure; but being beſieged, ſhould be diſtreſſed with famine and peſtilence, and with the enemy; and more eſpecially when ſtormed, and a breach made, and the enemy juſt entring: that they ſhall walk like blind men; not knowing which way to go, where to turn themſelves, what methods to take, or courſe to ſteer, no more than a blind man. The phraſe is expreſſive of their being at their wits ends, void of all thought and conſultation: becauſe they have ſinned againſt the Lord; and therefore he gives them up, not only into the hand of the enemy, but unto an infatuation of ſpirit, and a judicial blindneſs of mind: and their blood ſhall be poured out as duſt; in great quantities, like that, without any regard to it, without ſhewing any mercy, and as if it was of no more value than the duſt of the earth. The Targum is, "their blood ſhall be poured out into the duſt;" or on it, and be drunk up by it: and their fleſh as the dung; or their carcaſes, as the ſame paraphraſe; that is, their dead bodies ſhall lie unburied, and rot, and putrify, and ſhall be caſt upon fields like dung, to fatten them. The word for fleſh, in the Hebrew language, ſignifies bread or food; becauſe dead bodies are food for worms; but in the Arabic language, as Aben Ezra and Jarchi obſerve, it ſignifies fleſh.

℣. 18. Neither their ſilver nor their gold ſhall be able to deliver them in the day of the Lord's wrath, &c.] Which they have gotten in an unjuſt way, and have hoarded up, and put their confidence in; theſe were the lees on which they were ſettled; but now, as they would be diſregarded by the Lord, as inſufficient to atone for their ſins, and appeaſe his wrath, and procure his favour; ſee Job xxxvi. 18, 19. Prov. xi. 4. ſo they would be of no avail to them, to deliver from their enemies, who would not be bribed therewith to ſave their lives; the ſame is ſaid of the Medes at the taking of Babylon, Iſ. xiii. 17: but the whole land ſhall be devoured by the fire of his jealouſy; his zeal againſt ſin, and for his own glory, ſhall burn like fire; which ſhall conſume the whole land, and all the inhabitants of it, and was not to be ſtopped by any thing that could be done by them; ſo furious and raging would it be: for he ſhall make even a ſpeedy riddance of all them that dwell in the land; burn up at once all the briers and thorns, even all that offend, and do iniquity, and ſpare neither root nor branch; or, as when a field is cleared of the ſtubble on it, after the wheat is gathered in; or a corn-floor of its chaff, after the wheat is ſeparated from it; thus with the beſom of deſtruction would the Lord ſweep away the ſinful inhabitants of Judea, and clear it of them, as he did by the ſword, by famine, by peſtilence, and by captivity.

CHAP. II.

IN this chapter the prophet exhorts the Jews to repentance; and foretels the deſtruction of ſeveral neighbouring nations. The body of the people of the Jews in general are firſt called upon to gather together and humble themſelves, who were a people neither deſirable, nor deſerving of the favours of God, nor deſirous of them, ℣. 1. and to this they are preſſed, from the conſideration of God's decree of vengeance being ready to bring forth, and break forth upon them, ℣. 2. and then the few godly among them are exhorted to ſeek the Lord, and what is agreeable to him; ſince there was at leaſt a probability of their being protected by him in a time of general calamity, ℣. 3. and that the deſtruction of this people might appear the more certain, and that they might have no dependence on their neighbours, the prophet proceeds to predict the ruin of ſeveral of them, particularly the Philſtines; ſeveral places belonging to them are by name mentioned, and the whole land threatened with deſolation; the maritime part of it to be only inhabited by ſhepherds and their flocks; and afterwards the coaſt poſſeſſed by the Jews, on their return from their captivity, ℣. 4, 5, 6, 7. Next the Moabites and Ammonites are propheſied of; whoſe deſtruction ſhould come upon them for their pride, and for their contempt and reviling of the people of God; and which ſhould be like that of Sodom and Gomorrah; and would iſſue in the abolition of idolatry, and the ſetting up of the worſhip of God in their country, and elſewhere, ℣. 8, 9, 10, 11. As for the Ethiopians, they ſhould be ſlain with the ſword, ℣. 12. and the whole monarchy of Aſſyria, with Nineveh the metropolis of it, ſhould be utterly laid waſte, and become a deſolation, and a wilderneſs; and the habitation, not only of flocks, but of beaſts and birds of prey, ℣. 13, 14, 15.

℣. 1. Gather yourſelves together, &c.] This is ſaid to the people of the Jews in general; that whereas the judgments of God were coming upon them, as predicted in the preceding chapter, it was high time for them to get together, and conſider what was to be done at ſuch a juncture; it was right to call a ſolemn aſſembly, to gather the people, prieſts, and elders together, to ſome one place, as Joel directs, ch. i. 14. and ii. 15, 16. the inhabitants of Jeruſalem to the temple, and the people of the land to their reſpective ſynagogues, and there humble themſelves before the Lord; confeſs their ſins, and declare their repentance for them; and pray that God would ſhew favour to them, and avert his wrath and judgments from them: or, gather the ſtraw[y]; from yourſelves, and then gather it from others, as follows: or, firſt adorn yourſelves, and then others, as in the Talmud[z]; and the ſenſe is the ſame with the words of Chriſt, firſt caſt out the beam out of thine own eye, &c. Matt. vii. 3, 4, 5. and the meaning of both is, firſt correct and amend yourſelves, and then reprove others: this ſenſe is given by the Jewiſh commentators, and is approved by Guſſetius[a]: or, ſearch yourſelves[b]; as ſome render the word; and that very diligently, as ſtubble is ſearched into, or any thing ſearched for in it; let the body of the people enquire among themſelves, what ſhould be the cauſe of theſe things; what public ſins prevailed among them, for which they were threatened with an utter deſtruction; and let every one ſearch into his own heart and ways, and conſider how much he has contributed to the bringing down ſuch ſad calamities upon the nation: thus it became them to ſearch and enquire into their ſtate and circumſtances of affairs, in a way of ſelf-examination; or otherwiſe the Lord would ſearch them in a way of judgment, as threatened ch. i. 12. or ſhake out[c], or fan yourſelves, as others; remove your chaff by repentance and reformation, that you be not blown away like chaff in the day of God's wrath, as afterwards ſuggeſted: yea, gather together; or ſearch, or ſhake out, or fan, as before: this is repeated to ſhew the neceſſity and importance of it, and the vehemency of the prophet in urging it: O nation not deſired; by other nations, but hated by them, as Abarbinel obſerves; not deſirable to God or good men; not amiable or lovely for any excellencies and goodneſs in them, but the reverſe; being a diſobedient and rebellious people; a ſeed of evil doers, laden with iniquity, who, from the crown of the head, to the ſole of the feet, were full of wounds, bruiſes, and putrifying ſores; or of diſorders and irregularities, ſins and tranſgreſſions, comparable to them; and therefore inſtead of being deſirable, were loathſome and abominable: or, as ſome render the word, O nation void of deſire[d]; or not affected with it; who had no deſire after God, and the knowledge of his will; after his word and worſhip; after a return unto him, and reconciliation with him; after his favour, grace and mercy; not deſirous of good things, nor of doing any. So the Targum, "gather together, "and come, and draw near, this people who deſire not to return to the law." Joſeph Kimchi, from the uſe of the word in the Miſnic language, renders it, O nation not aſhamed; of their evil works, being bold and impudent; and yet ſuch was the goodneſs and grace of God to them, that he calls them to repentance, and gives them warning before he ſtrikes the blow.

℣. 2. Before the decree bring forth, before the day paſs as the chaff, &c.] Which was like a woman big with child, ready to be delivered. The decree of God concerning the people of the Jews was pregnant with wrath and ruin for their ſins, and juſt ripe for execution; and therefore before it was actually executed, they are exhorted as above; not that the decree of God which was gone forth could be fruſtrated and made void by any thing done by them; only that when it was put into execution, ſuch as repented of their ſins might be ſaved from the general calamity; which they are called upon to do before the day come appointed by the Lord for the execution of this decree, which lingered not, and was not delayed, but ſlided on as ſwiftly as chaff before the driving wind. There is ſome difficulty in the rendring and ſenſe of theſe words; ſome thus, before the day, which paſſes as chaff, brings forth the decree[e]; that is, before the time which moves ſwiftly, brings on the execution of the decree, or of the thing decreed in it, it is big with: others, before the decree brings forth the day that paſſeth as chaff[f]; or in which the chaff ſhall be ſeparated from the wheat, paſs away, be diſperſed here and there; that is, before they were ſcattered about by it as chaff: and to this ſenſe the Septuagint and Arabic verſions, before ye are as a flower; or as the Syriac, as chaff that paſſeth away; and ſo the Targum more fully, "before the decree of the houſe of judgment come out "upon you, and ye be like chaff which the wind "blows away, and like a ſhadow which paſſes "from before the day." See Pſ. i. 5. Before the fierce anger of the Lord come upon you; before the day of the Lord's anger come upon you; theſe phraſes explain the former, and ſhew what the decree was big with, and ready to bring forth, even the judgments of God, in wrath and fierce anger; and what the day is, ſaid to paſs as the chaff; the day of God's vengeance fixed by him, which ſhould come upon them, and ſcatter them like chaff among the nations of the world: or rather the words may be rendered thus, as by Guſſetius[g]; whilſt as yet the decree hath not brought forth, the day paſſeth away like chaff; being neglected and ſpent in an uſeleſs and unprofitable manner; for which they are reproved; and therefore are exhorted to be wiſer for the future, and redeem precious time; and before the Lord's anger comes upon them, do what is before exhorted to, and particularly what follows:

℣. 3. Seek ye the Lord, all ye meek of the earth, &c.] Or of the land, of the land of Judea. In this time of great apoſtacy, there was a remnant according to the election of grace, whom the Lord reſerved for himſelf, and beſtowed his grace upon; and it is for the ſake of theſe, that the general exhortations to repentance and reformation are given out, to whom alone they were to be uſeful, that they might be protected and preſerved from the general ruin; for ſuch as are here deſcribed, are perſons the Lord takes great notice of; he gives them more grace; he lifts them up when bowed down; he beautifies them with ſalvation; he feeds them to full ſatiſfaction; he teaches them his ways, his mind and will; he dwells with them here; and will cauſe them to inherit the new heaven, and new earth hereafter: they are ſuch, who have a true ſenſe of ſin, and the exceeding ſinfulneſs of it, which humbles them; and conſcious of the imperfection of their own righteouſneſs, ſubmit to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; acknowledge they are ſaved alone by the grace of God; and that all they have and expect to enjoy is owing to that; they are humble under the mighty hand of God, in every afflictive providence; patiently take all wrongs, abuſes, and injuries done them by men; are not envious at the ſuperior gifts, grace and uſefulneſs of others, but rejoice therein; have mean ſentiments of themſelves, and very high ones of others that excel in grace and holineſs; theſe are truly gracious perſons; and are like unto, and are followers of, the meek and lowly Jeſus: and are here exhorted to ſeek the Lord; that is, by prayer and ſupplication, to know more of his mind and will, and eſpecially their duty in their preſent circumſtances; implore his grace and mercy, protection and ſafety in a day of common danger; and attend the public ordinances of his houſe, in order to enjoy his preſence and communion with him: for to ſeek the Lord, is to ſeek his face and favour, to have the light of his countenance, and the diſcoveries of his love; and to ſeek his honour and glory in all things: particularly the Lord Chriſt may be meant, who was to come in the fleſh, and good men ſought for before he came, and now he is come; and to him ſhould men ſeek for righteouſneſs and life; for peace and pardon; for grace, and all ſupplies of it; and for everlaſting ſalvation; and all this before, as well as ſince his coming: and ſuch ſeek him aright, who ſeek him early, in the firſt place, and above all things; who ſeek him with their whole hearts, ſincerely, diligently and conſtantly; and where he is to be found, in the miniſtry of his word and ordinances: which have wrought his judgment; the judgment of the Lord; acted according to his mind and will, revealed in his word, which is the rule of judgment, both as to faith and practice; obſerved his laws and ſtatutes; kept his ordinances, as they were delivered; and did works of righteouſneſs from right principles, and with right views, as fruits of faith, and as meet for repentance: ſeek righteouſneſs; not their own, and juſtification by that; for this would be doing what the carnal Jews did, and in vain, and is inconſiſtent with ſeeking the Lord, as before; but the righteouſneſs of God, the kingdom of God and his righteouſneſs, even the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, who is God, and which only gives a right unto the kingdom of God or heaven: ſeeking this ſuppoſes a want of righteouſneſs, which is in every man; a ſenſe of that want, which only ſome have; a view of a righteouſneſs without a man, in another, even in Chriſt; and of the glory, fulneſs and excellency of his righteouſneſs, which make it deſireable, and worth ſeeking for; tho' this exhortation may alſo include in it a living to him, ſoberly and righteouſly, as a fruit of divine grace, and to the glory of God, and according to his will, without truſting in it, and depending upon it, for life and ſalvation: ſeek meekneſs; even tho' they were meek ones already, yet it became them to ſeek after more of this grace of meekneſs, that they might increaſe therein, and abound in the exerciſe of it, and be careful that they failed not in it; ſince the enemy of ſouls often attacks the ſaints in that in which they moſt excel, and ſucceeds: ſo Moſes the meekeſt man on earth, being off of his guard, and provoked, ſpoke unadviſedly with his lips; and it went ill with him on that account, Numb. xii. 3. Pſ. cvi. 32, 33. beſides, this exhortation, as well as the preceding, may have a reſpect to their concern with others; that they ſhould ſtudy as much as in them lay, not only to do righteouſneſs, and exerciſe meekneſs themſelves, but to cultivate theſe among others; with which agrees Kimchi's note, "ſeek righteouſneſs and meekneſs with "others; as if it was ſaid, ſtudy with all your "might and main to return them to the right "way:" it may be, ye ſhall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger; in the time of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by the Chaldeans, when ſome were put to the ſword, and others carried captive: now there was a poſſibility, yea a probability that ſuch perſons before deſcribed would be ſaved at this time from the general calamity; be hid, protected and preſerved by the power and providence of God, as Jeremiah, Baruch, and others were: this, tho' it is not ſaid as a certain thing, becauſe a corporal bleſſing, which the people of God cannot always be aſſured of in a time of public diſtreſs; yet not expreſſed in a doubting manner, much leſs deſpairing; but rather as preſuming, at leaſt hoping it would be, being poſſible and probable; and ſo encouraging to the above exerciſes of religion; and ſuch that have the grace of God, and ſeek him, and ſeek to Chriſt alone for righteouſneſs and life, may depend upon it that they ſhall be hid, and be ſafe and ſecure, when the wrath of God at the laſt day comes upon an ungodly world, Iſ. xxxii. 2. Rom. v. 9. The Targum of the whole is, "ſeek the fear of the Lord, all ye meek of the earth, who do the judgments of his will; ſeek truth, ſeek meekneſs; it may be there will be a protection for you in the day of the Lord's anger." The Vulgate Latin verſion is, ſeek the Lord—ſeek the juſt, ſeek the meek one; as expreſſive of a perſon, even the Lord Chriſt, the juſt and holy one, the meek and lowly Jeſus.

℣. 4. For Gaza ſhall be forſaken, &c.] Therefore ſeek the Lord; and not to the Philiſtines, ſince they would be deſtroyed, to whom Gaza, and the other cities after-mentioned, belonged; ſo Aben Ezra connects the words, ſuggeſting that it would be in vain to flee thither for ſhelter, or ſeek for refuge there; tho' others think that this and what follows is ſubjoined, either to aſſure the Jews of their certain ruin, ſince this would be the caſe of the nations about them; or to alleviate their calamity, ſeeing their enemies would have no occaſion to inſult them, and triumph over them, they being, or quickly would be, in the like circumſtances. Gaza was one of the five lordſhips of the Philiſtines; a ſtrong and fortified place, as its name ſignifies; but ſhould be demoliſhed, ſtripped of its fortifications, and forſaken by its inhabitants. It was ſmitten by Pharaoh king of Egypt; and was laid waſte by Nebuchadnezzar, Jer. xlvii. 1, 4, 5. and afterwards taken by Alexander the Great; and having gone thro' various changes, was in the times of the apoſtles called Gaza the deſert, Acts viii. 26. There is a beautiful paronomaſia in the words, not to be expreſſed in an Engliſh tranſlation [h]. According to Strabo's account [i], the ancient city was ſeven furlongs from the haven, for which (he ſays) it was formerly very illuſtrious; but was demoliſhed by Alexander, and remained a deſert. And ſo Jerom [k] ſays, in his time, the place where the ancient city ſtood ſcarce afforded any traces of the foundations of it; for that which now is ſeen (adds he) was built in another place, inſtead of that which was deſtroyed; and which he obſerves accounts for the fulfilment of this prophecy: and ſo Monſieur Thevenot [l] ſays, the city of Gaza is about two miles from the ſea; and was anciently very illuſtrious, as may be ſeen by its ruins; and yet, even this muſt be underſtood of new Gaza; ſo a Greek writer [m], of an uncertain age, obſerves this diſtinction; and ſpeaks of this and the following places exactly in the order in which they are here, "after Rhinocorura lies new Gaza, which is the city itſelf; then Gaza the deſert (the place here propheſied of); then the city Aſcalon; after that Azotus (or Aſhdod); then the city Accaron," (or Ekron): and Aſhkelon a deſolation; this was another lordſhip belonging to the Philiſtines, that ſuffered at the ſame time as Gaza did by Nebuchadnezzar, Jer. xlvii. 5, 7. This place was ten miles from Gaza, as Mr. Sandys [n] ſays, and who adds, and now of no note; and Strabo [o] ſpeaks of it in his time, as a ſmall city; indeed new Aſhkelon is ſaid by Benjamin of Tudela [p] to be a very large and beautiful city; but then he diſtinguiſhes it from old Aſhkelon, here propheſied of; and which (he ſays) is four parſæ, or ſixteen miles from the former, and now lies waſte and deſolate: they ſhall drive out Aſhdod at the noon-day; that is, the Chaldeans ſhall drive out the inhabitants of Aſhdod, another of the principalities of the Philiſtines; the ſame with Azotus, Acts viii. 40. at noon-day, openly and publickly, and with great eaſe; they ſhall have no occaſion to uſe any ſecret ſtratagems, or to make night-work of it; and which would be very incommodious and diſtreſſing to the inhabitants, to be turned out at noon-day, and be obliged to travel in the heat of the ſun, which in thoſe eaſtern countries at noon-day beats very ſtrong. This place was diſtant from old Aſhkelon four parſæ, or twenty-four miles, as Benjamin Tudelenſis [q] affirms; and with which agrees Diodorus Siculus [r], who ſays, that from Gaza to Azotus are 270 furlongs, which make thirty-four miles, ten from Gaza to Aſhkelon, and twenty-four from thence to Azotus or Aſhdod. This place, according to the above Jewiſh traveller [s], is now called Palmis, which he ſays is the Aſhdod that belonged to the Philiſtines, now waſte and deſolate; by which this prophecy is fulfilled. It was once a very large and famous city, ſtrong and well fortified; and held out a ſiege of twenty-nine years againſt Pſamittichus king of Egypt, as Herodotus [t] relates, but now deſtroyed; ſee Iſ. xx. 1: and Ekron ſhall be rooted up; as a tree is rooted up, and withers away, and periſhes, and there is no more hope of it: this denotes the utter deſtruction of this place. There is here alſo an elegant alluſion to the name of the place [u], not to be imitated in a verſion of it: this was another of the lordſhips of the Philiſtines, famous for the idol Beelzebub, the god of this place. Jerom [w] obſerves, that ſome think that Accaron (or Ekron) is the ſame with Strato's tower, afterwards called Cæſarea; and ſo the Talmudiſts ſay [x], Ekron is Cæſarea; which is not at all probable: he further obſerves, that there is a large village of the Jews, which in his days was called Accaron, and lay between Azotus and Jamnia to the eaſt; but Breidenbachius [y] relates, that in his time, Accaron was only a ſmall cottage or hut, yet retaining its ancient name; ſo utterly rooted up is this place, which once was a conſiderable principality. Gath is not mentioned, which is the other of the five principalities, becauſe it was now, as Kimchi ſays, in the hands of the kings of Judah.

℣. 5. Wo unto the inhabitants of the ſea-coaſt, the nation of the Cherethites, &c.] Which is a name of the Philiſtines in general, as Kimchi and Ben Melech; or theſe were a particular tribe belonging to them, that inhabited the ſouthern part of their country; ſee 1 Sam. xxx. 14, 16. thoſe on the ſea-coaſt, the coaſt of the Mediterranean ſea, and ſo lay between that and Judea: out of this nation, in the times of David and Solomon, were ſome choice ſoldiers ſelected, called the Cherethites and Pelethites, who were their body-guards, as Joſephus[a] calls them; a royal band, which never departed from the king's perſon; ſee 2 Sam. xv. 18. and xx. 7, 23. The Septuagint verſion calls them, ſtrangers of the Cretians; and are thought by ſome to be a colony of the Cretians; a people that came originally from the iſland of Crete, and ſettled here; but, on the contrary, rather Crete was a colony of the Philiſtines, and had its name from them; for by the Arabians[b], the country of Paleſtine, or the Philiſtines, is called Keritha; and by the Syrians Creth; and by the Hebrews, the inhabitants thereof, are called Cherethites, as here, and in Ezek. xxv. 16. and ſo the ſouth of the Cherethites, in 1 Sam. xxx. 14. is in ℣. 16. called the land of the Philiſtines. In all the above places, where they are ſpoken of as the attendants of Solomon and David, they are in the Targum called archers; and it is a clear caſe, the Philiſtines were famous for archery, whereby they had ſometimes the advantage of their enemies; ſee 1 Sam. xxxi. 3. and bows and arrows were the arms the Cretians made uſe of, and were famous for, as Bochart[c] from various writers has ſhewn; the uſe of which they learned very probably from the Philiſtines, from whom they ſprung; tho' Solinus[d] ſays, they were the firſt that uſed arrows; and according to Diodorus Siculus, Saturn introduced the art of uſing bows and arrows into the iſland of Crete; tho' others aſcribe it to Apollo[e]; and it is ſaid, that Hercules learnt this art from Rhadamanthus of Crete; which laſt inſtance ſeems to favour the notion of thoſe, that theſe Cherethites were Cretians, or ſprung from them; to which the Septuagint verſion inclines; and Calmet[f] is of opinion, that Caphtor from whence the Philiſtines are ſaid to come, Amos ix. 7. and who are called the remnant of the country of Caphtor, Jer. xlvii. 4. is the iſland of Crete; and that the Philiſtines came from thence into Paleſtine; and that the Cherethites are the ancient Cretians; the language, manners, arms, religion, and gods of the Cretians and Philiſtines being much the ſame; tho' ſo they might be, as being a colony of the Philiſtines; ſee the note on Amos ix. 7. Another learned man[g] thinks they are the Midianites, the ſame with the Cretians that Luke joins with the Arabians, Acts ii. 11. as the Midianites are with the Arabians and Amalekites by Joſephus[h]; however, a wo is denounced againſt them, and they are threatened with deſolation. The Vulgate Latin verſion is, a nation of deſtroyed ones; and the Targum, "a people who have ſinned, that they "might be deſtroyed:" the word of the Lord is againſt you; inhabitants of the ſea-coaſt, the Cherethites; the word of the Lord conceived in his own mind, his purpoſe to deſtroy them, which cannot be fruſtrated. So the Targum, "the decree "of the word of the Lord is againſt you;" and the word pronounced by his lips, the word of prophecy concerning them, by the mouth of former prophets, as Iſaiah, ch. xiv. 29, 31. and by the mouth of the preſent prophet: O Canaan, the land of the Philiſtines; Paleſtine was a part of Canaan, the five lordſhips of the Philiſtines beforementioned belonged originally to the Canaanite, Joſh. xiii. 3. and theſe belonged to the land of Iſrael, tho' poſſeſſed by them, out of which now they ſhould be turned, and the country waſted, as follows: I will even deſtroy thee, that there ſhall be no inhabitant; ſo great ſhould be the deſolation; all ſhould be removed from it, either by death, or by captivity; at leaſt there ſhould be no ſettled inhabitant.

℣. 6. And the ſea-coaſt ſhall be dwellings and cottages for ſhepherds, &c.] That tract of land which lay on the coaſt of the Mediteranean ſea, inhabited by the Philiſtines, ſhould now become ſo deſolate; that inſtead of towns and cities full of merchants and ſea-faring perſons, and houſes full of inhabitants, and warehouſes full of goods, there ſhould now only be ſeen a few huts and cottages for ſhepherds to dwell in, to ſhelter them from the heat by day, and where they watched their flocks by night, and took their proper repoſe and reſt. The laſt word is by ſome rendered, ditches[i]; which were dug by them to receive rain-water for their uſe: or rather may ſignify, cottages dug by ſhepherds[k]; in ſubterraneous places, whither they retired in the heat of the day, to ſhelter themſelves from the ſcorching ſun; and ſome of them were ſo large as to receive their flocks alſo; ſuch was the cave of Polyphemus, as Bochart[l] obſerves, in which the cattel, namely the ſheep and goats, lay down and ſlept; and in Iceland ſuch are uſed to ſecure them from the cold; where we are told[m], there are caverns in the mountains capable of ſheltering an hundred ſheep or more; and whither they very cordially retreat in bad weather. Theſe holes are in ſuch mountains as have formerly burned, and are of infinite ſervice to them, both winter and ſummer; in the winter for ſhelter, and in the ſummer for very good paſtures, which they find in plenty all around. Such ſort of huts and cottages as theſe, in hot countries, Jerom ſeems to have reſpect unto, when ſpeaking of Tekoa, he ſays[n], there is not beyond it any little village, nor indeed any field-cottages like to ovens (ſubterraneous ones, Calmet[o] calls them) which the Africans call Mapalia: theſe Salluſt[p] deſcribes as of an oblong figure, covered with tiles, and like the keels of ſhips, or ſhips turned bottom upwards; and according to Pliny[q], they were moveable, and carried from place to place in carts and waggons; and therefore cannot be ſuch as before deſcribed; and ſo Dr. Shaw[r] ſays, the Bedoween Arabs now, as their great anceſtors the Arabians, live in tents called hhymas, from the ſhelter which they afford the inhabitants; and adds, they are the very ſame which the ancients call mapalia: and folds for flocks; in which they put them to lie down in at evening. The phraſes expreſs the great deſolation of the land; that towns ſhould be depopulated, and the land lie untilled, and only be occupied by ſhepherds and their flocks, who lead them from place to place, the moſt convenient for them.

℣. 7. And the coaſt ſhall be for the remnant of the houſe of Judah, &c.] The ſame tract of land, become ſo deſolate thro' the Chaldeans, ſhould in future time, when thoſe that remained of the Jews were returned from their captivity in Babylon, be inhabited by them. This was fulfilled in the times of the Maccabees, when the cities of Paleſtine being rebuilt, were ſubdued by the Jews, and fell into their hands; and it is plain, that in the times of the apoſtles thoſe places were inhabited by the Jews, as Gaza, Aſhdod, and others, Acts viii. 26, 40. and perhaps will have a further accompliſhment in the latter day, when they ſhall be converted, and return to their own land: they ſhall feed thereupon, in the houſes of Aſhkelon ſhall they lie down in the evening; either the ſhepherds ſhall feed their flocks here, and cauſe them to lie down in the evening, on the very ſpot of ground where the houſes of Aſhkelon ſtood. This place is very properly repreſented as on the ſea-coaſt; for ſo it was; Philo [s] ſays, who ſome time dwelt there, that it was a city of Syria by the ſea: or rather, the remnant of Iſrael ſhall feed and dwell here, and lie down in ſafety; and this was made good in a ſpiritual ſenſe, when the apoſtles of Chriſt preached the goſpel in thoſe parts, and were the inſtruments of converting many; and there they fed them with the word and ordinances, and cauſed them to lie down in green paſtures, in great eaſe and ſecurity: for the Lord their God ſhall viſit them; in a way of grace and mercy, bringing them out of Babylon into their own land, and enlarging their borders there; and eſpecially by raiſing up Chriſt, the horn of ſalvation for them; and by ſending his goſpel to them, and making it effectual to their converſion and ſalvation: and turn away their captivity; in a literal ſenſe from Babylon; and in a ſpiritual ſenſe from ſin, ſatan, and the law; and may have a further reſpect to their preſent captivity in both ſenſes.

℣. 8. I have heard the reproach of Moab, and the revilings of the children of Ammon, &c.] Two people that deſcended from Lot, thro' inceſt with his daughters; and are therefore mentioned together, as being of the ſame caſt and complexion, and bitter enemies to the people of the Jews; whom they reproached and reviled, for the ſake of their religion, becauſe they adhered to the word and worſhip of God: this they did when the Jews were moſt firmly attached to the ſervice of the true God; and the Lord heard it, and took notice of it; and put it down in the book of his remembrance, to puniſh them for it in due time; even he who hears, and ſees, and knows all things: whereby they have reproached my people; whom he had choſen, and avouched to be his people; and who were called by his name, and called on his name, and worſhipped him, and profeſſed to be his people, and to ſerve and obey him; and as ſuch, and becauſe they were the people of God, they were reproached by them; and hence it was ſo reſented by the Lord; and there being ſuch a near relation between God and them, he looked upon the reproaches of them as reproaches of himſelf: and magnified themſelves againſt their border; either they ſpoke reproachfully of the land of Iſrael, and the borders of it, and eſpecially of the inhabitants of the land, and particularly thoſe that bordered upon them; or they invaded the borders of their land, and endeavoured to add it to theirs; or as the Jews were carried captive by the Chaldeans, as they paſſed by the borders of Moab and Ammon, they inſulted them, and jeered them, and expreſſed great pleaſure and joy in ſeeing them in ſuch circumſtances; ſee Ezek. xxv. 3, 8. Jarchi repreſents the caſe thus; when the children of Iſrael went into captivity to the land of the Chaldeans, as they paſſed by the way of Ammon and Moab, they wept, and ſighed, and cried; and they diſtreſſed them, and ſaid, what do you afflict yourſelves for? why do ye weep? are not you going to the houſe of your father, beyond the river where your fathers dwelt of old? thus jeering them on account of Abraham's being of Ur of the Chaldees.

℣. 9. Therefore as I live, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, the God of Iſrael, &c.] The Lord here ſwears by himſelf, by his life; partly to ſhew how provoked he was at, and how grievouſly he reſented the injuries done to his people; and partly to obſerve the certain fulfilment of what is after declared; and it might be depended upon it would ſurely be done, not only becauſe of his word and oath, which are immutable; but becauſe of his ability to do it, as the Lord of hoſts, of armies above and below; and becauſe of the covenant-relation that ſubſiſted between him and Iſrael, being their God; and therefore would avenge the inſults and injuries done them: ſurely Moab ſhall be as Sodom, and the children of Ammon as Gomorrah; that is, ſhould be utterly deſtroyed, as theſe cities were; whoſe deſtruction is often made uſe of to expreſs the utter ruin and deſtruction of any other people; otherwiſe it is not to be ſuppoſed, that theſe countries were to be deſtroyed, or were deſtroyed in like manner by fire from heaven; the ſimilitude lies in other things after expreſſed: even the breeding of nettles, and ſalt-pits, and a perpetual deſolation; ſignifying, that the countries of Moab and Ammon ſhould be waſte, barren and uncultivated, as the above places were, where nothing but nettles grew, as do in great abundance in deſolate places; and where ſalt-pits ſhould be, or heaps of ſalt, as Kimchi interprets it; and wherever ſalt is found, as Pliny [t] ſays, it is a barren place, and produces nothing; tho' Herodotus [u] ſpeaks of places where were hillocks of ſalt, and very fruitful; and where the people uſed ſalt in manuring and improving their ground; which muſt be accounted for by the difference of climate and ſoil: this paſſage is produced by Reland [w], to prove that the lake Aſphaltites is not the place, as is commonly believed, where Sodom and Gommorah ſtood; ſince thoſe cities were not overflown or immerſed in, and covered with water, but were deſtroyed by fire and brimſtone, and ſo became deſolate; and had no herbs and plants, but nettles, and ſuch like things; and ſuch theſe countries of Moab and Ammon ſhould be, and ever remain ſo, at leaſt for a long time; and eſpecially ſhould be deſolate and uninhabited by the former poſſeſſors of it; ſee Deut. xxix. 23. this was fulfilled about five years after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, when Nebuchadnezzar, as Joſephus [x] relates, led his army into Cæleſyria, and made war upon the Ammonites and Moabites, and ſubjected them to him, who were the inhabitants of it, as the ſame writer ſays [y]: the reſidue of my people ple ſhall ſpoil them, and the remnant of my people ſhall poſſeſs them; that is, the Jews, the remnant of them that returned from Babylon: now theſe, in the times of the Maccabees, and thoſe that deſcended from them, ſeized on ſeveral places in theſe countries, and poſſeſſed them; for after theſe countries had been ſubdued, and made deſolate by Nebuchadnezzar, they became conſiderable nations again. Joſephus[z] ſays, the Moabites in his time were a great nation; tho' in the third century, as Origen[a] relates, they went under the common name of Arabians; and even long before the times of Joſephus, they were called Arabian Moabites, as he himſelf obſerves; when he tells us, that Alexander Jannæus ſubdued them, and impoſed a tribute on them; and who alſo gives us an account of the cities of the Moabites, which were taken, and demoliſhed by them, as Eſſebon, Medaba, Lemba, Oronas, Telithon, Zara, the valley of the Cilicians, and Pella; theſe he deſtroyed, becauſe the inhabitants would not promiſe to conform to the rites and cuſtoms of the Jews[b]; tho' Joſephus ben Gorion, who alſo makes mention of theſe cities as taken by the ſame prince, ſays[c], he did not demoliſh them, becauſe they entered into a covenant, and were circumciſed; and he ſpeaks of ten fortified cities of the king of Syria, added at the ſame time to the kingdom of Iſrael, not deſtroyed: likewiſe the children of Ammon, after their captivity by Nebuchadnezzar, became a powerful people: we read of the country of the Ammonites in 2 Mac. iv. 26. and in the times of Judas Maccabæus, Timotheus their general got together a ſtrong and numerous army, which being worſted by Judas, he took their city Jaſoron (or Jaſer, 1 Maccab. v. 6.) carried their wives and children captive, and burnt their city[d]; and this people, as well as the Moabites in the third century, as before obſerved, were ſwallowed up under the general name of Arabians; and neither of them are any more; all which has fulfilled this prophecy, and thoſe of Jeremiah and Amos concerning them: this likewiſe in a ſpiritual ſenſe might have a further accompliſhment in the firſt times of the goſpel, when it was preached in theſe countries by the apoſtles, and churches were formed in them; and may be ſtill further accompliſhed in the latter day, when thoſe parts of the world ſhall be poſſeſſed by converted Jews, and by Gentile chriſtians. Kimchi owns it may be interpreted as future, of what ſhall be in the times of the Meſſiah.

℣. 10. This ſhall they have for their pride, &c.] This calamity ſhall come upon their land, the land of the Moabites and Ammonites, for their pride, which often goes before a fall; and has frequently been the cauſe of the ruin of kingdoms and ſtates, and of particular perſons; and indeed ſeems to have been the firſt ſin of the apoſtate angels, and of fallen man. Of the pride of Moab ſee Iſ. xvi. 6: becauſe they have reproached, and magnified themſelves againſt the people of the Lord of hoſts; they looked with diſdain upon them, as greatly below them; and ſpoke contemptibly of them, of their nation, and religion; and made themſelves great, and ſet up themſelves above them, opened their mouths wide, and gave their tongues great liberties in blaſpheming and reviling them: what was done to them, is taken by the Lord as done to himſelf; ſee Jer. xlviii. 42.

℣. 11. The Lord will be terrible unto them, &c.] To the Moabites and Ammonites, in the execution of his judgments upon them, and make their proud hearts tremble; for with him is terrible majeſty; he is terrible to the kings of the earth, and cuts off the ſpirit of princes, Job xxxvii. 22. Pſ. lxxvi. 12. or, as Kimchi obſerves, this may be underſtood of the people of God reproached by the Moabites and Ammonites, by whom the Lord is to be feared and reverenced with a godly and filial fear: ſo it may be rendered, the Lord is to be feared by them[e]; and to this inclines the Targum, "the "fear of the Lord is to redeem them:" for he will famiſh all the gods of the earth; particularly of thoſe countries mentioned in the context, the Philiſtines, Moabites, Ammonites, Ethiopians, and Aſſyrians; as Dagon, Chemoſh, Moloch, Bel, and others; called gods of the earth, in diſtinction from the God of heaven, to whom they are oppoſed; and becauſe made of earthly matter, and worſhipped by earthly and carnal men; theſe the Lord, who is above them, and can deſtroy them at pleaſure, threatens to famiſh; or to bring leanneſs[f] upon them, as the word ſignifies; to bring them into a conſumption, and cauſe them to pine away gradually, by little and little, till they are no more; and that by reducing the number of their worſhippers, ſo that they ſhall not have the worſhip and honour paid them, nor the ſacrifices offered to them, ſuppoſed by the heathens to be the food of their gods; and this being the caſe, their prieſts would be ſtarved, and become lean, who uſed to be fat and plump. The Septuagint verſion renders it, he will deſtroy all the gods of the nations of the earth; which is approved of by Noldius, and preferred by him to other verſions. This had its accompliſhment in part, when theſe nations were ſubdued by Nebuchadnezzar; for idols were uſually demoliſhed, when a kingdom was taken; and more fully, when the goſpel was ſpread in the Gentile world by the apoſtles of Chriſt, and firſt miniſters of the word; whereby the oracles of the heathens were ſtruck dumb, and men were turned every where from the worſhip of idols; the idols themſelves were deſtroyed, and their temples demoliſhed, or converted to better uſes; and will have a ſtill greater accompliſhment in the latter day, at the converſion of the Jews, and the bringing in the fulneſs of the Gentiles, when the worſhip of idols will ceaſe every where. The Syriac verſion renders it, all the kings of the earth; very wrongly: and men ſhall worſhip him every one from his place; or, in his place[g]; that is, every man ſhall worſhip the true God in the place where he is; he ſhall not go up to Jeruſalem to worſhip, but in every place lift up holy hands to God, pray unto him, praiſe and ſerve him; the worſhip of God will be univerſal; he'll be king over all the earth, and his name and ſervice one, and ſhall not be limited and confined to any particular place, Mal. i. 11: even all the iſles of the heathen; or Gentiles; not only thoſe places, which are properly iſles, as ours of Great-Britain and Ireland; tho' there may be a particular reſpect had to ſuch, and eſpecially to ours, who have been very early and long favoured with the goſpel, and yet will be; but all places beyond the ſeas, or which the Jews went to by ſea, they called iſles.

℣. 12. Ye Ethiopians alſo, &c.] Or, as for ye Ethiopians alſo [h]; not the Ethiopians in Africa, beyond Egypt, at a diſtance from the land of Iſrael, and the countries before-mentioned; but the inhabitants of Arabia Chuſea, or Ethiopia, which lay near to Moab and Ammon; theſe ſhould not eſcape, but ſuffer with their neighbours, who ſometimes diſtreſſed the people of the Jews, and made war with them, being nigh them; ſee 2 Chron. xiv. 9. and xxi. 16: they ſhall be ſlain by my ſword; or, the ſlain of my ſword are they [i]; R. Japhet thinks here is a defect of the note of ſimilitude as, which ſhould be ſupplied thus, ye are, or ſhall be, the ſlain of my ſword, as they; as the Moabites and Ammonites; that is, theſe Ethiopians ſhould be ſlain, as well as they, by the ſword of Nebuchadnezzar; which is called the ſword of God, becauſe he was an inſtrument in the hand of God, for puniſhing the nations of the earth. This was fulfilled very probably when Egypt was ſubdued by Nebuchadnezzar, with whom Ethiopia was confederate, as well as near unto it, Jer. xlvi. 1. The deſtruction of theſe by the Aſſyrians is predicted Iſ. xx. 4.

℣. 13. And he will ſtretch out his hand againſt the north, &c.] Either the Lord, or Nebuchadnezzar his ſword; who, as he would ſubdue the nations that lay ſouthward, he would lead his army northward againſt the land of Aſſyria, which lay to the north of Judea, as next explained: and deſtroy Aſſyria; that famous monarchy, which had ruled over the kingdoms of the earth, now ſhould come to an end, and be reduced to ſubjection to the king of Babylon: and will make Nineveh a deſolation; which was the capital city, the metropolis of the Aſſyrian monarchy: Nahum propheſies at large of the deſtruction of this city: and dry like a wilderneſs; which before was a very watry place, ſituated by rivers, particularly the river Tigris; ſo that it was formerly like a pool of water, Nah. ii. 6, 8. but now ſhould be dry, like an heath or deſert. Dr. Prideaux places the deſtruction of Nineveh in the 29th year of Joſiah's reign; but biſhop Uſher earlier, in the 16th year of his reign; and if ſo, then Zephaniah, who here propheſies of it, muſt begin to propheſy in the former part of Joſiah's reign.

℣. 14. And flocks ſhall lie down in the midſt of her, &c.] In the midſt of the city of Nineveh; in the ſtreets of it, where houſes ſtood, and people in great numbers walked; but now only ſhould be ſeen the cottages of ſhepherds, and flocks of ſheep feeding, or lying down, as is before obſerved of the ſea-coaſt of the Philiſtines, ℣. 6: all the beaſts of the nations; that is, all ſorts of beaſts, eſpecially wild beaſts, in the ſeveral parts of the world, ſhould come and dwell here; inſtead of kings and princes, nobles, merchants, and the great men thereof, who once here inhabited, now there ſhould be beaſts of prey, terrible to come nigh unto; for theſe are to be underſtood properly and literally, and not figuratively of men, for their ſavageneſs and cruelty, comparable to beaſts: both the cormorant and the bittern ſhall lodge in the upper lintels of it; of the doors of the houſes in Nineveh: or, on its pomegranates [k]; the figures of theſe being often put on chapiters, turrets, pinacles, pillars, and poſts in buildings, and over porches of doors; and on theſe thoſe melancholy and doleful creatures here mentioned, which delight in ſolitary places, ſhould take up their abode. The cormorant is the ſame with the corvus aquaticus, or ſea-raven, about the ſize of a gooſe; it builds not only among rocks, but often on trees: what is called the ſhagge, is a ſpecies of it, or the leſſer cormorant, a water-fowl common on our northern coaſts; is ſomewhat larger than a common duck, and builds on trees, as the common cormorant [l]. Bochart [m] takes it to be the pelican, which is here meant; and indeed whatever bird it is, it ſeems to have its name from vomiting; and this is what naturaliſts [n] obſerve of the pelican, that it ſwallows down ſhell-fiſh, which being kept a while in its ſtomach, are heated, and then it caſts them up, which then open eaſily, and it picks out the fleſh of them: and it ſeems to delight in deſolate places, ſince it is called the pelican of the wilderneſs, Pſ. cii. 6. Iſidore ſays [o], it is an Ægyptian bird, dwelling in the deſert, by the river Nile, from whence it has its name; for it is called Canopus Ægyptus; and the Vulgate Latin verſion renders the word here, Onocrotalus, the ſame with the pelican; and Montanus tranſlates it, the pelican; and ſo do others. The bittern is a bird of the heron kind; it is much the ſize of a common heron; it is uſually found in ſedgy and reedy places, near water, and ſometimes in hedges; it makes a very remarkable noiſe, and from the ſingularity of it, the common people imagine it ſticks its beak in a reed, or in the mud, in order to make it; hence it is ſometimes called the mire-drum [p]. It is ſaid, it will ſometimes make a noiſe like a bull, or the blowing of a horn, ſo as to be heard half a German mile, or one hour's journey; hence it is by ſome called Botaurus, as if Bootaurus, becauſe it imitates the bellowing of a bull [q]. The Tigurine verſion renders it, the caſtor, or beaver [r]; but Bochart [s] takes it to be the hedge-hog; and ſo the word is rendered in the Vulgate Latin, Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic verſions, and by others; which is a ſolitary creature, and drives away all other animals from ſociety with it, by its prickles: their voice ſhall ſing in the windows; of deſolate houſes, the inhabitants being gone, who uſed to be ſeen looking out of them; but now theſe creatures before-named ſhould dwell here, and utter their doleful ſounds, who otherwiſe would not have come near them: deſolation ſhall be in the threſholds; there being none to go in and out over them. The Septuagint verſion, and which is followed by the Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions, render it, the ravens ſhall be in its gates; miſtaking חרב deſolation, for ערב a raven: for he ſhall uncover the cedar-work; the enemy Nebuchadnezzar, or Nabopolaſſar, when he ſhould take the city, would unroof the houſes cieled with cedar, and expoſe all the fine cedar-work within to the inclemencies of the air, which would ſoon come to ruin. All theſe expreſſions are deſigned to ſet forth the utter ruin and deſtruction tion of this vaſt and populous city; and which was ſo utterly deſtroyed, as Lucian ſays, that there is no trace of it to be found; and according to modern travellers, there are only heaps of rubbiſh to be ſeen, which are conjectured to be the ruins of this city; ſee the note on Nahum i. 8.

℣. 15. This is the rejoicing city that dwelt careleſly, &c.] Once exceeding populous, and the inhabitants full of mirth and gaiety, abounding with wealth and riches, and indulging themſelves in all carnal delights and pleaſures; and being well fortified, thought themſelves out of all danger, and were careleſs and unconcerned, not fearing any enemy that ſhould attack them; imagining their city was impregnable and invincible: theſe are the words of the prophet, concluding his prophecy concerning the deſtruction of this city, and having, by a ſpirit of prophecy, a foreſight of its ruin and deſolation; or of paſſengers, and what they ſhould ſay when they ſaw it lie in its ruins: that ſaid in her heart, I am, and there is none beſides me; or, is there any beſides me[s]? there is none, no city in the world to be compared to it for the largeneſs of the place, the ſtrength of its walls, the number of its inhabitants, its wealth and riches; at leaſt ſo ſhe thought within herſelf, and was elated with theſe things; and concluded it would never be otherwiſe with her; I am, and ſhall always continue ſo: how is ſhe become a deſolation! what a deſolate place is this! its walls broken down, its houſes demoliſhed, its wealth and riches plundered, its inhabitants deſtroyed; and now the hold and habitation of beaſts of prey, and hateful birds: a place for beaſts to lie down in! and not for men to dwell in: this is ſaid, either as wondering, or as rejoicing at it, as follows: every one that paſſeth by her; and ſees her in this ruinous condition: ſhall hiſs and wag his hand; in ſcorn and deriſion, as pleaſed with the ſight, and having no pity and compaſſion for her, remembring her cruelty to, and oppreſſion of, others, when in her proſperity; ſee Nahum iii. 19.

CHAP. III.

IN this chapter the character of the city of Jeruſalem, and its inhabitants in general, is drawn, as it would be, and as it was, in the times of Chriſt and his apoſtles, ℣. 1, 2. and of the principal perſons of it in particular; its princes, judges, prophets and prieſts, ℣. 3, 4. The hardneſs, impenitence and ſhameleſſneſs of this people are expoſed and aggravated, by the juſt Lord being among them; who, by his example and doctrine taught them otherwiſe; yet they were not amended, or made aſhamed, ℣. 5. nor received inſtruction, nor took warning by the judgments of God on other nations, ℣. 6, 7. wherefore the followers of God are called upon to wait his time, who would gather many people together, and deſtroy the whole land of Judea, ℣. 8. at which time he would ſend his goſpel among the Gentiles, who ſhould thereby be brought to the true worſhip and ſervice of God, ℣. 9, 10. tho' there ſhould be a remnant among the Jews, according to the election of grace, that ſhould be ſaved from that general calamity, ℣. 11, 12, 13. and the ſpiritual Iſrael are encouraged with promiſes of better times, when the Jews in general ſhould be converted and gathered into the church of God, have the preſence and protection of God with them, and deliverance from all their enemies, and be a praiſe among all people of the earth, ℣. 14—20.

℣. 1. Wo to her that is filthy and polluted, &c.] Meaning the city of Jeruſalem, and its inhabitants; not as before the Babyloniſh captivity, but after their return from it, under the ſecond temple, as Abarbinel owns; and even as in the times before, and at the coming of Chriſt, and the preaching of his apoſtles among them; as the whole ſeries of the prophecy, and the connexion of the ſeveral parts of it, ſhew; and there are ſuch plain intimations of the converſion of the Gentiles, and of ſuch an happy ſtate of the Jews, in which they ſhall ſee evil no more, as can agree with no other times, than the times of the goſpel, both the beginning and latter part of them. The character of this city, and its inhabitants, is, that it was filthy and polluted with murders, adulteries, oppreſſion, rapine, and other ſins: our Lord often calls them, a wicked and an adulterous generation; and yet they pretended to great purity of life and manners; and they were pure in their own eyes, tho' not waſhed from their filthineſs; they took much pains to make clean the outſide of the cup, but within were full of impurity, Matt. xxiii. 25—28. In the margin it is, wo to her that is gluttonous. The word is uſed for the craw or crop of a fowl, Lev. i. 16. hence ſome render it[t], wo to the craw; to the city that is all craw, to which Jeruſalem is compared, for its devouring the wealth and ſubſtance of others. The ſcribes and phariſees in Chriſt's time are ſaid to devour widows houſes, Matt. xxiii. 14. and this ſeems to be the ſin with which they were defiled, and here charged with. Some think the word ſignifies one that is publickly infamous; either made a public example of; or openly expoſed, as ſometimes filthy harlots are; or rather, one that has made herſelf infamous[u]; by her ſins and vices: to the oppreſſing city; that oppreſſed the poor, the widow, and the fatherleſs. This may have reſpect to the inhabitants of Jeruſalem ſtoning the prophets of the Lord ſent unto them; to the diſcouragements they laid the followers of Chriſt under, by not ſuffering ſuch to come to hear him that were inclined; threatning to caſt them out of their ſynagogues if they profeſſed him, which paſſed into a law; and to their killing the Lord of life and glory, and the perſecution of his apoſtles, miniſters, and people; ſee Matt. xxiii. 13, 37. John ix. 22. 1 Theſſ. ii. 14, 15, 16. Some render it, to the city a dove[w]; being like a ſilly dove without heart, as in Hoſ. vii. 11. R. Azariah[x] thinks Jeruſalem is ſo called, becauſe in its works it was like Babylon, which had for its military ſign on its ſtandard, a dove; ſee the notes on Jer.

℣. 2. She obeyed not the voice, &c.] Of his ſervants the prophets, as the Targum, by way of explanation adds, who warned her of her ſins, and of her ruin. The inhabitants of Jeruſalem hearkened not to the voice of John the Baptiſt, the forerunner of Chriſt, who gave notice of his coming; nor to the voice of Chriſt himſelf, who ſtretched out his hand all the day to a diſobedient and gainſaying people; nor to the voice of his apoſtles, whoſe doctrines they contradicted and blaſphemed; and put away the word of God from them, thereby judging themſelves unworthy of eternal life: ſhe received not correction; by the rod, by the judgments of God upon her: or inſtruction[y]; by the goſpel preached to her inhabitants. So the Targum interprets it, "ſhe received not doctrine;" the doctrine of baptiſm, repentance, and remiſſion of ſins, preached by John; but rejected the counſel of God by him againſt themſelves, Luke vii. 31. nor the doctrine and inſtruction of Chriſt and his apoſtles, tho' of more worth than gold and ſilver; but on the contrary ſlighted and deſpiſed it, and rejected it with the utmoſt contempt: ſhe truſted not in the Lord; not in the word of the Lord, as the Targum; the eſſential word Chriſt Jeſus; the word made fleſh, and dwelling among them; they truſted in the law of Moſes, and in their obedience to it; in their rites and ceremonies, and in the obſervance of them, and the traditions of their elders; they truſted in the fleſh, in their carnal privileges; in their own legal righteouſneſs, and in themſelves, that they were righteous, and deſpiſed others; and particularly the righteouſneſs of Chriſt they ſubmitted not unto; they truſted not in him, nor in that; tho' they were told, that if they believed not that he was the Meſſiah, they ſhould die in their ſins: ſhe drew not near to her God; Immanuel, God manifeſt in the fleſh, who was promiſed to the Jews, and ſent unto them, whom their fathers expected, and whoſe God he was, and theirs alſo; being in his human nature of them, and God over all bleſſed for ever; ſo far were they from drawing near to him, and embracing him, that they hid, as it were, their faces from him; they would not come to him for life and light, for grace, righteouſneſs and ſalvation; nor even to hear him preach, nor ſuffer others to do the ſame; but as much as in them lay hindered them from attending his miniſtry, word and ordinances. The Targum is, "ſhe drew not nigh to "the worſhip of her God."

℣. 3. Her princes within her are roaring lions, &c.] Or, as roaring lions; there being a defect of the note of ſimilitude; which is ſupplied by the Targum, Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions. This is to be underſtood, not of the princes of the blood; but of civil magiſtrates in common; the members of the grand Sanhedrim; the princes of the Jewiſh world, that crucified the Lord of glory; and who gaped upon him with their mouths like ravening and roaring lions, as is foretold they ſhould, Pſ. xxii. 12, 13. and who breathed out threatnings and ſlaughter againſt the diſciples of Chriſt; and by their menaces endeavoured to frighten and deter them from preaching in his name, and from a profeſſion of him; ſee 1 Cor. ii. 8. Acts iv. 5, 6, 18. and v. 27, 28: her judges are evening-wolves; or like them, cruel, voracious, never ſatiſfied; eſpecially are very ravenous in the evening, having had no food all day; not daring to go abroad in the day-time to ſeek their prey; ſee Jer. v. 6. The Septuagint and Arabic verſions read, wolves of Arabia; but wrongly; ſee the note on Hab. i. 8. ſuch rapacious, covetous judges were there in Chriſt's time; who gives us an inſtance in one, by which we may judge of the reſt; who feared not God, nor regarded men, Luke xviii. 2. ſuch as theſe were hungry and greedy after gifts and bribes to pervert judgment, and to devour the poor, the widow, and the fatherleſs, on whom they had no mercy: they gnaw not the bones till the morrow; or rather, in the morning[z]; that is, either they leave not the bones till the morning, as Jarchi and Kimchi interpret it; they are ſo hungry, that they eat up bones and all at once, and reſerve nothing for the next day; which expreſſes both the greedineſs of theſe judges, and the total conſumption of the eſtates of men made by them: or elſe the ſenſe is, that not having gnawn any bones in the morning, or eat any thing that day, hence they are ſo greedy in the evening; and ſo this laſt clauſe gives a reaſon, why evening-wolves are ſo voracious; for which ſuch cruel judges are compared to them.

℣. 4. Her prophets are light and treacherous, &c.] The falſe prophets, as the Targum and Kimchi explain it: theſe ſeem to deſign the lawyers ſpoken of in the New Teſtament, whoſe buſineſs it was to interpret the law to the people; theſe were light men, good for nothing, of no worth and value; light in knowledge, as Kimchi gives the ſenſe of the word; men of no brains; empty headed men, that had no ſubſtantial knowledge; giddy, unſtable and inconſtant, and compliant with the humours and vices of the people; men of no gravity in their countenance, ſpeech and converſation. Schultens[a], from the uſe of the word in the Arabic language, renders it, proud, as theſe men were, proud boaſters; for tho' they had but a ſuperficial knowledge of things, they boaſted of much, and carried it with an haughty and inſolent air to the common people: and they were treacherous to God, and to his truths, and to the ſouls of men, and took away the key of knowledge from them; and particularly were ſo to Chriſt, of whom they were the betrayers and murderers, delivering him up into the hands of the Gentiles to be ſcourged and crucified, Matt. xx. 18, 19: her prieſts have polluted the ſanctuary; the temple; by ſelling, or ſuffering to be ſold in it, various things, whereby it became a den of thieves, which once was called an houſe of prayer, Matt. xxi. 12, 13. and alſo our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, of whom the ſanctuary or temple was a type, by denying, blaſpheming and reproaching him, and by ſhedding his blood: they have done violence to the law; by not teaching it as they ſhould; and by their falſe gloſſes, ſenſes and interpretations of it; and by the traditions of the elders they preferred unto it, and whereby they made it void; ſee Matt. v. and xv.

℣. 5. The juſt Lord is in the midſt thereof, &c.] In the midſt of the city of Jeruſalem, where thoſe princes, judges, prophets and prieſts were, that behaved ſo ill, and ſaw and obſerved all their evil actions; and yet they were not deterred from them by his preſence, even tho' he is the juſt and holy one, who loves righteouſneſs, and hates iniquity, and will puniſh for it; nor were they directed and allured to do what is righteous and good by his example. This character of the juſt Lord well agrees with Chriſt, who is perfectly righteous in both his natures, and in the execution of his offices; and is the author of righteouſneſs to his people; and this is to be underſtood of his incarnation and perſonal preſence in human nature in Jeruſalem, and in the temple, where he taught his doctrine, and wrought his miracles: he will not do iniquity; Chriſt was holy in his nature, harmleſs in his life; he knew no ſin; he did not commit any; no violence was done by him, or guile found in him; he was not guilty of ſin againſt God, nor of doing any injury to men; and ſhould have been imitated by the men of the age in which he lived, as well as by others; and ſhould have been valued and eſteemed, and not traduced and vilified as he was, as if he had been the worſt of men: every morning doth he bring his judgment to light; the doctrine of the goſpel, which he ſet in the cleareſt light, and preached with the greateſt conſtancy, day after day, morning by morning, and very early in the morning, when the people came to hear him in the temple; and he continued in it all the day; he waking morning by morning to this ſervice, as was predicted of him, Iſ. l. 4. ſee Luke xxi. 37, 38: he faileth not; in this work of preaching the word, with the greateſt evidence and aſſiduity: but the unjuſt knoweth no ſhame; thoſe unjuſt perſons, who aſperſed the character of Chriſt, and traduced his doctrine and miracles; tho' there was nothing in his life, nor in his miniſtry, that could be juſtly blamed; yet they bluſhed not at their ſin and wickedneſs; and tho' they were ſharply reproved by him, and their errors in principle, and ſins in practice, were expoſed by him, yet they were not aſhamed; ſuch were the hardneſs and obduracy of their hearts.

℣. 6. I have cut off the nations, &c.] Utterly deſtroyed them, as the Philiſtines, Moabites, Ethiopians, and Aſſyrians, as in the preceding chapters; all which were done before the coming of Chriſt in the fleſh; and by which inſtances the Jews ſhould have took warning, leſt by their ſins they ſhould provoke the Lord to deſtroy their nation, city and temple: their towers are deſolate; built on their frontiers, or on the walls of their cities to defend them; theſe were demoliſhed, and laid waſte, and of no uſe: or, their corners [b]; towers being uſually built on the angles or corners of walls. Some interpret this of their princes, nobles and great men, who were deſtroyed; ſee Zech. x. 4: I made their ſtreets waſte, that none paſſeth by; the ſtreets of their cities, the houſes being pulled down by the enemy, the rubbiſh of them lay in the ſtreets, ſo that there was no paſſing for any; and indeed the houſes being demoliſhed, the ſtreets were no more in form: their cities are deſtroyed, ſo that there is no man, that there is none inhabitant; the houſes being burnt with fire, or pulled down, and plundered of the goods and ſubſtance in them; and the people cut off by famine, peſtilence or ſword; and the reſt carried captive, there was ſcarce a man or inhabitant left; ſo general was the deſtruction.

℣. 7. I ſaid, ſurely thou wilt fear me, &c.] This is ſpoken after the manner of men; as if God ſhould ſay within himſelf, and reaſon in his own mind, upon a view of things: ſurely the people of the Jews will take notice of my judgments executed on other nations, and will ſtand in awe of me, on account of them; and fear to offend me, leſt the ſame calamities ſhould come upon them: this, humanely ſpeaking, might be reaſonably thought would be the caſe: thou wilt receive inſtruction; by theſe judgments, taking warning by them; repent, reform, and amend, and thereby eſcape the like: ſo their dwelling ſhould not be cut off; or, its dwelling; the dwelling of the city of Jeruſalem, the houſes in it; the dwelling places of the inhabitants of it; the ſingular being put for the plural; unleſs the temple ſhould be meant, as Abendana interprets it; and ſo it may be rendered, his dwelling [c]; their houſe, which was left deſolate to them, becauſe they feared not the Lord; nor received inſtruction by the example of others; nor repented of their ſins, and altered their courſe of life; which, if done, their dwelling would have been preſerved, Matt. xxiii. 38: howſoever I puniſhed them; or viſited [d] them; chaſtized them in a gentle manner, in order to reform them, but in vain. Some render it, all which I committed to them [e]; the oracles of God, his word and ordinances, his promiſes, and the bleſſings of his goodneſs, which he depoſited with them, in order to do them good, and bring them to repentance. The Targum is, "all the good things which I have ſaid "unto them (or promiſed them), I will bring unto "them;" and to the ſame ſenſe Jarchi. The goodneſs of God ſhould have brought them to repentance, yet it did not: but they roſe early, and corrupted all their doings; they were diligent and induſtrious, eager and early in the commiſſion of ſins, in doing corrupt and abominable works; receiving and tenaciouſly adhering to the traditions of the elders; ſeeking to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs, not ſubmitting to Chriſt's; rejecting him the true Meſſiah; blaſpheming his doctrines, deſpiſing his ordinances, and perſecuting his people; beſides other vices, which abounded among them; for which the wrath of God came upon them to the uttermoſt, as expreſſed in the following verſe.

℣. 8. Therefore wait ye upon me, ſaith the Lord, &c.] Or nevertheleſs [f]: this is ſaid to the diſciples and followers of Chriſt among the Jews; for there were ſome few that did fear the Lord, and received his doctrine, and ſubmitted to his ordinances, and walked in his ways; and theſe are encouraged to wait upon the Lord; upon the word of the Lord, as the Targum; or for him, and to expect that he would appear, and work ſalvation and deliverance for them, when diſtreſs ſhould come upon the unbelieving Jews: until the day that I riſe up to the prey; until the day that he roſe from the dead, quickly after which he aſcended to heaven, leading captivity captive; ſatan, and his principalities and powers, which he made a prey and ſpoil of upon the croſs: or, till I riſe up for a teſtimony, or witneſs [g]; of his being the true Meſſiah; for his reſurrection from the dead was the ſignal he gave as a teſtimony of it, Matt. xii. 39, 40. Some render it, till I riſe up to perpetuity; or, for ever [h]; for when Chriſt roſe from the dead, he roſe to an immortal life, never to die more; and ever live he does to make interceſſion for his people, to ſecure their happineſs for them, and to preſerve them unto it; and therefore they have great encouragement to wait upon him, and for him: for my determination is to gather the nations, that I may aſſemble the kingdoms; not the Chaldeans or Babylonians, as ſome; nor the armies of Gog and Magog, as Kimchi; but the Romans under Titus Veſpaſian, with whom were people of many nations, who came againſt Jeruſalem, acccording to the decree, will and appointment of God: to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger; not upon the nations and kingdoms aſſembled; but by them upon the inhabitants of Jeruſalem and Judea, againſt whom they would be gathered; who had corrupted their doings, and provoked the Lord to ſtir up, and pour out all his wrath upon them, in utterly deſtroying their nation, city and temple: and the apoſtle ſpeaking of the ſame thing, at leaſt of the beginning of it, calls it, wrath upon them to the uttermoſt; and which anſwers to the expreſſions of the Lord's indignation, and all his fierce anger here uſed, 1 Theſſ. ii. 16: for all the earth ſhall be devoured with the fire of my jealouſy; not the whole world, and the ſeveral nations of it; but the whole land of Judea, and its inhabitants. The ſame phraſe is uſed of the deſtruction of it by the Babylonians, ch. i. 18. and which ſhews, that not that deſtruction, but the deſtruction by the Romans, is here meant; or otherwiſe a tautology is here committed; but the following words ſhew clearly that this reſpects, not the former, but the latter deſtruction of Jeruſalem; ſince a pure language was not given to the nations or Gentiles after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by the Babylonians; but has been ſince it was deſtroyed by the Romans; and which was in a few years after Chriſt's reſurrection from the dead, predicted in the beginning of this verſe; by which may be obſerved, the connexion of things in this prophecy.

℣. 9. For then will I turn to the people a pure language, &c.] That is, at or about the time of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by the Romans; when the Jews, both in their own land, and in the Gentile world, would have the goſpel firſt preached to them, but would reject it; upon which the apoſtles and firſt miniſters of the word would turn to the Gentiles, as the Lord commanded them; when he would turn or change his ſpeech and language towards them, and their ſpeech and language towards him would be turned and changed alſo: for the words may be taken either way; either of God's ſpeech to the Gentiles, which is his goſpel ſent unto them; as it was quickly after Chriſt's reſurrection from the dead, and the rejection of it by the Jews; for many hundred years the Lord took no notice of them; winked at the times of their ignorance; ſent no prophet to them, nor any meſſage by any one to inſtruct them; yea he ſpake roughly to them, in a providential way; in the way of his judgments; particularly they raging and imagining vain things againſt his Meſſiah, he ſpake to them in his wrath, and vexed them in his ſore diſpleaſure; ſee Acts xvii. 30. Pſ. ii. 1, 5. but now he alters the tone of his voice, changes his language, and ſends his goſpel to them; which is a language of love, grace and mercy; of peace, pardon, righteouſneſs and ſalvation; encouraging ſouls to believe in Chriſt for thoſe things: and this is a pure ſpeech or language; a pure doctrine, fetched out of the ſacred ſcriptures; free from the droſs of error; unmixed, conſiſtent, and all of a piece; and which has a tendency to promote purity of heart, life and converſation: or, is a choice ſpeech [h], as ſome render it; it ſpeaks of choice things, more valuable than gold and ſilver, pearls and precious ſtones; the doctrines of it being an ineſtimable treaſure, the unſearchable riches of Chriſt; and this, by the commiſſion of Chriſt, upon his reſurrection from the dead, was ordered to be ſpoke unto all nations, Matt. xxviii. 19. Mark xvi. 15. or this may reſpect the different language ſpoken by the converted Gentiles, when the goſpel ſhould come with power to them; who ſhould ſpeak, as all converted perſons do, a different language than they ſpake before; inſtead of ſwearing and curſing, lying, filthy and frothy ſpeaking, now they ſpeak the language of repentance towards God, confeſſing their ſins, and praying for the pardon of them; the language of faith in Chriſt, firſt in a more weak and feeble manner, then with more ſtrength and aſſurance, believing their intereſt in him, and in the everlaſting love of God, and the covenant of grace; the language of love to Chriſt, his people, truths and ordinances; a ſoul-abaſing, Chriſt-exalting, and free grace magnifying-language; the language of praiſe and gratitude for mercies received, temporal and ſpiritual; and eſpecially for Chriſt, and grace, and glory by him: they then ſpeak the language of gracious experience to one another; and in the language of the ſcriptures, in the taught words of the Holy Ghoſt; and in common converſation, their language is pure, and free from that corruption and vitioſity it was before tainted with: this ariſes from pureneſs of heart; from a rich experience of the grace of God; from the teachings of the Spirit of God; and which bewrays a man, and ſhews that he has been with Jeſus; this is the language of Canaan, Iſ. xix. 18: that they may all call upon the name of the Lord; which ſometimes takes in the whole worſhip and ſervice of God; but ſince that is after expreſſed, it rather intends in particular, prayer to God; for which men are fitted and qualified, by having a pure language turned to them; or thro' the goſpel coming with power on them; and by virtue of efficacious grace converting them, and cauſing them to ſpeak differently from what they did before; and then it is their voice is heard in prayer to God; and which is delightful and pleaſant to him, Acts ix. 11. Cant. ii. 14. and this is the caſe of all ſuch that have this pure language; there is not a prayerleſs ſoul among them: it follows; to ſerve him with one conſent; or, with one ſhoulder [i]; the alluſion is, either to bearers of burdens, that join together in carrying any burden, who put ſhoulder to ſhoulder as they carry it; or elſe to oxen drawing in a yoke, who are yoked together ſhoulder by ſhoulder; hence the Septuagint verſion renders it, under one yoke; in which it is followed by the Syriac and Arabic verſions. The phraſe ſignifies, that the Gentiles having the goſpel brought to them, and they called by it, and all ſpeaking the ſame language, ſhould join in fellowſhip with one another, and ſing the praiſes of God together; agree in prayer to aſk of God the ſame things; ſtand faſt in the faith of the goſpel, and ſtrive for it, being of the ſame mind; meet conſtantly together ther to carry on the ſeveral branches of religious worſhip, and promote the Redeemer's intereſt; all drawing the ſame way, like a company of horſes in Pharaoh's chariots; having one heart, and one way given them to fear the Lord; and ſo with one mind, and one mouth glorify God; ſo Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it, with one heart, and one mind. This paſſage is applied to the times of the Meſſiah by the Jews, ancient and modern[k].

℣. 10. From beyond the rivers of Ethiopia, &c.] Either the African Ethiopia, or Arabia Chuſea, which lay between Judea and Egypt: here ſome particular places and people are mentioned, in whom the preceding prophecy would be fulfilled. If theſe rivers of Ethiopia are ſuch as ran in the midſt of the country, and ſo point at ſome parts of it, tho' on the other ſide of them; then this prophecy might have its accompliſhment, at leaſt, when the evangeliſt Matthew went thither, and preached the goſpel, and very likely the apoſtle Paul; as alſo when the Ethiopian eunuch was converted, who doubtleſs did what in him lay to promote the intereſt of Chriſt in thoſe parts. Ben Melech makes this parallel with, and illuſtrates it by Iſ. xviii. 1, 7. ſee the notes there; but if theſe deſign rivers on the furthermoſt borders of the country, which divided it from others, then Egypt, which lay beyond it, ſeems to be intended; and ſo the prophecy, in connexion with the foregoing verſe, is the ſame with Iſ. xix. 18. in that day ſhall five cities in the land of Egypt ſpeak the language of Canaan; of theſe rivers of Ethiopia, whether in Africa or Arabia Chuſea, ſee the note on Iſ. xviii. 1. The Targum renders it, "beyond the rivers of India:" my ſuppliants, even the daughter of my diſperſed; Aben Ezra, Kimchi, Abarbinel, and Ben Melech, take the words Atharai Bath-puſai, to be the proper name of a nation or family beyond the rivers of Ethiopia[l]; whereas, they are characters which deſcribe perſons there, who ſhould have the pure language turned to them, and call on the name of the Lord; even ſuch, who being made ſenſible of ſin, and of their danger; would be humble ſupplicants at the throne of grace, and pray to the Lord for the diſcovery and application of pardoning grace and mercy to them, agreeable to the prophecy in Pſ. lxviii. 31. princes ſhall come out of Egypt; Ethiopia ſhall ſoon ſtretch out her hands unto God; that is, in prayer: and theſe are the ſons and daughters of the Almighty, who are ſcattered abroad in the ſeveral parts of the world, and among the reſt in here; but as they are gathered together by Chriſt in redemption, ſo they are found out, and reached by efficacious grace in vocation, whether Jews or Gentiles. Some think the Jews are here meant, even the elect of God among them, who were diſperſed in ſeveral nations, and particularly in Egypt and Ethiopia; who were met with by the goſpel, and converted in the firſt times of it; to theſe Peter and James direct their epiſtles: and of whom, being called by grace, it is ſaid, they ſhall bring mine offering; themſelves as an offering to the Lord, ſouls and bodies, with all other ſpiritual ſacrifices of prayer, praiſe and well doing; and likewiſe ſuch perſons they may be the inſtruments of the converſion of, called the offering of the Gentiles, Rom. xv. 16.

℣. 11. In that day ſhalt thou not be aſhamed for all thy doings, wherein thou haſt tranſgreſſed againſt me, &c.] Becauſe theſe ſhall not be continued in, but repented of, and forſaken; and beſides, ſhall be forgiven, blotted out, covered, and remembered no more; ſo that they ſhall not be charged with them, condemned for them, or be confounded before God, angels and men, on account of them; not but that ſhame always ariſes from a true ſenſe of ſin; and the more, as it is beheld in the glaſs of pardoning love, which is a branch of true evangelical repentance, at leaſt a fruit and evidence of it, Ezek. xvi. 63. but then ſuch are not aſhamed to appear before God; but can with an holy confidence ſtand in his ſight, their ſins being pardoned, and their perſons juſtified. This reſpects the chriſtian church or churches in Judea, the few that believed in Chriſt, called in a following verſe the remnant of Iſrael, at the time when the generality of the people of the Jews rejected the Meſſiah, and their city and temple were deſtroyed, and the Lord turned the pure language of the goſpel to the Gentiles: for then I will take away out of the midſt of thee them that rejoice in thy pride; the ſcribes and phariſees, and thoſe that adhered to them of the Jewiſh nation, who rejoiced in thoſe things, which that people generally prided themſelves in, and boaſted of; their deſcent from Abraham; their obſervance of the rites and ceremonies of the law, and the traditions of their elders, and their external legal righteouſneſs; and they rejoiced in their boaſtings of theſe things, which rejoicing was evil; and they, in the pride of their hearts, deſpiſed Chriſt and his righteouſneſs, his goſpel, ordinances, and people, which were the things in which they tranſgreſſed againſt the Lord, and for which they were taken away by the ſword, famine and peſtilence, at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem: this is further explained by the next clauſe: and thou ſhalt no more be haughty becauſe of mine holy mountain; the temple; or, in[m] it; ſince it ſhould now be deſtroyed: the Jews gloried in the temple, and behaved proudly and haughtily on the account of it; reckoned themſelves ſecure, becauſe of that; and truſted and gloried in the ſacrifices there offered up, and the ſervices there performed; ſee Jer. vii. 4.

℣. 12. I will alſo leave in the midſt of thee an afflicted and poor people, &c.] Of a character juſt the reverſe of the proud and haughty, that ſhould be removed from Jeruſalem and Judea by death or captivity; theſe are they that ſhould be preſerved from the general calamity, as the chriſtians were, and were left in the church of God: theſe were an afflicted people, as the Lord's people in all ages are afflicted with a body of ſin; with the temptations of ſatan; with the hidings of God's face; with bodily infirmities, and with the reproaches and perſecutions of men; the firſt chriſtians, both among Jews and Gentiles, juſtly bore this character, eſpecially with reſpect to the laſt article: and they were alſo poor, for the moſt part the poor of this world, being ſtript of their worldly enjoyments for the ſake of Chriſt; but eſpecially poor in ſpirit, broken hearted, contrite, lowly ones; that had a mean opinion of themſelves, modeſt, meek and humble; ſenſible of their ſpiritual poverty, and ſeeking after the true riches of grace and glory. The Targum renders it, "a meek "people, and receiving injuries;" quietly and patiently: and they ſhall truſt in the name of the Lord; not in men, but in the Lord; not in deſcent from men, from the patriarchs, as the Jews were wont to do; not in Moſes, as they, in his law and obedience to it; not in any creature or creature-enjoyment; not in wealth and riches; nor in their own hearts, or in their own righteouſneſs; but in the name of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; in his perſon for acceptance with God; in his righteouſneſs for juſtification; in his blood for pardon and cleanſing; in his ſacrifice for atonement; in his fulneſs for ſupplies of grace; in his power and ſtrength for protection and preſervation; and in his obedience, ſufferings and death for ſalvation and eternal life. This truſt ſignifies, according to the ſenſe of the word [n], a betaking of themſelves to Chriſt as a refuge; a hiding themſelves under the ſhadow of his wings; under his perſon, blood and righteouſneſs, where they are covered and ſheltered from the avenging juſtice of God; from the curſes of the law, and wrath to come: it is a committing themſelves into the hands of Chriſt; a leaning and ſtaying upon him, expecting grace and glory from him; truſting him with all they have, and for all they want in time and eternity: and this the choſen, redeemed and called ones, ſhall do; for thro' the efficacious grace of God, faith is given to them, and wrought in them; and this is drawn forth into act and exerciſe, by the ſame grace, and is continued in them, and ſhall never fail thro' the powerful interceſſion of Chriſt for them; they ſhall believe, and go on believing, to the ſaving of their ſouls.

℣. 13. The remnant of Iſrael ſhall not do iniquity, &c.] This is the remnant, according to the election of grace, the few the Lord reſerved for himſelf, left in the land, and in his church, for his own glory; who being truly convinced of ſin, and brought to believe in Chriſt, ſhould leave and forſake their former courſe of ſinning; not that they ſhould be without ſin, or none be committed by them; but ſhould not live in it, and be workers of it; make a trade of ſinning, and continue therein; or ſhould not commit the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, as great numbers of the Jews did, in rejecting Jeſus as the Meſſiah, againſt clear evidence, and the light of their own conſciences: nor ſpeak lies; in common talk and converſation; which a child of God, a true believer in Chriſt, a real chriſtian ſhould not, and dare not do, Iſ. lxiii. 8. or doctrinal lies, lies in hypocriſy; ſuch doctrines as are not of the truth of the goſpel, but contrary to it; ſuch as the doctrine of juſtification by works; atonement by ceremonial ſacrifices; acceptance with God, thro' the merits of their fathers; and keeping the traditions of the elders; and other Jewiſh lies and fables of the ſame ſtamp; but rejected by thoſe who have embraced the truth, as it is in Jeſus: neither ſhall a deceitful tongue be found in their mouth; having clean hearts created, and right ſpirits renewed in them; being Iſraelites indeed, in whom there is no guile, and true followers of Jeſus, in whom nothing of this kind could be found: for they ſhall feed; like a flock of ſheep, to which they may be compared for their innocence and harmleſſneſs, meekneſs and patience; feed in the fat paſtures of the word, and ordinances of Chriſt, under the care and guidance of him the good ſhepherd; and ſo go in and out, and find paſture, food, and fulneſs of it, in him, his fleſh, and blood; in his precious truths, and goſpel-proviſions made in his houſe: and lie down; in green paſtures of ordinances, beſides the ſtill waters of everlaſting love and divine grace, and in the good fold of the church; all which is a reaſon why they do not, and cannot ſin, as others do; nor tell lies, and be guilty of deceit and falſhood; for they are better taught; and the grace of God in giving them ſpiritual food and reſt, influences and engages them to ſuch a conduct and behaviour: or, therefore they ſhall feed [o], &c. being truly gracious and ſincere ſouls, who cannot indulge themſelves in ſin, nor act a falſe and deceitful part: and none ſhall make them afraid; of feeding in thoſe paſtures, and lying down in thoſe folds; or ſhall deter them from an attendance on the word and ordinances; or joining in fellowſhip with the churches of Chriſt therein; neither ſatan, the roaring lion, nor falſe teachers, and perſecuting tyrants, thoſe grievous wolves, and cruel bears; or ſo frighten them, that in their fright they ſhall tell lies, and uſe deceit.

℣. 14. Sing, O daughter of Zion, &c.] The congregation of Zion, as the Targum; the church of Chriſt in goſpel-times, which has great reaſon to ſing and rejoice, becauſe of the coming of Chriſt, redemption by him, and all other benefits and bleſſings of grace; becauſe of the goſpel, and the ordinances of it, and the numbers of ſouls converted, both among Jews and Gentiles; eſpecially the church in the latter day is here called upon to ſing for joy, when the Jews will be converted; to which theſe words, and what follow relate: ſhout, O Iſrael; the ten tribes, as Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it; which ſhall now return, and all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved, Rom. xi. 26. and therefore juſt cauſe of ſhouting, and of keeping a jubilee on that account: be glad and rejoice with all the heart, O daughter of Jeruſalem; the metropolis of the two tribes; for now the children of Iſrael and of Judah ſhall be together, and ſeek the Lord their God, and the true Meſſiah, and find him; and ſhall embrace him, profeſs and ſerve him; which will be matter of great joy; and this will be ſincere and hearty, and devoid of all hypocriſy. Several terms are uſed, deſcribing the people of the Jews, to comprehend them all; and ſeveral words to expreſs their joy, in order to ſet forth the greatneſs of it, as their happy caſe would require; as follows:

℣. 15. The Lord hath taken away thy judgments, &c.] Both outward and inward; not only exile, poverty, contempt and reproach, among the nations of the earth; but hardneſs of heart, blindneſs of mind, impenitence and unbelief, to which the Jews are now given up, in a judicial way; but at this time theſe ſhall be removed, thro' the goodneſs of God unto them, and the power of divine grace upon them: they will be brought to a ſenſe of ſin, and an acknowledgment of it; their iniquities will be pardoned; and the cauſe being removed, the effects will ceaſe; and all calamities, corrections, and puniſhment will end; and they will be put into the poſſeſſion of their own land, and enjoy all the privileges of the church of God; and ſo will have juſt reaſon to ſing, ſhout and rejoice:

he hath caſt out thine enemy; that is, the Lord has removed the enemy that was in poſſeſſion of their land, and ſo made way, and prepared it for them; he has ſwept him away, as the word [p] ſignifies, with great force, with much eaſe, and like ſo much dirt and filth; he ſtood in their way, nor could they have eaſily removed him; but the Lord did it, or will do it; tho' it may be by inſtruments, by means of the chriſtian princes. This is to be underſtood of the eaſtern antichriſt, the Turk, now in poſſeſſion of the land of Iſrael; but ſhall be obliged to quit it, when this prophecy ſhall take place, for a reaſon following: the king of Iſrael, even the Lord is in the midſt of thee; that is, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the true Meſſiah; one of whoſe titles is the king of Iſrael, of the ſpiritual Iſrael, king of ſaints, both Jews and Gentiles; in whoſe hearts he rules by his Spirit and grace; and to this paſſage the Jews in Chriſt's time ſeem to have reſpect, allowing this to be the character of the Meſſiah, Matt. xxvii. 42. and alſo Nathanael, John i. 49. now at this time Chriſt will be in the midſt of the converted Jews, by his ſpiritual and gracious preſence, as their king to reign over them, to whom they will be ſubject; and to protect and defend them, and deliver them out of the hands of all their enemies; and ſo he is in all his churches, and will be to the end of the world: thou ſhalt not ſee evil any more; the evil of affliction or puniſhment; the evil of captivity, diſgrace and contempt. This ſhows that this prophecy does not reſpect the Babyloniſh captivity, and deliverance from that; for ſince that time, they have ſeen evil by Antiochus Epiphanes, in the times of the Maccabees; and by the Romans; and have had a large and long experience of it; but when they are converted, and returned to their own land in the latter day, all their afflictions and troubles will be at an end, they'll know them no more. The Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, thou ſhalt not fear evil any more. So the Targum, "thou ſhalt not be afraid from "before evil any more." In the ſame ſenſe Aben Ezra underſtands it, "thou ſhalt not be afraid "of the enemy any more;" taking the word to come from another root [q].

℣. 16. In that day it ſhall be ſaid to Jeruſalem, fear thou not, &c.] Don't be afraid of any enemies; neither outward ones, the armies of Gog and Magog, the Turk, who will threaten, and will attempt to diſpoſſeſs them of their land, now returned to it; nor inward and ſpiritual enemies, ſin, ſatan, death and hell, being all vanquiſhed and ſubdued by Chriſt: this will be ſaid, not by the enemies themſelves, who will confeſs they have no power to ſtand before the mighty God, as Aben Ezra; but either by the prophets of the Lord, or by the people themſelves, encouraging one another, every man his neighbour, as Kimchi; or rather by the Lord himſelf, as the Septuagint and Arabic verſions ſupply it, "the Lord ſhall ſay to "Jeruſalem;" this will be ſaid at the time of the Jews converſion, when re-inſtated in their own land, and ſhall be threatened with another remove from it, which they will have no reaſon to fear: and to Zion, let not thine hands be ſlack; weak, remiſs, hang down thro' fear of mind, and fainting of ſpirit; and ſo unfit to meet the enemy, or perform duty; but on the contrary, pluck up a good heart, be of good courage, fear not the enemy, be vigorous, active and diligent in the performance of the ſervice of the Lord, animated by the following conſiderations.

℣. 17. The Lord thy God in the midſt of thee is mighty, &c.] Every word carries in it ſomething very encouraging to the church and people of God; and is an antidote againſt thoſe fears and faintings they are ſubject to; Chriſt is in the midſt of them; near at hand to ſupport and ſupply them, to aſſiſt and ſtrengthen them, to protect and defend them; he is not only near by his eſſential preſence, which is every where; and by his providential preſence, which is concerned with all his creatures; but by his gracious preſence, peculiar to his church and people; and which gives them unſpeakable joy, and is a ſufficient ſecurity from all fears and diſmayings; ſee Iſ. xli. 10. and he, who is in the midſt of them, is the Lord, Jehovah, the being of beings, eternal, immutable, and all-ſufficient, poſſeſſed of all divine perfections; and their God, God in their nature, Immanuel God with us; and who is mighty, the Almighty God, the mighty Mediator, who has all power in heaven and earth; and as man, the man of God's right-hand, made ſtrong for himſelf, and ſo able to ſave his people to the uttermoſt; to deliver them out of the hands of every enemy; to raiſe up his intereſt when ever ſo low, and to maintain and ſupport it; to help and aſſiſt his people in every duty and ſervice he calls them to: he will ſave; he is as willing to ſave, as he is able; he readily undertook in council and covenant to ſave the choſen ones; he came in the fulneſs of time to ſeek and to ſave that which was loſt; he has wrought out ſalvation for them, and ſees that is is applied unto them, and will come again to put them into the full poſſeſſion of it: he ſaves them freely, fully and everlaſtingly; he ſaves them from ſin, ſatan, the law, hell and wrath, and every ſpiritual enemy; nor has the church of Chriſt any thing to fear from any temporal enemy; the converted Jews will have no reaſon to fear the Turk that will come againſt them with a vaſt army; for Chriſt, who will be in the midſt of them, and at the head of them, will ſave them from him; to which ſalvation this paſſage has chiefly a reſpect: he will rejoice over thee with joy; with exceeding great joy, not to be conceived of, or expreſſed; as a bridegroom rejoiceth over his bride: this will be the time of the open marriage of the Lamb with the Jewiſh church; and there will be ſtrong expreſſions of joy on this occaſion; Chriſt will rejoice over them to do them good; and there will be ſuch ſingular inſtances of his goodneſs to them, as will abundantly ſhew the joy he will have in them: he will reſt in his love; continue in his love, without any variation or change; nothing ſhall ſeparate from it; it ſhall always remain the ſame; he will take up his contentment and ſatisfaction in it; he will ſolace himſelf with it; it will be a pleaſing thing to him to love his people, and to ſhew it to them; he will take the utmoſt complacency and delight in expreſſing his love by words and deeds unto them:

or, as ſome render it, he will be ſilent becauſe of his love [r]; and not upbraid them with their ſins; or reprove, correct and chaſtize them in his hot diſpleaſure; or ſay one word in a way of vindictive wrath; and he will make all others ſilent; every enemy, or whatever is contrary to them; ſuch is his great love to them [s]; he will forgive their iniquities, and cover their ſins, and in love to them caſt them behind his back: or, will be dumb [t]; and not ſpeak; as ſometimes perſons, when their affections are ſtrong, and their hearts are filled with love at the ſight of one they bear a great regard unto, are not able to ſpeak a word. The phraſe expreſſes the greatneſs of Chriſt's love to his people; the ſtrength, fulneſs, and continuance of it: words ſeem to be wanted, and more are added: he will joy over thee with ſinging; there is a pleonaſm of joy in Chriſt's heart towards his people, and ſo a redundancy in his expreſſion of it; he rejoices with joy, and joys with ſinging; which ſhows how delighted he is with his people, as they are his choſen, redeemed, and called ones; as they have his own righteouſneſs upon them, and his own grace in them; they are his Hephzibah, in whom he delights; his Beulah, to whom he is married; and it is his love of complacency and delight, which is the ſource of all the grace and glory he beſtows upon them; ſee Iſ. lxii. 3, 4, 5. Luke xv. 23, 24, 25.

℣. 18. I will gather them that are ſorrowful for the ſolemn aſſembly, &c.] Who are grieved and troubled, becauſe they cannot meet at the time and place of religious worſhip, or attend the word and ordinances of the Lord; either thro' diſtance of place, or infirmity of body; or thro' the menaces and perſecutions of men: and to be prevented the uſe of the means of grace upon any account, is a great concern of mind to truly gracious ſouls: or who are filled with grief and ſorrow, for the appointed time [u]; for the time of the Jews deliverance from their preſent exile, and return to their own land, which ſeems to be delayed, and thought long; and ſo it may ſeem to ſome of them in diſtant parts, after they are converted; and for whoſe encouragement this is ſaid, that the Lord will in his own due time and way gather ſuch out of all places where they are, into his church, and among his people, to join with them in religious worſhip, and partake of all the ordinances and privileges of his houſe; and alſo gather them into their own land, and comfortably ſettle them there: who are of thee; belong to the church of Chriſt; or however have a right to, and meetneſs for, a place in it; are her true and genuine children, being born again; and which appears by the taſte they have for, and their deſire after, the word and ordinances: to whom the reproach of it was a burden; it being grievous and burdenſome to them, to hear the enemy reproach them with their exile and diſperſion; with their diſtance from the place of worſhip, and their want of opportunity of attending to it: this was intolerable, a burden too heavy for them; it was like a ſword in their bones, when they were aſked, where is your God? and where are the ordinances of divine worſhip? and when will it ever be that you will attend them? ſee Pſ. xlii. 1, 2, 3, 10.

℣. 19. Behold, at that time I will undo all that afflict thee, &c.] Or, I will do [w]; their buſineſs for them; ſlay them, as the Vulgate Latin verſion; and make an entire deſtruction of them, as the Targum; bring them to utter ruin. This muſt be underſtood of antichriſt, both eaſtern and weſtern, the Turk and pope, and all the antichriſtian ſtates that have afflicted the Jews, or ſhall attempt to diſtreſs them at the time of their converſion; and will be fulfilled at the time of the pouring out of the ſeven vials of God's wrath upon them, which will iſſue in the entire undoing and ruin of them, eſpecially the ſeventh and laſt of them; which, when poured out, will clear the world of all the enemies of Chriſt, his church, and people; and becauſe this will be a wonderful event, and of great moment and importance, hence the word, behold! is prefixed to it, as exciting attention, as well as a note of admiration and aſſeveration: and I will ſave her that halteth; that has ſinned, and is weak in faith, and cannot walk, at leaſt but haltingly; which is like a lame and maimed ſheep, of which there is danger of its being left behind and loſt; but the Lord here promiſes he'll take care of ſuch, and ſave them from all their ſins, and out of the hands of all their enemies; and bring them thro' all difficulties and diſcouragements into his church, and to their own land; they ſhall none of them be loſt, even the meaneſt and weakeſt of them, any more than the healthful and ſtrong: and gather her that was driven out; even every one that was ſcattered abroad in the ſeveral nations of the world; ſee the note on Mic. iv. 6, 7: and I will get them praiſe and fame in every land, where they have been put to ſhame; being converted, they ſhall be ſpoke well of every where; they ſhall be praiſed for their ingenuous acknowledgment of their ſins; for their ſincere repentance of them; and for their faith in Chriſt, and for their ready ſubmiſſion to his goſpel and ordinances; and the fame of their converſion ſhall be ſpread every where; and they ſhall be in great credit and eſteem in all chriſtian countries, where their name has been uſed for a taunt, and a proverb; and ſo, inſtead of their ſhame, as R. Moſes interprets it, they ſhall have glory and honour in all places.

℣. 20. At that time I will bring you again, even in the time that I gather you, &c.] That is, at the time that the Lord will gather them in effectual vocation to himſelf, and to his church, he will return them to their own land; and as ſoon as the Jews are converted, they'll not only be gathered into chriſtian churches, but will be gathered together in one body, and appoint themſelves one head; and will go up out of the ſeveral lands wherein they have been diſperſed, and enter into their own land, and poſſeſs it; at the ſame time they are made partakers of the grace of God, they will enjoy all their civil privileges and liberties; ſee Hoſ. i. 11: for I will make you a name, and a praiſe among all people of the earth; this is repeated from the preceding verſe, for the confirmation of it; and in connexion with the following clauſe, to ſhew when it will be: when I turn back your captivity before your eyes, ſaith the Lord; or captivities [x]; meaning not the ſeveral captivities of the kings of Judah in Babylon, as of Manaſſeh, Jehoiakim, Jechoniah, and Zedekiah; but the two-fold captivity of this people, literal and ſpiritual; their preſent outward exile from their own land, captivity and diſperſion among the nations; and their ſpiritual captivity or bondage, to ſin, ſatan, the law, and the traditions of their elders; from both which they will be delivered at one and the ſame time; and which will be notorious and manifeſt; what their eyes will ſee with pleaſure and admiration; and which may be depended upon will be done, ſince the Lord has ſaid it, whoſe purpoſes, promiſes and prophecies never fail of their accompliſhment: he is God omniſcient, and knows with certainty what will be done; he is God omnipotent, and can and will do, whatever he has determined, promiſed, or ſaid ſhould be done.

HAGGAI.

THIS part of ſacred ſcripture, is in ſome Hebrew copies called Sepher Haggai, the book of Haggai; in the Vulgate Latin verſion, the prophecy of Haggai; and in the Syriac and Arabic verſions, the prophecy of the prophet Haggai. His name comes from a word [a], which ſignifies to keep a feaſt; and, according to Jerom [b], ſignifies feſtival or merry; according to Hillerus [c], the feaſt of the Lord; and according to Cocceius [d], my feaſts: and the iſſue of his prophecy anſwered to his name; by which the people were encouraged to build the temple, whereby the feaſts of the Lord were reſtored and obſerved; and a particular feaſt appointed for the dedication of the temple. The notion entertained by ſome, that he was not a man, but an angel, founded on ch. i. 13. deſerves no regard; ſince the character there given of him, reſpects not his nature, but his office. Indeed no account is given of his parentage; very probably he was born in Babylon; and according to Pſeudo-Epiphanius [e] and Iſidore [f], he came from thence a youth to Jeruſalem, at the return of the Jews from their captivity. The time of his prophecy is fixed in ch. i. 1. to the ſecond year of Darius, that is, Hyſtaſpis; which, according to biſhop Uſher, was in A. M. 3485; and of the Julian period 4194; and in the 65th Olympiad; about 520 years before the birth of Chriſt; and about 17 or 18 years after the proclamation of Cyrus, for the Jews to return to their own land. Jerom ſays, this was in the 27th year of Tarquinius Superbus, the laſt of the Roman kings. Haggai was the firſt of the three prophets that propheſied after their return; and all his prophecies were within the ſpace of four months; and have their dates ſeverally put to them. Of the authority of this prophecy of Haggai, there is no room to queſtion; not only becauſe of the internal evidence of it, but from the teſtimony of Ezra, ch. iv. 24. and v. 1, 2. and vi. 14. and from a quotation out of ch. ii. 7, 8. by the author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, ch. xii. 26. The general deſign of this book is to reprove the Jews for their negligence in building the temple, after they had liberty granted them by Cyrus to do it, and to encourage them in this work; which he does by the promiſe of the Meſſiah, who ſhould come into it, and give it a greater glory than the firſt temple had. The name of this prophet is wrongly prefixed, with others, to ſeveral of the pſalms, eſpecially thoſe called the Hallelujah-pſalms, in the Septuagint, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, as Pſ. cxii, cxxxviii, cxlvi, cxlvii, cxlviii. Where he died, is not certain; very probably in Jeruſalem; where, according to Pſeudo-Epiphanius and Iſidore [g], he was buried, by the monuments of the prieſts; but according to the Cippi Hebraici [h], he was buried in a large cave, in the declivity of the mount of Olives.

CHAP. I.

THIS chapter contains the firſt ſermon of the prophet Haggai, to the people of the Jews, directed to Zerubbabel the governor, and Joſhua the high-prieſt. The date of which is fixed, ℣. 1. It begins with a charge againſt that people; ſaying the time to build the houſe of the Lord was not come, ℣. 2. which is refuted by the prophet; arguing, that if the time to ciel their dwelling-houſes was come, then much more the time to build the Lord's houſe, ℣. 3. 4. They are urged to conſider how unſucceſsful they had been in their civil employments and labours, which was owing to their neglect of building the temple; wherefore if they conſulted their own good, and the glory of God, the beſt way was to ſet about it in all haſte, and with diligence, ℣. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. yea, even the famine, which they had been afflicted with for ſome time, and which affected both man and beaſt, ſprung from the ſame cauſe, ℣. 10, 11. This diſcourſe had ſuch an effect upon the governor, high-prieſt, and people, that they immediately roſe up, and went about the work they were exhorted to; upon which the prophet, by a ſpecial meſſage from the Lord, promiſes his preſence with them, ℣. 12, 13, 14, 15.

℣. 1. In the ſecond year of Darius the king, &c.] That is, of Perſia; he is ſpoken of as if he was the only king in the world; and indeed he was the then greateſt king in it; and therefore is emphatically called the king. This was not Darius the Mede, as Genebrard; who was cotemporary with Cyrus, and partner in the kingdom; nor Darius Nothus, as Scaliger, and thoſe that follow him; ſince the ſecond year of this Darius was, according to Cocceius, who follows this opinion, 138 years after the firſt edict of Cyrus; and ſo Zerubbabel and Joſhua muſt exerciſe their office, the one of governor, the other of high-prieſt, ſuch a term of years, and more, which is not credible; and ſome of the Jews in captivity muſt have lived upwards of 200 years; even thoſe who ſaw the temple in its firſt glory, before the captivity, and now beheld it in Haggai's time, in a very different condition, dition, ch. ii. 3. It ſeems therefore more probable, according to Joſephus[i], and others, that this was Darius Hyſtaſpis, who was choſen king by the nobles of Perſia, upon his horſe's neighing firſt, as Herodotus[k] relates: the ſecond year of his reign was about 17 or 18 years after the proclamation of Cyrus; during whoſe reign, he being much engaged in affairs abroad, and the reign of his ſucceſſor Cambyſes, the enemies of the Jews, encouraged by the latter, greatly obſtructed the building of the temple, and diſcouraged them from going on with it; but when this king came to the throne, things took another turn, being favoured by him; for Joſephus[l] relates, that when a private perſon, he vowed if ever he became king, whatever of the holy veſſels were in Babylon, he would ſend to the temple at Jeruſalem; and upon ſolicitations made to him, the Jews were encouraged to go on with the building of it: in the ſixth month; the month Elul, anſwering to part of Auguſt, and part of September; which was the ſixth, reckoning from the month Niſan: in the firſt day of the month; which was the feaſt of the new moon: came the word of the Lord by Haggai the prophet; or, by the hand of Haggai[m]; by his means; he was the inſtrument, by whom the Lord delivered his word; the word was not the prophet's, but the Lord's; and this is obſerved to give weight and authority to it: unto Zerubbabel the ſon of Shealtiel; the ſame who is called Salathiel, Matt. i. 12. Luke iii. 27. according to Kimchi and Ben Melech, he was the grandſon of Salathiel; tho' rather Salathiel ſeems to be his uncle, he being the ſon of Pedaiah his brother, 1 Chron. iii. 17, 18, 19. however, he was his heir and ſucceſſor in the government, and ſo called his ſon; ſee the note on Matt. i. 12: governor of Judah; not king; for the country was under the dominion of the king of Perſia, and Zerubbabel was a deputy-governor under him; ſo the apocryphal Ezra calls him governor of Judea, 3 Eſd. vi. 27. and according to Joſephus[n], he was made governor of the captive Jews, when in Babylon, being in great favour with the king of Babylon; and with two more, were his body-guards; and he was continued governor by the Perſians, when the Jews returned to their land: and to Joſhua the ſon of Joſedech the high-prieſt; who is called Jeſhua, and his father Jozadak, Ezra iii. 2. his father was carried captive by Nebuchadnezzar, 1 Chron. vi. 15. now, to theſe two principal perſons in the commonwealth of Judea, was the word of the Lord ſent by the prophet; the one having the chief power in civil things, and the other in things eccleſiaſtical; and both had an influence upon the people; but very probably were dilatory in the work of building the temple; and therefore have a meſſage ſent to them, to ſtir them up to this ſervice: ſaying, as follows:

℣. 2. Thus ſpeaketh the Lord of hoſts, &c.] Of armies above and below; whom all ought to reverence, honour, and obey; who was able to ſupport his people in building his houſe, and protect them from their enemies, which ſhould have been an encouragement to them; and to puniſh them for their neglect of it, which might have deterred them from it. This preface is made, to ſhew that what follow were not the words of the prophet, but of the Lord; and therefore to be the more regarded, and the truth of them not to be doubted of: ſaying, this people ſay; repeating the words of the people of the Jews to Zerubbabel and Joſhua, that they might obſerve them, and the wickedneſs and ingratitude in them. This people, lately brought out of the captivity of Babylon, and loaded with various bleſſings and benefits; and not a few of them, but the generality of them, the body of them, expreſſed themſelves after this manner, when preſſed to build the temple: the time is not come, the time that the Lord's houſe ſhould be built; ſuggeſting, that the ſeventy years of Jeruſalem, and the temple lying in ruins, reckoning from the deſtruction of them in the 19th year of Nebuchadnezzar, were not yet fulfilled; or rather intimating, that it was not the time in providence, ſince they had been forbid and hindered in former reigns from going on with the work; or ſince it had been a time of famine and diſtreſs with them, it was not a time fit and convenient to carry on ſuch a ſervice; and tho' they did not lay aſide all thoughts of it, yet they judged it right and proper to defer it to a more convenient time, when they were better ſettled, and in a better capacity to engage in it.

℣. 3. Then came the word of the Lord by Haggai the prophet, &c.] This is a ſecond prophecy, diſtinct from the former; that was delivered to the two governors, ſetting forth the ſentiments and language of the people concerning the building of the temple, which was left with them to conſider how juſt it was; but this is ſent to the people themſelves, expoſtulating with them about the folly and ingratitude of it: ſaying, as follows:

℣. 4. Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your cieled houſes? &c.] They could not only find time, leiſure and conveniency to build houſes to dwell in; but to wainſcot them, and ciel them with boards of cedar, as the Targum; as bad as the times were complained of; and could ſit in them, indulging themſelves in luxury, eaſe and ſloth; and why then was it not a fit and convenient time, as well to build the houſe of the Lord in? and this houſe lie waſte? or, and ſhall this houſe lie waſte? or, when this houſe lies waſte[o]? not indeed in its rubbiſh and ruins, as it was demoliſhed by the Chaldeans, and left; but with a bare foundation, laid ſome years ago, and ever ſince neglected; the ſuperſtructure not carried on, and much leſs built up to be fit for ſervice; and therefore might be ſaid with propriety to lie waſte and deſolate, being unfiniſhed, unfit for uſe, and no regard had unto it. David was of another mind, 2 Sam. vii. 2. and truly religious perſons will be more concerned for the houſe of God than for their own houſes.

℣. 5. Now therefore thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, &c.] The Lord God omniſcient and omnipotent, that ſaw all their actions, and could puniſh for them; ſince they were ſo careful of their own houſes, and adorning them, and ſo careleſs of his houſe; he would have them now ſit down, and ſeriouſly think of theſe things, and of what he ſhould further obſerve unto them: conſider your ways; their ſinful ways, and repent of them, and forſake them, particularly their ingratitude before obſerved; and their civil ways, their common ways of life; their labour, work and buſineſs, they were continually employed in; and obſerve the event of them; what ſucceſs they had, what theſe iſſued in; whether there were not ſome viſible tokens of the divine diſpleaſure on them, which rendered all their attempts to ſupport and enrich themſelves and families vain, and of no effect: and they would do well to conſider, to what all this was to be imputed; whether it was not chiefly owing to this, their neglect of the houſe of God; and this he would have conſidered, not in a ſlight, curſory way; but with great earneſtneſs, diligence, and application of mind: put, or ſet your hearts upon your ways [p]; ſo it may be literally rendered.

℣. 6. Ye have ſown much, and bring in little, &c.] Contrary to what is uſually done; the ſeed that is ſown is but little, in compariſon of what ſprings up, is reaped, and gathered into the barn; which commonly affords ſeed again to the ſower, and bread to the eater; but here much land was tilled, and a great deal of ſeed was ſown in it; but a thin crop was produced, little was gathered into the barn; a bleſſing being withheld from the earth, and from their labours, becauſe of their ſins; which they would do well to think of, and the cauſe of it: ye eat, but ye have not enough; what the earth did yield, and which they gathered in, they made food of, and ate of it; yet it was not ſufficient to ſatisfy their hunger; or it was not bleſſed for their nouriſhment; or they had a canine appetite in judgment given them, ſo that they were never ſatisfied: or, it was not for fulneſs [q]; they were not filled with it to ſatisfaction, but ſtill craved more; and yet it may be, durſt not eat more, if they had it, leſt they ſhould want the next day: ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; or, not to inebriation [r]; it was not ſufficient to quench their thirſt, much leſs to make them merry and chearful: the vines produced ſuch a ſmall quantity of grapes, and thoſe ſo little wine, that they had not enough to drink, at leaſt could not drink freely, but ſparingly, leſt it ſhould be all ſpent, before another vintage came: ye clothe you, but there is none warm; or, but it is not for heat to him [s]; to any one; ſo rigorous the ſeaſon, ſo extreme the cold, that his cloaths will not keep him warm, even tho' the climate was naturally and uſually hot: and he that earneth wages, earneth wages to put into a bag with holes; or, pierced thro' [t]; if a man is hired as a labourer, and gets much wages, and brings it home, and lays it up; or if he trades and merchandiſes, and has great gains by it, and thinks to amaſs great riches; yet, what thro' loſſes, and the dearneſs of proviſions, and the many ways he has for the ſpending of his money, it is as if he put it into a bag full of holes, and it ran thro' as faſt as put into it; ſignifying hereby, that all his pains and labour were in vain.

℣. 7. Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, conſider your ways.] What they have been; what has been the conſequence of them; and to what the above things are to be aſcribed. This exhortation is repeated, to impreſs it the more upon their minds; and to denote the importance of it, and the neceſſity of ſuch a conduct; ſee the note on ℣. 5.

℣. 8. Go up to the mountain, &c.] Or, that mountain [u]; pointing either to Lebanon, to cut down cedars, and bring them from thence for the building of the temple; or mount Moriah, on which the temple was to be built; and thither carry the wood they fetched from Lebanon, or were brought from thence by the Tyrians: and bring wood; or, that ye may bring wood from Lebanon; or any other mountain, on which wood grew, to mount Moriah: and build the houſe; the temple, whoſe foundation was already laid, but the ſuperſtructure was neglected: now the Lord would have them go on with it immediately, out of hand, with the utmoſt diligence, alacrity and vigour; and not deſiſt till the whole building was completed: and I will take pleaſure in it; as a type of Chriſt, for whoſe ſake he was ſo deſirous of having it built; into which he was to come, and there appear as the promiſed Saviour. It ſignifies moreover, that the Lord would not only take pleaſure in the temple built, but in their work in building it; which would be acceptable to him, being according to his mind and will; and that he would take pleaſure in, and accept of them, being worſhippers therein, when they worſhipped him in ſpirit, and in truth in it; and in their ſervices, ſacrifices, prayers and praiſes, being rightly offered; and that he would forgive their ſins, and be propitious to them for his Son's ſake, the antitype of the temple: and I will be glorified, ſaith the Lord; by his people here, and by the worſhip and ſervice they ſhould perform: or, I will ſhew myſelf glorious [w]; that is, ſhew his glory, cauſing his Shekinah to dwell here in glory, as the Targum is. The Jews obſerve, that the letter ה is wanting in the word here uſed, which numerically ſignifies five; hence they gather that five things were wanting in the ſecond temple, the ark, the Urim and Thummim, the fire from heaven, the Shekinah or the divine majeſty, and the Holy Ghoſt.

℣. 9. Ye looked for much, and lo, it came to little, &c.] They looked for a large harveſt, and very promiſing it was for a while; but in the end it came to little; it was a very ſmall crop, very little was reaped and gathered in: or, in looking, ye looked to increaſe [x]; your ſubſtance; had raiſed expectations of making themſelves and families by their agriculture, and by their plantations of vines and olives, and by their trade and merchandiſe; and it dwindled away, and came to little or nothing; their riches, inſtead of being increaſed, were diminiſhed: and when ye brought it home, I did blow upon it; when they brought into their barns or houſes the produce of their land, labour and merchandiſe, which was but little; the Lord blew a blaſt upon that little, and brought rottenneſs and worms into it, as Jarchi; ſo that it was not a bleſſing to them, but a curſe. So the Targum interprets it, "behold I ſent a curſe upon it: or, I blew it away [y]; as any light thing, ſtraw or ſtubble, or thiſtle-down, are blown away with a wind; ſo eaſily can the Lord, and ſometimes he does, ſtrip men of that little ſubſtance they have; riches by his orders make themſelves wings, and flee away; or he, by one providence or another, blows them away like chaff before the wind: why, ſaith the Lord of hoſts? what was the cauſe and reaſon of this? which queſtion is put, not on his own account, who full well knew it; but for their ſakes, to whom he ſpeaks, that they might be made ſenſible of it; and in order to that, to introduce what follows, which is an anſwer to the queſtion: becauſe of mine houſe, that is waſte; which they ſuffered to lie waſte, and did not concern themſelves about the rebuilding of it: this the Lord reſented, and for this reaſon blaſted all their labours: and ye run every man unto his own houſe; were very eager, earneſt, and diligent in building, beautifying, and adorning their own houſes; taking care of their own domeſtic affairs; ſparing no coſt nor pains to promote their own ſecular intereſt; running in all haſte to do any thing, and every thing to increaſe their worldly ſubſtance; but ſat ſtill, were idle and ſlothful, careleſs and negligent about the houſe of God, and the affairs of it.

℣. 10. Therefore the heaven over you is ſtayed from dew, &c.] Or, therefore over, or upon you [a]; where ſhould be a ſtop; that is, becauſe of your neglect of the houſe of God; therefore upon you, and upon you only, and not upon other nations, the heaven is reſtrained from letting down the dew: or, therefore I am againſt you [b]; for the above reaſon, and which the following things ſhew; and ſad it is to have God to be an enemy, and againſt a people! or, for your ſake; ſo the Syriac verſion; to which ſenſe is the Targum, "therefore for your "ſins;" and ſo Jarchi: the heaven is ſtayed from dew; none deſcends from it; the Lord who has the ordering of it, will not ſuffer it: to have the dew fall upon the earth in the night-ſeaſon, is a great bleſſing; it makes the earth fruitful, revives the corn, plants and herbs, and cauſes them to flouriſh and increaſe; and to have it reſtrained is a judgment: and the earth is ſtayed from her fruit; from bringing forth its increaſe, which is the conſequence of the dew being withheld.

℣. 11. And I called for a drought upon the land, &c.] Upon the whole land of Judea; as he withheld the dew and rain from falling on it to moiſten it, refreſh it, and make it fruitful; ſo he ordered a vehement heat to dry and parch it; and directed the rays of the ſun to ſtrike with great force upon it, and cauſe the fruits of it to wither; and which is done by a word of his; when he calls, every creature obeys. There is an elegant paronomaſia, which ſhews the juſtneſs of ſuch a proceeding, that it was according to the law of retaliation; they ſuffered the houſe of God to lie חרב waſte, and therefore he calls for חרב a waſting drought to come upon their land: and upon the mountains; where herbage grew, and herds of cattel, and flocks of ſheep were fed; but now the graſs, thro' the drought was withered away, and ſo no paſturage for them, and in courſe muſt periſh: and upon the corn, and upon the new wine, and upon the oil; that is, upon the corn-fields, and upon the vines, and olive-trees; ſo that they produced but very little corn, wine, and oil, and that not very good, and which was not ſatisfying and refreſhing; at leaſt there were not enough for their ſupport and comfort: now theſe three things were the principal neceſſaries of life in the country of Judea, and therefore a ſcarcity of them was very diſtreſſing: and upon that which the ground bringeth forth; whatever elſe not mentioned the earth produced, as figs, pomegranates, and other fruit: and upon men, and upon cattel; who not only ſuffered in this drought, by the above-ſaid things it came upon; but by diſeaſes it produced upon them, as the peſtilence and fever among men, and murrain upon the cattel: and upon all the labour of the hands; of men; whatſoever fields and gardens, trees and plants of every kind, that were ſet and cultivated by them. Of this drought, and the famine that came upon it, we no where elſe read; but there is no doubt to be made of it.

℣. 12. Then Zerubbabel the ſon of Shealtiel, and Joſhua the ſon of Joſedech the high-prieſt, &c.] Here follows an account of the ſucceſs of Haggai's prophecy; with what power and efficacy the word of the Lord by him was attended; how it at once reached and affected the hearts of princes and people, and brought them to obedience to the will of God. The governor and high-prieſt are mentioned firſt, as being the principal perſons, and who very probably firſt declared their ſenſe of their former neglect, and their readineſs to do as they were directed; which was ſetting a good example to the people, and doubtleſs had ſome influence upon them: with all the remnant of the people, obeyed the voice of the Lord their God; not the two leading men in church and ſtate only; but all the people that came out of the Babyloniſh captivity, who were but a remnant; a few that were left thro' various calamities they had been expoſed unto; theſe, one and all, ſignified how willing and ready they were to do the work of the Lord enjoined them: or, they heard the voice of the Lord [c]; by the prophet, very attentively and ſeriouſly; and received and regarded it, not as the word of men, but as the word of God; and determined to act according to it: and the words of Haggai the prophet; or, and for the words of Haggai the prophet [d]; becauſe of them, conſidering them as coming from the Lord himſelf: (as the Lord their God had ſent him); regarding him as having a miſſion and commiſſion from the Lord to deliver them to them: and the people did fear before the Lord; perceiving that he was diſpleaſed with them for the neglect of his houſe; and that this drought upon them was a chaſtiſement and correction for this ſin; and fearing leſt his wrath ſhould continue, and they ſhould be more ſeverely dealt with, on account of their tranſgreſſions.

℣. 13. Then ſpake Haggai the Lord's meſſenger, &c.] Which ſome render angel; hence ſprung that notion, imbibed by ſome, that he was not a man, but an angel; whereas this only reſpects his office, being ſent of God as an embaſſador, in his name, with a meſſage to his people: he now obſerving what effect his prophecy had upon the people; they being convinced of their ſin, and terrified with the judgments of God upon them, and fearing that worſe ſtill would attend them; in order to revive their ſpirits, and comfort them, ſpake the words unto them which follow: and this he did in the Lord's meſſage unto the people; not of his own head, nor out of the pity of his own heart merely; but as a prophet of the Lord, having a freſh meſſage from him to carry a promiſe to them for their comfort and encouragement: ſaying, I am with you, ſaith the Lord; to pardon their ſins; to accept their perſons; to remove his rod from them; to aſſiſt them in the work of building the temple, they were now willing to engage in; to protect them from their enemies, and to ſtrengthen them to go on with the work till they had finiſhed it; a ſhort promiſe, but a very full one: it was ſaying much in a little, and enough to remove all their fears, to ſcatter all their doubts, and to bear them up, and thro' all diſcouragements.

℣. 14. And the Lord ſtirred up the ſpirit of Zerubbabel the ſon of Shealtiel, governor of Judah; and the ſpirit of Joſhua the ſon of Joſedech the high-prieſt; and the ſpirit of all the remnant of the people, &c.] He rouſed them up from that ſleep and ſloth in which they were before, both the governors and common people; he wrought in them both to will and do; or a willing mind to do his work in building his houſe; he gave them a ſpirit both of induſtry and courage; he enabled them to ſhake off that ſluggiſh diſpoſition they were attended with, and that fear of men which poſſeſſed them; he inſpired them with zeal and reſolution to enter upon the work at once, and purſue it with cloſe application; the Lord only could do this: and they came and did work in the houſe of the Lord of hoſts their God; the governor and high-prieſt came to direct and overſee, encourage and animate the people, by their preſence and example; and the people to do the ſeveral parts of ſervice that belonged to them, according to their genius and employment.

℣. 15. In the four and twentieth day of the ſixth month, &c.] Or, in the four and twentieth of the month, in the ſixth; in that ſixth month beforementioned, ℣. 1. On this day they came and worked; not the ſixth from Tiſri, for the Jews had two ways of beginning their years, which would have anſwered to part of February; and therefore choſe by ſome interpreters, as being a proper time to begin building; but no regard is had to the fitneſs of the ſeaſon, but to the order of the Lord; but the ſixth month from Niſan, and anſwers to part of Auguſt; for ſo the months are reckoned in the prophecy of Zechariah, who began to propheſy the ſame year as Haggai did; ſee Zech. i. 1, 7. and vii. 1. this was three and twenty days after the prophecy was delivered out; during which time they might be employed in cutting of ſtones, and ſawing and hewing of wood, as Jarchi ſuggeſts, and preparing for work in the temple: in the ſecond year of Darius the king; ſee the note on ℣. 1. Here ſome begin a new chapter, but wrongly; ſince if theſe words do not belong to the preceding, there would be a contradiction in joining them with the beginning of the next.

CHAP. II.

THIS chapter contains three ſermons or prophecies, delivered by the prophet to the people of the Jews. The deſign of the firſt is to encourage them to go on with the building of the temple, tho' it might ſeem to come greatly ſhort of the former temple, as to its outward form and ſplendor. The time of the prophecy, ℣. 1. an order to deliver it to the governor, high-prieſt, and all the people, ℣. 2. A queſtion is put concerning the difference between this temple and the former; between which it is ſuggeſted there was no compariſon; which is aſſented to by ſilence, ℣. 3. nevertheleſs the prince, prieſt, and people are exhorted to go on ſtrenuouſly in the work of building; encouraged with a promiſe of the preſence of the Lord of hoſts, and of his word, in whom he covenanted with them at their coming out of Egypt, and of the bleſſed Spirit, and his continuance with them, ℣. 4, 5. and the more to remove their fears and faintings, it is declared that in a very ſhort time a moſt wonderful thing ſhould be done in the world, which would affect all the nations of the earth; for that illuſtrious perſon would come, whom all nations do, or ſhould deſire; and not only come into the world, but into that temple they were building; and give it a greater glory than the former; yea a greater glory than if all the gold and ſilver of the world were laid out upon it, or brought into it; which being all the Lord's, could have been eaſily done by him; but he would give in it ſomething infinitely greater than that, even the prince of peace, with all the bleſſings of it, ℣. 6, 7, 8, 9. then follows the ſecond ſermon or prophecy, the time of which is obſerved, ℣. 10. and it is introduced with ſome queſtions concerning ceremonial uncleanneſs, by an unclean perſon's touching holy fleſh with the ſkirt of his garment; and other things, which is confirmed by the anſwer of the prieſts, ℣. 11, 12, 13. the application of which is made to the people of the Jews, who were alike unclean; they, their works, and their ſacrifices, ℣. 14. and theſe are directed to conſider, that during the time they had neglected to build the temple, they were attended with ſcarcity of proviſions; their fields and vineyards being blaſted with mildew, or deſtroyed by hail, and all their labours proved unſucceſsful, ℣. 15, 16, 17. but now, ſince they had begun the work of building, 'tis promiſed they ſhould be bleſſed with every thing, tho' they had nothing in ſtore, and every thing was unpromiſing to them; which is deſigned to encourage them to go on chearfully in their begun work, ℣. 18, 19. and the chapter is concluded with the laſt diſcourſe or prophecy, the date of which is given, ℣. 20. an inſtruction to deliver it to Zerubbabel, ℣. 21. foretelling the deſtruction of the kingdoms of the heathen; and the ſetting up of the kingdom of the Meſſiah, of whom Zerubbabel was a type, precious and honourable in the ſight of God, ℣. 22, 23.

℣. 1. In the ſeventh month, &c.] The month Tiſri, which anſwers to part of September, and part of October: in the one and twentieth day of the month; being a month, wanting three days, from the time the Jews came and worked in the houſe of the Lord, ch. i. 14, 15. it was toward the cloſe of the feaſt of tabernacles; ſee Lev. xxiii. 34: came the word of the Lord by the prophet Haggai; the word of prophecy, as the Targum: this was from the Lord, not from the prophet himſelf; he was only the meſſenger ſent with it to deliver it: ſaying, to him the prophet, giving him orders, as follow:

℣. 2. Speak now to Zerubbabel the ſon of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, &c.] Of whom, his deſcent and dignity, ſee the note on ch. i. 1. The Septuagint verſion wrongly renders it, of the tribe of Judah; in which it is followed by the Arabic verſion; for tho' he was of the tribe of Judah, this does not ſufficiently diſtinguiſh him; nor does it anſwer to the word here uſed, which is expreſſive of his office and dignity. The Vulgate Latin verſion, Luther and Caſtalio, omit the particle נא, rendered now, which is very emphatical. The prophet is ordered to go and ſay what he is bid, directly, immediately, at once, without any delay; the very day before mentioned, yea at that very inſtant or moment, the people being now at work, under the eye of their governor; in order to remove an offence, which might diſcourage them in their work, taken from the meanneſs of the building, in compariſon of the former temple: and to Joſhua the ſon of Joſedech the high prieſt, and to the reſidue of the people; theſe, beſides the two former, even the whole body of the people, the remnant that were come out of the captivity of Babylon: ſaying, to the above perſons, as follows:

℣. 3. Who is left among you that ſaw this houſe in her firſt glory? &c.] Not taken away by death, yet alive, and dwelling among them; and who lived before the deſtruction of the firſt temple built by Solomon; and has ſeen it in all its magnificence; its grand and noble ſtructure; its ſtately pillars; its carved work and decorations of gold. This ſhows that it was not in the times of Darius Nothus, but of Darius Hyſtaſpis, that Haggai propheſied: thoſe who go the former way, make theſe men to have lived near two hundred years at leaſt, which was greatly beyond the common time of man's life in that age; or conſider theſe words as a mere ſuppoſition, that if there were, or had been ſuch perſons then living, this building, in compariſon of the former, muſt have appeared mean and contemptible unto them: but the words manifeſtly imply that there were perſons among them then living, who had ſeen Solomon's temple in all its glory; and who are particularly and perſonally addreſſed in the following clauſes; and of whom there might be ſeveral at this time, going the latter way; for the ſeventy years captivity are to be reckoned from the fourth year of Jehoiakim, in which the captivity began, and which was the firſt year of Nebuchadnezzar, Jer. xxv. 1, 11, 12. but it was not until the nineteenth year of his reign, that the temple was burnt by him, Jer. lii. 12, 13. and the time of Haggai's propheſying being about ſeventeen or eighteen years after the proclamation of Cyrus, when the ſeventy years captivity ended; this ſhows that it was ſcarcely ſeventy years from the time the temple was deſtroyed; and therefore it may be reaſonably ſuppoſed there were ſeveral ancient perſons living that could remember to have ſeen it; and it is certain, that there were a great number of ſuch living that returned from Babylon, who wept when they ſaw the foundation of the ſecond temple laid, which was but fifteen years before this, Ezra iii. 12. ſome of whom, in all probability, were now alive, yea it is certain there were, to whom the following queſtions were put: and how do ye ſee it now? is not this that is building very different from that? does it promiſe any thing like it? what ideas have you of it? can you conceive in your minds that it will ever riſe up to ſuch grandeur and ſtatelineſs as the former? what is your judgment, and what your ſentiments concerning it? can you think of it with equal delight and pleaſure as of the former? is it not in your eyes in compariſon of it as nothing? don't you think, that it is not to be mentioned, or once named, in compariſon of the former temple? or that a man had as good ſay nothing at all, as to attempt a compariſon of them? or that this building and nothing are alike? and that the one is a non-entity, as well as the other, comparatively ſpeaking, when ſet in competition with the firſt temple? and are not you of opinion, that the people had as good do nothing, and that in effect they are doing nothing, and all their labour loſt, who are working in this houſe? no anſwer is returned, nor any waited for: but it is as if the Lord had ſaid, I who am the omniſcient God, the diſcerner of the thoughts of men, know that theſe are your ſentiments, and theſe the reaſonings of your minds; and but now leſt diſcovering theſe thoughts of theirs, and ſpeaking out their minds freely as they might, which would tend to diſcourage the governors and the people in carrying on the work they had engaged in; the Lord by the prophet ſays to them, as follows:

℣. 4. Yet now be ſtrong, O Zerubbabel, ſaith the Lord, &c.] Take heart, be of good courage, don't be diſmayed at theſe things; tho' the building may be contemptible in the eyes of ſome, nevertheleſs go on with it manfully and vigorouſly; let none deſpiſe the day of ſmall things; for from theſe low beginnings great things will ariſe, and glorious things will follow, as hereafter predicted; ſee Zech. iv. 9, 10. attend this work diligently, deſiſt not from it, continue to preſide over it, and encourage the people in it; let not thine heart faint, or thine hands be ſlack; act the part of a man, of a good man, and of a governor: and be ſtrong, O Joſhua, ſon of Joſedech the high-prieſt; don't be diſheartened at what the ancients think and ſay concerning this temple, in which thou art to officiate as an high-prieſt, and as a type of him who ſhall come into this houſe, and ſo give it a glory the former never had; continue to give the neceſſary inſtructions to the builders, that every thing may be done in proper order, and to anſwer their end and uſe in the ſervice of the prieſthood; faint not, nor be diſcouraged, but act according to thy character, and ſhew thyſelf worthy of the office with which thou art inveſted; conſider in whoſe name thou acteſt, whoſe prieſt thou art, and in whoſe ſervice thou art employed: and be ſtrong, all ye people of the land, ſaith the Lord; let not your hearts ſink, or ſpirits fail, at hearing what the more ancient among you ſay of the difference between this and the former building, which your eyes never ſaw; don't deſiſt from your work on this account, but go on with it; conſider what God has done for you, in bringing you out of captivity, and into your own land, and to the enjoyment of your civil privileges; conſider the obligations you lie under to build an houſe for God; that this is not only a piece of gratitude, and ſhows a ſenſe of mercies received; but that it is for the glory of God, for your ſpiritual profit and advantage, and for the uſe and good of future poſterity; quit yourſelves therefore like men, and be ſtrong; ſee Joſh. i. 6, 7, 9. 1 Cor. xvi. 13: and work; that is, continue working, for they were at work; but there was danger of their leaving off working, being diſcouraged at what the ancient people ſaid; and therefore they are exhorted to go on in their work, and go thro' it, and finiſh it; for ſo the word here uſed ſignifies, and do[e]; that is, the work thoroughly and effectually; or, as others render it, and perfect[f] the work begun, and leave it not unfiniſhed. Aben Ezra, Jarchi, Kimchi, and Ben Melech connect this word with the beginning of the following verſe, thus, and do the word, or thing which I covenanted with you, &c. that is, obſerve the law, and do the commandment then given; but very wrongly: nor is it only to be conſidered as directed to the people, but to the prince and prieſt alſo; for they had all work to do in the houſe of the Lord, as all ranks and degrees of men now have in the church of Chriſt; of which that houſe was typical: the prince or civil magiſtrate; not to preſcribe laws and rules to be obſerved in it, which only belongs to Chriſt, who is the ſole head, king, and lawgiver; but to attend the ſervice of it, to protect and defend it, to promote the intereſt of it, and diſtribute chearfully to the maintenance of its miniſters, and to the neceſſities of the poor ſaints. Prieſts or miniſters of the word are to work; they are to labour in the word and doctrine; in preaching the goſpel; adminiſtring ordinances; governing the church; comforting ſaints; reproving vice, and refuting error: deacons are to do their work, in taking care of the poor, and minding the ſecular affairs of the church; and all private chriſtians are to work, to labour in prayer for the good of it; to hear the word, attend on all ordinances, and hold faſt the profeſſion of their faith; all which is to be done in the ſtrength and grace of Chriſt, without dependence on it, or ſeeking juſtification and ſalvation by it; encouraged, as the Jews are here, with the promiſe of the divine preſence: (for I am with you, ſaith the Lord of hoſts); to help in every ſervice, and to protect from all enemies; and this makes the work and ſervice of the Lord's houſe pleaſant and delightful, and ſecures from all doubts and fears, faintings and miſgivings of heart. This is to be underſtood of God the Father, the Lord of armies above and below; and if he is for, and with his people, they have nothing to fear from thoſe that are againſt them; or to be diſcouraged in his ſervice. The Targum wrongly interprets this of the word of the Lord, ſince he is meant in the next verſe.

℣. 5. According to the word that I covenanted with you, when ye came out of Egypt, &c.] Or rather, with the word, in, or with whom I covenanted [g], &c. as ſome render it; that is, Chriſt, the eſſential Word, who was promiſed to the people of Iſrael at that time, Deut. xviii. 15. and in whom all the promiſes are, and the covenant of grace itſelf; and which covenant was indeed made with him from eternity, but was made manifeſt, or more clearly manifeſt, to the Jewiſh anceſtors, when they came out of Egypt: now it is here promiſed, for the encouragement of the Jews to go on in the work of the Lord, in building the temple, that this divine Word ſhould be with them alſo, to counſel, aſſiſt, ſtrengthen, and protect them; even he who went before their fathers in the wilderneſs in a pillar of cloud by day, and of fire by night; the angel of God's preſence that redeemed, ſaved, and carried them all the days of old; the Word that was in the beginning with God, and was God; and by whom all things were created at firſt; and who would, as ſince he has, become fleſh, and dwell among them, and appear in this very temple they were now building; and who will be with all his churches, miniſters and people, unto the end of the world: ſo my Spirit remaineth among you; or rather, and, or alſo my Spirit ſtandeth, continueth in the midſt of you [h]; not only Jehovah the Father, and his divine Logos or Word, were with them; but his Spirit alſo, his holy Spirit, the third perſon in the Trinity, of which theſe words are a proof; the ſame Spirit which was in Moſes and others in his time, for the building of the tabernacle is now promiſed unto, and ſhould continue with, the builders of this temple; as a ſpirit of wiſdom and counſel to direct them, and as a ſpirit of might and power to ſtrengthen and aſſiſt them: and ſo he is, and will be in the churches of Chriſt, and in the midſt of his people, to aſſiſt the miniſters of the word in preaching, the people in hearing, praying and praiſing; to carry on his own work in them; to be the comforter of them, and the ſeal, earneſt, and pledge of their future glory; nor does he, nor ever will he, depart from them; ſee Iſ. lix. 21. John xiv. 16: fear ye not; ſucceeding in the work, and finiſhing it; nor be diſmayed at what the ancient people had ſaid; nor be afraid of enemies, who did all they could to hinder and diſcourage them from going on with their work; and indeed there is no reaſon to fear, let the ſervice be what it will, the Lord employs his people in; if he, Father, Son, and Spirit, are with them; ſee Iſ. xli. 10.

℣. 6. For thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, &c.] For the further encouragement of the builders of the temple, they are told from the Lord of hoſts, that in a little time, when ſuch circumſtances ſhould meet as are here pointed at, the Meſſiah ſhould come, and appear in this houſe, and give it a greater glory than ever Solomon's temple had; for that this paſſage is to be underſtood of the Meſſiah and his times, is clear from the apoſtle's application of it, Heb. xii. 25, 26. and even the ancient Jews themſelves underſtood it of the Meſſiah, particularly R. Aquiba [i], who lived in the times of Bar Cozbi the falſe Meſſiah; tho' the more modern ones, perceiving how they are embaraſſed with it, to ſupport their hypotheſis, ſhift it off from him: yet once, it is a little while; or, once more, as the apoſtle in the above place quotes it; which ſuggeſts, that the Lord had before done ſomething of the kind, that follows, ſhaking the heavens, &c. as at the giving of the law on mount Sinai; and would do the ſame again, and more abundantly in the times of the goſpel, or of the Meſſiah. Jarchi interprets this of one trouble by the Grecian monarchy after the Perſian, which would not laſt long: his note is, "yet once, &c. after "that this kingdom of Perſia that rules over you "is ended, yet one ſhall riſe up to rule over you, "to diſtreſs you, the kingdom of Greece; but its "government ſhall be but a little time;" and not very foreign from this ſenſe does biſhop Chandler [k] render the words, after one kingdom (the Grecian) it is a little while; (or after that) I will ſhake all the heavens, &c. and tho' it was five hundred years from this prophecy to the incarnation of Chriſt; yet this was but a little while with God, with whom a thouſand years are as one day; and indeed with men it was but a ſhort time, when compared with the firſt promiſe of his coming at the beginning of the world; or with the ſhaking of the earth at the giving of the law, quickly after Iſrael came out of Egypt: and I will ſhake the heavens, and the earth, and the ſea, and the dry land; which either intends the changes and revolutions made in the ſeveral kingdoms and nations of the world, between this prophecy and the coming of Chriſt, and which ſoon began to take place; for the Perſian monarchy now flouriſhing, was quickly ſhook and ſubdued by the Grecians; and in a little time the Grecian monarchy was deſtroyed by the Romans; and what changes they made in the ſeveral nations of the world is well known: or elſe this deſigns the wonderful things that were done in the heavens, earth, and ſea, at the birth of Chriſt, during his life, and at his death: at his birth a new ſtar appeared in the heavens, which brought the wiſe men from the eaſt to viſit him; the angels of heaven deſcended, and ſung glory to God in the higheſt; Herod and all the inhabitants of Jeruſalem were ſhaken, moved, and troubled at the tidings of his birth; yea people in all parts of Judea were in motion to be taxed in their reſpective cities at this time: ſtormy winds were raiſed, which agitated the waters of the ſea in his life-time; and on which he walked, and which he rebuked; and this ſhewed him to be the mighty God: at his death the heavens were darkened, the earth quaked, and rocks were rent aſunder: if any particular earthquake about this time ſhould be thought to be intended, the moſt terrible one was that which happened A. D. 17, when Cælius Rufus and Pomponius Flaccus were conſuls, which deſtroyed twelve cities of Aſia[1]; and theſe being near the ſea, cauſed a motion there alſo. The apoſtle applies theſe words to the change made in the worſhip of God by the coming of Chriſt, when the carnal ordinances of the law were removed, and evangelical ordinances inſtituted, which ſhall remain until his ſecond coming, Heb. xii. 26.

℣. 7. And I will ſhake all nations, &c.] By changing their governors, and forms of government; which was done by the Romans, when ſubdued by them; and by bringing in wars among them, which produced thoſe changes; and by inteſtine wars among the Romans themſelves, in the ſeveral nations that belonged to them, which were notorious a little before the coming of Chriſt: or elſe this was to be done, and was done, by the preaching of the goſpel, both in Judea, and in the Gentile world, when all the inhabitants thereof were ſhaken by it, in one ſenſe or another; ſome had their hearts and conſciences ſhaken by the Spirit and grace of God thro' it, and were brought to embrace it, and profeſs it; yea, were brought to Chriſt, to yield obedience to him, his truths, and ordinances; and others were moved with envy, wrath, and indignation at it, and roſe up to oppoſe it, and ſtop the progreſs of it: and the deſire of all nations ſhall come; not the deſireable things of all nations, or them with them, as their gold and ſilver; and which is the ſenſe of Jarchi, Kimchi, and Aben Ezra; but this is contrary to the ſyntax of the words, to the context, ℣. 8, 9. and to facts; and, if true, would not have given this temple a greater glory than Solomon's: nor the elect of God, as others, brought in thro' the preaching of the goſpel; who are indeed the deſire of God, he takes pleaſure in them; and of Chriſt, whoſe delights have been always in them; and of the bleſſed Spirit, whoſe love to them, and eſteem of them, are very manifeſt; and with the ſaints they are the excellent in the earth, in whom is all their delight: yet not they, but one far more glorious and excellent is intended, even the Meſſiah, in whom all nations of the earth were to be bleſſed; and who, ſo far as he was known by good men or proſelytes among the Gentiles, was deſired by them, as by Job, and others; and who, when he came, brought all good things with him; and has all bleſſings in him, that may make him deſireable to men, being what they want; and tho' he is not in fact deſired by all; yet of right he ſhould be, and to all ſenſible ſinners he is; even above all perſons and things in the whole world; on account of his perſonal excellencies and glories; his mediatorial qualifications; his names, offices, and relations; the bleſſings of grace in him; the works done by him; his truths and ordinances, people, ways, and worſhip: and when it is ſaid, he ſhall come; the meaning is, not only into the world by aſſumption of nature, to obtain redemption for his people; but into this temple now building, in that nature aſſumed; where he appeared at the preſentation of him by his parents; and at the paſſover, when twelve years of age; and when he drove out the buyers and ſellers from it; and when he often taught in it. The word come is in the plural number; and may denote his frequent coming thither, as well as in different reſpects; his perſonal coming; his ſpiritual coming; his coming to take vengeance on the Jews; and his laſt coming, of which ſome underſtand the words particularly: and I will fill this houſe with glory, ſaith the Lord; alluding to the glory which filled the tabernacle of Moſes, and the temple of Solomon, Exod. xl. 35. 1 Kings viii. 10, 11. but that was but a ſhadowy glory, this a real one; here Chriſt appeared in perſon, who is the brightneſs of his Father's glory; here his glorious doctrines were taught, and glorious miracles wrought; and the Spirit of glory reſted on the diſciples, in his gifts and grace beſtowed upon them in an extraordinary manner, on the day of Pentecoſt.

℣. 8. The ſilver is mine, and the gold is mine, ſaith the Lord of hoſts.] This ſeems deſigned to anticipate an objection taken from the gold and ſilver, with which the firſt temple was either decorated, or were in gifts dedicated to it; and which, it might eaſily be foreſeen, would be wanting in the ſecond temple; and in anſwer to which the Lord obſerves, that all the gold and ſilver in the world were his, were made by him, and were at his diſpoſe; and therefore whatever were beſtowed upon the former temple, was only giving him his own; what he had a prior right to, and was no acceſſion of riches or honour to him; and ſo it would be the ſame, let what would be expended on this; and therefore it was an article very inconſiderable, and of little ſignificance; nor did he regard, or was he delighted with any thing of this kind; and was he ſo diſpoſed, he could eaſily command all the gold and ſilver in the world together, and bring it into this houſe, to enrich and adorn it, without doing any injury to any perſon; but theſe were things he delighted not in; and beſides, he had a far greater glory in view to put upon this houſe, as follows:

[1] Taciti Annales, l. 2. c. 47.

℣. 9. The glory of this latter houſe ſhall be greater than of the former, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, &c.] The former or firſt houſe, was the temple built by Solomon, which was a very glorious one; if we conſider the vaſt treaſure of riches laid up by David, and given to Solomon for the building of it; the great number of workmen employed in it; the ſtatelineſs of the fabric, the like to which was never ſeen, the model being drawn by the Lord himſelf; the decoration of it; the veſſels in it; and, above all, the glory of the Lord that filled it, and continued in it; and yet this latter or ſecond houſe exceeded it. It muſt be a glory very great indeed to exceed this! The Jews [m] themſelves own, there were ſeveral things wanting in the latter, which were in the former, as the ark, the Urim and Thummim, the fire from heaven, the Shekinah (or, as in ſome books, the anointing oil; and in others, the cherubim), and the Holy Ghoſt: by one of their writers [n], they are reckoned in this order, the ark, the mercy-ſeat, and cherubim, one; the Shekinah or divine majeſty, the ſecond; the Holy Ghoſt, which is prophecy, the third; Urim and Thummim, the fourth; and the fire from heaven, the fifth: what could there be in it to compenſate the want of theſe, and put it upon a level, and even to cauſe it to excel the temple of Solomon? the excelling glory did not lie in the fabric; when the foundation of it was laid, the old men wept, becauſe it came ſo ſhort of the other; and as the building roſe, it was in their eyes as nothing; who were better judges than later Jews, who magnify the building of the ſecond temple, depending upon the authority of Joſephus ben Gorion, who is not to be truſted: nor did it lie in the duration of it, it continuing ten years longer, they ſay [o], than the former; which, if true, could not anſwer to the deficiencies beforementioned; or be an encouragement to the builders to go on in their work: nor in the riches brought into it by the Gentiles in the times of the Maccabees, which was very inconſiderable; and could never make it equal to Solomon's temple, and much leſs preferable to it; nor by Alexander the Great honouring it with his preſence [p]; for ſurely Solomon was greater than he. It remains, that what gave it the greater glory, was the perſonal preſence of the Meſſiah in it, his doctrines, and his miracles: and, or for, in this place will I give peace, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; not temporal peace, for there was little of that during the ſecond temple; witneſs the times of the Maccabees, and the wars with the Romans; but ſpiritual peace, thro' the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt; peace with God; reconciliation for ſin thro' the ſacrifice of the Son of God, in whom he is well pleaſed; yea Chriſt himſelf may be meant, the prince of peace, the man the peace, who is our peace, Iſ. ix. 6. Mic. v. 5. Eph. ii. 14. the author of peace between God and men, between Jew and Gentile; the giver of ſpiritual and eternal peace; him the Lord gave, put, and ſet in this place, the temple, as before obſerved; and where the goſpel of peace was preached, and from whence it went forth into all the world. The Arabic verſion adds, "peace of ſoul, I ſay, "to be poſſeſſed by every one that labours to raiſe "up this temple."

℣. 10. In the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, &c.] The month Ciſleu, which anſwers to part of November, and part of December: this was two months and three days after the former diſcourſe or prophecy, and juſt three months from the time the Jews began to work in the houſe of the Lord, ch. i. 14, 15. and ii. 1: in the ſecond year of Darius; the ſame year that all the former diſcourſes and prophecies were delivered in: came the word of the Lord by Haggai the prophet; for what he delivered was not his own, but from the Lord; he was only his miniſter and meſſenger. The Vulgate Latin verſion, and ſo Munſter render it, unto Haggai the prophet; and indeed what is ſaid following ſeems to be directed to him, and he is the only perſon that put the queſtions directed to: ſaying, as follows:

℣. 11. Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, &c.] To Haggai the prophet: aſk now the prieſts concerning the law; whoſe buſineſs it was to underſtand it, and teach it, and to anſwer queſtions, and reſolve doubts concerning it; not of their own heads, and according to their fanſies, will, and pleaſure; but according to the rules and inſtructions given in the word of God: and as this was their office, they were the proper perſons to apply to; and Haggai, tho' a prophet, is ſent to the prieſts to propoſe queſtions to them; tho' it may be not ſo much for his own information, as for the conviction of the prieſts of their impurity, out of their own mouths, and of the people by them: ſaying; putting the following queſtions to them.

℣. 12. If one bear holy fleſh in the ſkirt of his garment, &c.] Or, carry it [q]; from one place to another in his pockets or bags, which were in the ſkirts of his garments. This is to be underſtood of the fleſh of creatures offered in ſacrifice, which were ſanctified or ſeparated for holy uſe; part of which belonged to the prieſts, who might carry it in their pockets to the proper place of eating it: and with his ſkirt do touch bread, or pottage, or wine, or oil, or any meat; which were not holy, and not ſeparated for holy uſe, but were common meats and drinks: now the queſtion upon this is, ſhall it be holy? that is, if either of thoſe common things were touched by the ſkirt, in the pockets of which the holy fleſh were carried, whether they were made holy by ſuch a touch, and no more remained common or profane? and the prieſts anſwered and ſaid, no; they were not ſanctified; for tho' the garment itſelf was ſanctified thereby, and might not be employed in common uſe till waſhed, Lev. vi. 27. yet a garment ſo touched could not convey holineſs to whatſoever that touched, or that touched it.

℣. 13. Then ſaid Haggai, &c.] To the prieſts; having nothing to object to their anſwer; but being ſatisfied with it, he puts another queſtion: if any one that is unclean by a dead body; by the touch of it, Lev. xix. 11: touch any of theſe, ſhall it be unclean? that is, if ſuch an impure perſon, who was ſo in a ceremonial ſenſe, ſhould touch any of the above things, bread, pottage, wine, or oil, or any meat, would not they become unclean thereby, and ſo not fit for uſe? and the prieſts anſwered and ſaid, it ſhall be unclean; which was rightly anſwered; for whatſoever ſuch an unclean perſon touched was unclean, according to the law, Lev. xix. 22. Pollution is more eaſily, and more extenſively conveyed, than holineſs.

℣. 14. Then anſwered Haggai and ſaid, &c.] To the prieſts, and before the people; and made an application of theſe things to them, which was the thing in view in putting the queſtions: ſo is this people, and ſo is this nation before me, ſaith the Lord; not only thoſe people that were preſent and at work in the temple, but thoſe that were abſent, even the whole body of the people; who, tho' they were pure in their own eyes, yet were not ſo before the Lord; who knew their hearts, and the ſpring of all their actions; what were their ends and views in all they did: as a garment carrying in it holy fleſh could not ſanctify other things touched by it that were common and profane, but left them as they were; ſo their ritual devotions, and externally holy actions did not, and could not ſanctify their impure hearts, but left them as unclean as before; nor did they ſanctify their common mercies, their bread, pottage, wine, and oil: and, on the other hand, as an impure perſon made every thing impure he touched; ſo they, being impure in heart, all their actions, even their religious ones, were impure alſo, as follows: and ſo is every work of their hands, and that which they offer there, is unclean; pointing at the altar, which they had built, and offered ſacrifice on ever ſince they came out of Babylon, tho' the temple was not yet built, Ezra iii. 3—6. but all their outward religious ſervices, and all the ſacrifices they offered up, were in the Lord's account impure and abominable; as well as themſelves; coming from an unſanctified heart, and offered up with unclean hands, and without repentance towards God, and faith in Chriſt; and living in other reſpects in diſobedience to God, and eſpecially whilſt they neglected the building of the temple; ſatisfying themſelves with offering ſacrifices on the altar, when the houſe of God lay deſolate; which is the principal thing reſpected, as appears by what follows:

℣. 15. And now, I pray you, conſider from this day and upward, &c.] This being their caſe, and they ſo polluted with ſin, particularly thro' their neglect of building the temple; they are moſt earneſtly and importunately intreated to lay it to their hearts, to ponder it in their minds, and thoroughly conſider how it had fared with them from this twenty-fourth day of the ninth month, in which the prophet was ſent unto them to encourage them in their work, and upwards or backwards, for ſome years paſt: even from before a ſtone was laid upon a ſtone in the temple of the Lord; the foundation of the temple was laid quickly after the Jews returned from Babylon, upon the proclamation of Cyrus, Ezra iii. 10. but thro' difficulties and diſcouragements they met with, they deſiſted from the work, and went no farther; a ſtone was not laid upon it; or, as the Targum, a row, or courſe upon courſe, until this time: and now all the intermediate ſpace of time between the firſt laying the foundation of the temple, and their preſent going to work upon it, the prophet would have them take particular notice of; how it had been with them, as to their outward circumſtances; whereby it would appear they had ſinned, and the Lord had been offended with them.

℣. 16. Since thoſe days were, &c.] From the time the foundation of the temple was laid, unto the time they began to work again, which was a ſpace of about fifteen or ſixteen years: when one came to an heap of twenty meaſures, there were but ten; when the huſbandman having gathered in his corn, and who was generally a good judge of what it would yield, came to a heap of it on his cornfloor, either of ſheaves unthreſhed, or corn unwinnowed, and expected it would have produced at leaſt twenty meaſures, ſeahs or buſhels; afterward it was threſhed and winnowed, to his great diſappointment he had but ten out of it; there were ſo much ſtraw and chaff, and ſo little corn; or when he came to a heap of corn, wheat, or barley in his granary, where he thought he ſhould have twenty buſhels of it; but when he had meaſured it, proved but ten; being either ſtolen by thieves, or eaten by vermin; rather the latter: when one came to the preſs-fat for to draw out fifty veſſels out of the preſs, there were but twenty; by the quantity of grapes which he put into the preſs to tread and ſqueeze, he expected to have had fifty meaſures, or baths, or hogſheads of wine; but inſtead of that, had but twenty; the bunches were ſo thin, or the berries ſo bad: there was a greater decreaſe and deficiency in the wine than in the corn.

℣. 17. I ſmote you with blaſting, &c.] That is, their fields and vineyards, with burning winds, which conſumed them; with blights by eaſt-winds: this ſhows the reaſon of their diſappointment, and that it was from the Lord, and for their ſins, by way of chaſtiſement and correction: and with mildew; a kind of clammy dew, which corrupts and deſtroys the fruits of the earth; and is a kind of jaundice to them, as the word ſignifies; ſee Amos iv. 9: and with hail; which battered down the corn and the vines, and broke them to pieces; ſee Exod. ix. 25: in all the labours of your hands; in the corn they ſowed, and in the vines they planted: yet ye turned not to me, ſaith the Lord; did not conſider their evil ways as the cauſe of all this; nor repent of them, and turn from them to the Lord; to his worſhip, as the Targum; or to the building of his houſe, the thing chiefly complained of. Afflictions, unleſs ſanctified, have no effect upon men to turn them from their ſins to the Lord.

℣. 18. Conſider now from this day and upward, &c.] Or forward; for time to come, as the Vulgate Latin verſion: from the four and twentieth day of the ninth month; before obſerved, ℣. 10, 15: even from the day that the foundation of the Lord's temple was laid, conſider it; not from the time it was firſt laid after their return upon the proclamation of Cyrus, but from the time they began to clear that foundation, and to build upon it; and which having lain ſo long neglected, the renewal of it is repreſented as a freſh laying of it: now the prophet, as he had directed them to conſider what adverſity and calamities had attended them from the time of their neglect unto this time; ſo he would have them particularly obſerve what bleſſings they would enjoy from henceforward; by which it would appear, how pleaſing it was to the Lord that they had begun, and were going on with the building.

℣. 19. Is the ſeed yet in the barn? &c.] The ſeed for ſowing the land, in order for the next harveſt: this is by ſome anſwered in the affirmative, it was in the barn, it was not yet ſown; this being the ninth month, the month Ciſleu, which anſwers to part of our November; rather it ſhould be in the negative, no, it was juſt ſown; and therefore no conjecture could be made, whether it would be a good harveſt, or no; yet the prophet, in the name of the Lord, promiſes them a good one ſo long before hand: for the month Ciſleu, which was the ninth month, was the laſt for ſowing, and even the firſt half of that; for ſo ſay [r] the Jews, "half Tiſri, all Marcheſvan, and half "Ciſleu is ſeeds-time;" ſo that this being that month, ſeeds-time muſt have been juſt over; and the ſenſe, is there any ſeed in the barn? no, it is ſown; and ſo, is there any remaining in the granary for the ſupport of families until the next harveſt? they knew there were none, or very little; and yet the Lord promiſes to bleſs them, ſo that they ſhould have enough: yea, as yet the vine, and the fig-tree, and the pomegranate, and the olive-tree hath not brought forth; their ſeveral fruits; this not being the time of their bearing fruit, for it was winter-time; and it could not be ſaid what they would bring forth in their ſeaſon ſo long before hand; yet it is ſuggeſted by the prophet, that they would be very fruitful; which were the principal fruit-trees the land of Iſrael abounded with, Deut. viii. 8. and on which their comfortable ſubſiſtence depended. Kimchi obſerves, that it may be wondered at that the olive-tree ſhould be mentioned, becauſe the time of its bearing fruit were the months of Marcheſvan and Ciſleu; but perhaps the time of its bearing fruit was delayed (as he ſays) becauſe of the curſe upon it: from this day will I bleſs you; with plenty of all good things, in their fields and gardens, in their vineyards and oliveyards; ſo that a difference between former and preſent times, and thoſe to come, would eaſily be diſcerned, and the reaſons of it.

℣. 20. And again the word of the Lord came unto Haggai, &c.] Or a ſecond [s] time, even on the ſame day as the former: in the four and twentieth day of the month; of the ninth month Ciſleu, ℣. 10: ſaying, as follows:

℣. 21. Speak to Zerubbabel governor of Judah, &c.] The former diſcourſe or prophecy chiefly related to the people for their encouragement in building; this is directed to the prince over them, to ſupport him under all the changes and revolutions made in the world; that he ſhould be regarded by the Lord in a very tender manner, and his government continued, as a type of Chriſt and his kingdom: ſaying, I will ſhake the heavens and the earth; make great commotions, changes, and revolutions in the world, by wars, and otherwiſe: the Perſian kingdom being ſubdued by the Grecian; the Grecian by the Romans; the Roman empire by the Goths and Vandals; and the antichriſtian ſtates, both Papal and Mahometan, by the vials of God's wrath poured out upon them, by means of chriſtian princes: ſuch revolutions are often deſigned by the ſhaking of the heavens, eſpecially by earthquakes in the book of the Revelation; ſee ch. vi. 14. and viii. 5. and xi. 13. and xvi. 18.

℣. 22. And I will overthrow the throne of kingdoms, &c.] The Perſian monarchy, which conſiſted of various kingdoms and nations, and was deſtroyed under Darius Codomannus by Alexander the Great, who fought with him three pitched battels, and overcame him; but the thing was of the Lord according to his purpoſe and will, and by his power and providence; and therefore the overthrow is aſcribed to him. The Jews [t] ſay, that the Perſian monarchy fell by the Grecians thirty-four years after the building of the temple; but very wrongly, it laſted longer: and I will deſtroy the ſtrength of the kingdoms of the heathen; the empire of Alexander, which was a very ſtrong one, and contained in it many kingdoms and nations, even the whole world, at leaſt as he thought; and which was divided after his death into ſeveral kingdoms; the ſtrength of which was greatly weakened by one another, and at laſt entirely deſtroyed by the Romans as inſtruments: and I will overthrow the chariots, and thoſe that ride in them, and the horſes, and their riders ſhall come down; which may refer, either to the chariots, and horſes, and their riders belonging to the Grecians, and uſed in their wars; or elſe this may deſcribe the empire of the Romans, which in its turn ſhould be deſtroyed, famous for their triumphal chariots: every one by the ſword of his brother; by inteſtine wars, which was remarkably true of the ſucceſſors of Alexander, as appears from Joſephus [u] and Juſtin [w]: this may be applied to all the kingdoms of this world, which will all be demoliſhed, and be brought into ſubjection to Chriſt, and his kingdom ſhall be ſet up in the world, the ſon and antitype of Zerubbabel, of whom the following words are to be underſtood; ſee Dan. ii. 44. 1 Cor. xv. 24. Rev. xi. 15. Abendana interprets it of the army of Gog and Magog, who ſhall fall every one by the ſword of his brother.

℣. 23. In that day, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, &c.] When all theſe kingdoms, and their thrones and ſtrength are deſtroyed; which ſhows that what follows cannot be underſtood literally of Zerubbabel, who lived not to ſee theſe things done: will I take thee, O Zerubbabel my ſervant, the ſon of Shealtiel, ſaith the Lord; that is, the Meſſiah, as is owned by Abarbinel; who ſays [x], "the king "Meſſiah ſhall come, who is of the ſeed of Zerubbabel; and he ſhall be the ſeal of the ſtructure, and the end of the kingdoms; as it is "ſaid, I will make thee as a ſignet, for I have "choſen thee, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; for this no "doubt is ſaid concerning the days of the Meſſiah:" and another Jewiſh writer [y], quoting the above author for the ſenſe of this paſſage, and Ezek. xxxvii. 25. adds, "for the king Meſſiah "he will be David, and he will be Zerubbabel, that "he may be a rod going out of their ſtem;" and another [z], on theſe words obſerves, "without doubt "this is ſaid concerning the expected Meſſiah, who "will be of the ſeed of Zerubbabel; and therefore this promiſe was not at all fulfilled in him; "for in the time of this prophecy he was but governor of Judah, and he never roſe to greater "dignity than what he then had:" indeed theſe writers wrongly ſuppoſe the Meſſiah yet to come, and whom they in vain expect; and apply this, as they do many other prophecies, to the coming of Chriſt in the fleſh, which belong to his ſpiritual appearance in his churches, or to his perſonal coming at the laſt day: however, this ſhows the conviction on their minds, of the application of this, and ſuch like prophecies to the Meſſiah, who may be called Zerubbabel, as he is ſometimes David, becauſe he ſprung from him, was of his lineage; and becauſe he was a type of him, in bringing the people of the Jews out of the Babyloniſh captivity, in rebuilding the temple, in the government of the people, and in being choſen of God, and precious; as well as a ſervant of the Lord, as here expreſſed, and which is often mentioned as a character of the Meſſiah, Iſ. xlix. 3. and liii. 11: and will make thee as a ſignet; preſerve, protect and defend, love, value and eſteem, and advance to great honour and dignity, power and authority: the ſignet or ſeal on a man's right-hand being what he always wears, is ever in ſight, and he is careful of; as well as is what he greatly eſteems, and is dear unto him, and he highly values; and by which a prince ſigns his decrees and edicts; ſee Iſ. xlix. 2. Cant. viii. 6. Matt. xxviii. 18: for I have choſen thee, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; to be the Redeemer and Saviour of his people; to be their king and governor, and the judge of the world. Chriſt is peculiarly God's elect, and in whom all his people are choſen; he is the choſen of God, and precious, Pſ. lxxxix. 19. Iſ. xlii. 1. 1 Pet. i. 20. and ii. 4. The Targum is, "for in thee I am well pleaſed;" which is ſaid by God the Father concerning Chriſt more than once, Matt. iii. 17. and xvii. 5. It is a prophecy of the exaltation of Chriſt after he had done his work, as the Lord's ſervant, and eſpecially in the latter day, when he ſhall be king over all the earth; all which cannot be ſo well applied to Zerubbabel; unleſs with Reinbeck we underſtand it of the time of his reſurrection from the dead at the laſt day; when great honour ſhall be put upon him as a faithful ſervant, and great love and affection expreſſed to him; but that will be no other than what will be common to all the ſaints, and choſen of God; Chriſt, in whom all prophecies terminate, and ſo this, is doubtleſs intended.

ZECHARIAH.

THIS book is in the Hebrew copies called the book of Zechariah; in the Vulgate Latin verſion, the prophecy of Zechariah; and in the Syriac and Arabic verſions, the prophecy of the prophet of Zechariah. His name, according to Jerom, ſignifies the memory of the Lord; but according to Hillerus[a], the Lord remembers; either us, or his covenant; his promiſes of grace, and concerning the Meſſiah, of which there are many in this book. The writer of this prophecy could not be, as ſome have imagined, Zacharias the father of John the Baptiſt; ſince there muſt be ſome hundreds of years difference between them; nor the Zacharias, the ſon of Barachias, ſlain between the temple and the altar, our Lord ſpeaks of in Matt. xxiii. 35. for tho' their names agree, yet it does not appear that this prophet was ſlain by the Jews; indeed the Jewiſh Targumiſt, on Lam. ii. 20. ſpeaks of a Zechariah, the ſon of Iddo, an high-prieſt, ſlain in the temple; but it could not be this Zechariah, ſince he was no high-prieſt; Joſhua was high-prieſt in his time; nor could he be ſlain in ſuch a place, ſeeing the temple and altar were not yet built; nor was this prophet, Zechariah the ſon of Jehoiada, ſlain in the court of the Lord's houſe, 2 Chron. xxiv. 20, 21. for as their names do not agree, ſo neither their office, he being an high-prieſt, this a prophet; nor the times in which they lived, Zechariah the ſon of Jehoiada lived in the times of Joaſh king of Judah, two or three hundred years before this; but this was one of the captivity of Babylon, and who came up from thence with Zerubbabel, Neh. xii. 16. and was cotemporary with the prophet Haggai; ſo that the time of his prophecy was after the Babyloniſh captivity, and was delivered to the Jews that were returned from thence; and the deſign of it is to ſtir them up to build the temple, and reſtore the pure worſhip of God; and to encourage their faith and hope in the expectation of the Meſſiah; for the book conſiſts of various viſions and prophecies relating to him, and to the times of the goſpel; and the viſions are, as ſome Jewiſh writers[b] obſerve, very obſcure, and like the viſions of Daniel, and difficult of interpretation. There are ſeveral paſſages cited out of this book in the New Teſtament, as ch. viii. 16. in Eph. iv. 25. ch. ix. 9. in Matt. xxi. 5. John xii. 14, 15. ch. xi. 12, 13. in Matt. xxvii. 9. ch. xii. 10. in John xix. 37. Rev. i. 7. and ch. xiii. 7. in Matt. xxvi. 31. Mark xiv. 27. which abundantly confirm the authenticneſs of it. This prophet ſeems to have lived and died in Jeruſalem; and according to Pſeudo-Epiphanius[c], was buried near Haggai the prophet; and with which agree the Cippi Hebraici[d], which inform us, that Haggai was buried in a cave in the declivity of the mount of Olives; and at the bottom of that mount was a large ſtatue called the hand of Abſalom, near to which was the grave of Zechariah the prophet, in a cave ſhut up, and over it a beautiful monument of one ſtone: and Monſieur Thevenot[e] tells us, that now is ſhown near the ſepulchres of Abſalom and Jehoſhaphat, on the deſcent of the mount of Olives, the ſepulchre of the prophet Zacharias.—It is cut in a diamond point upon the rock, with many pillars about it. Sozomen[f] the hiſtorian, indeed makes mention of Caphar Zechariah, a village on the borders of Eleutheropolis, a city in Paleſtine, where it is pretended the body of this prophet was found in the times of Theodoſius, to which no credit is to be given; nor is there any dependence to be had on the former accounts.

CHAP. I.

IN this chapter, after the account of the prophet, and the time of the prophecy by him, are an exhortation of the people of the Jews to repentance; the viſion of a rider upon a red horſe, and the interceſſion of the angel of the Lord for Jeruſalem; and another viſion of the enemies of the Jews, and of their deliverers. In ℣. 1. is the general inſcription of the book; in which an account is given of the time of its writing, and of the writer of it: then follows the exhortation to repentance, enforced from the wrath of God, which came upon their fathers for not hearkening to the Lord, and turning from their evil ways; and from the advantage that would be received thereby, the Lord would return to them; and from the certain accompliſhment of the divine word; for tho' both their fathers and prophets died, the word of the Lord had its ſure effect, ℣. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. and next the viſion of the rider on the red horſe is preſented; the year, month, day, and night in which it was ſeen are mentioned, ℣. 7. and the rider is deſcribed by his form, a man; by the horſe he rode upon, a red one; by the place he ſtood in among the myrtle-trees in the bottom; and by his attendants behind, red horſes ſpeckled and white, ℣. 8. The interpretation of which laſt is given to the prophet by the angel, by the man among the myrtle-trees, and by the anſwer of them to the angel of the Lord themſelves, ℣. 9, 10, 11. After which, the angel is repreſented as making interceſſion for Jeruſalem, who is anſwered by good and comfortable words, ℣. 12, 13. upon which the prophet is bid to publiſh the jealouſy of the Lord for Jeruſalem; his diſpleaſure at the heathens for afflicting them; his promiſe to return to the Jews, that the temple and city of Jeruſalem ſhould be rebuilt, and other cities of Judea, which ſhould enjoy great proſperity, ℣. 14, 15, 16, 17. and the chapter is concluded with a viſion of four horns, ſignifying the enemies of Judah, Iſrael, and Jeruſalem; and of four carpenters that ſhould deſtroy them, ℣. 18, 19, 20, 21.

℣. 1. In the eighth month, &c.] The month Marcheſvan, called the month Bul, in 1 Kings vi. 38. which anſwers to part of our October, and part of November: this was but two months from the firſt prophecy of Haggai, ch. i. 1. and but a few days after his ſecond, ch. ii. 1. ſo near were the prophecies of theſe two prophets together: in the ſecond year of Darius; king of Perſia; not Darius the Mede, but Darius the ſon of Hyſtaſpes: came the word of the Lord unto Zechariah; that is, the word of prophecy from before the Lord, as the Targum paraphraſes it; which came to him, either in a dream, or in a viſion, or by an impulſe on his mind; who is deſcribed by his deſcent, the ſon of Barachiah; mention is made of this name in Matt. xxiii. 35. It ſignifies, the bleſſed of the Lord; and is the ſame with Eulogius or Benedictus: the ſon of Iddo the prophet; the word prophet, as Kimchi obſerves, belongs to Zechariah; not but that his grandfather Iddo might be a prophet too; and the ſame writer takes notice, that in the Midraſh mention is made of Iddo the prophet; and ſo there is an Iddo that is called the ſeer and the prophet in 2 Chron. ix. 29. and xii. 15. and xiii. 22. but whether the ſame with this, is not certain. The name is by ſome thought to be the ſame with Firmicus, Statius, Robertus: ſaying, as follows:

℣. 2. The Lord hath been ſore diſpleaſed with your fathers.] Who lived before, and at the time of the deſtruction of the city of Jeruſalem, and which was manifeſt by their captivity; all which were occaſioned by their ſins, with which they provoked the Lord to ſore diſpleaſure againſt them; and this is mentioned as a caution to their children, that they might not follow their example, and incur the like diſpleaſure.

℣. 3. Therefore ſay thou unto them, &c.] This is an order from the Lord to Zechariah to ſay unto them, in the name of the Lord: thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts; of the hoſts above and below, of angels and of men, of heaven and earth, and all that is therein: this is ſaid, that the greater regard might be had to his words: turn ye unto me, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; by repentance, and acknowledgment of former ſins; by reformation for the future; by attending to the worſhip and ſervice of God, and ſeeking to glorify him. So the Targum, return to my worſhip; this is not the condition of what follows, but what follows is the motive and encouragement to this: and I will turn unto you, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; to dwell among them, manifeſt himſelf unto, and protect them. Three times the phraſe, the Lord of hoſts, is uſed in this verſe: it may be with reſpect to the three perſons in the Godhead, Father, Son, and Spirit; who manifeſt themſelves unto, and take up their abode with, ſuch as love the Lord, and keep his commandments; ſee John xiv. 21, 23.

℣. 4. Be ye not as your fathers, &c.] Who lived before the captivity, and miſuſed the prophets and meſſengers of the Lord, and deſpiſed his word, and fell into groſs idolatry; the evil examples of parents and anceſtors are not to be followed: unto whom the former prophets have cried; ſuch as Hoſea, Iſaiah, Jeremiah, and others: ſaying, thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, turn ye now from your evil ways, and from your evil doings; by their evil ways, may be meant their idolatrous worſhip; and by their evil doings, their immoralities; or by both, their wicked lives and converſations, both before God and men; from whence they were exhorted by the former prophets to turn, and to reform; even now, at that preſent time, they propheſied to them, immediately, leſt deſtruction come upon them: but they did not hear, nor hearken unto me, ſaith the Lord; ſpeaking by his prophets, who were ſent by him, and came and ſpoke in his name; ſo that not hearing them, was not hearing him who ſent them, and whom they perſonated.

℣. 5. Your fathers, where are they? &c.] They are not in the land of the living; they periſhed by the ſword of the Chaldeans, or died in captivity: and the prophets, do they live for ever? meaning either the falſe prophets, as Hananiah and Shemaiah, Jer. xxviii. 17. and xxix. 32. or the true prophets of the Lord; and the words may be conſidered as a prevention of an objection the people might make, taken from their prophets dying in common with their fathers; and ſo the Targum paraphraſes them, and if you ſhould ſay, the prophets, do they live for ever? which is followed by Jarchi, and embraced by many interpreters: the anſwer is, 'tis true they died; but then their words live, and have had their full accompliſhment.

℣. 6. But my words and my ſtatutes which I commanded my ſervants the prophets, &c.] That is, the predictions which he ordered his prophets to declare in his name, that their fathers ſhould die by the ſword, or famine, or peſtilence, or be carried captive, which he purpoſed in himſelf, and threatened them with: did they not take hold of your fathers? overtake them, ſeize upon them, and have their accompliſhment in them? not one thing has failed, or come ſhort of being fulfilled, of all that was determined, or ſaid ſhould be done: and they returned and ſaid; that is, as many of them as periſhed not, but were carried captive; at leaſt many of them, who either were thoroughly converted, and turned from their evil, or however in appearance: and who were obliged to own, like as the Lord of hoſts thought to do unto us, according to our ways, and according to our doing, ſo hath he dealt with us; as he purpoſed, ſo he performed, and that with great juſtice and equity, being what their evil ways and doings righteouſly deſerved; ſee Iſ. xiv. 24.

℣. 7. Upon the four and twentieth day of the eleventh month, which is the month Sebat, &c.] Called Sabat, in the Septuagint verſion, and in 1 Maccab. xvi. 14. It is ſaid by the Jews[g], to be the beginning of the months of the year for trees, of which they bring the firſt fruits. It anſwers to part of our January, and part of February. This is the firſt time that the name of a month is mentioned by any of the prophets; this prophet propheſying after the captivity in Babylon; from whence the Jews[h] ſay, the names of months came along with the returning captives, as well as the names of angels; and we no where meet with them, but in the books of Ezra, Nehemiah, and Eſther, all wrote after that time; for before they uſed only to ſay, the firſt, ſecond, or third month, &c. for as for Abib, Ziſ, Bul, and Ethanim, mentioned in Exod. xiii. 4. 1 Kings vi. 1, 37, 38. and viii. 2. they are thought to be appellatives, and not proper names; tho' it may be obſerved, that the books of Kings are ſaid by the Jews [i] to be written by Jeremiah; more likely by ſeveral prophets, and at laſt brought into the order in which they now ſtand by Ezra, according to Huetius [k]; and which may be thought probable enough; and if ſo, the above names may be reckoned proper names of months; and the original of them may be accounted for as before. There were two faſts appointed by the Jews in this month; one on the tenth day of it, for the death of the elders which ſucceeded Joſhua, Judg. ii. 7. and another on the twenty-third, on account of the Iſraelites making war with the Benjaminites, in revenge of what was done to the wife of the Levite, Judg. xix, xx [l]. This prophecy, and the viſions following to the end of the ſixth chapter, were three months after the former prophecy, or more, if that was on the firſt day of the eighth month; and juſt two months after the foundation of the temple was laid, Hagg. ii. 18: in the ſecond year of Darius, &c. ſee the note on ỷ. 1.

ỷ. 8. I ſaw by night, &c.] Or, that night [m]; the night of the twenty-fourth of Sebat; a proper and uſual time for viſions; and it may denote the obſcurity of the viſion, as it was in ſome reſpects to the prophet; and the ſtate of the church at this time, it being a night-ſeaſon with it, and in a low eſtate; and the care that the Lord, who is Iſrael's keeper, has of them in ſuch ſeaſons, being in the midſt of them: and behold! this is prefixed to the viſion, to denote the wonderfulneſs of it, and to excite attention to it; there being ſomething in it not only amazing, but of moment and importance: a man riding upon a red horſe; not any mere man, as Alexander on his Bucephalus, as Abarbinel interprets it; and ſo Arias Montanus, as Sanctius on the place obſerves; tho' the time this viſion refers to, and the ſtate of the Jews then, will not admit of ſuch an interpretation; for at this time all the earth was ſtill and at reſt, there were no wars in it, ỷ. 11. which agrees not with the times of Alexander, and of his reign, which was wholly ſpent in war; and the whole world in a manner was involved in it by him; but beſt agrees with the times of Cyrus and Darius, after they had ſubdued the Babylonian monarchy: beſides, the Jews were now in a very low eſtate, like a grove of myrtle-trees in a bottom, plain, or valley; and not only ſurrounded and overtopped by other ſtates and kingdoms, which were greatly ſuperior to them; but oppreſſed by their enemies, who hindered them in the rebuilding of their city and temple; whereas this was not their caſe in the times of Alexander, when they were in better circumſtances, and which were two hundred years after this; nor was he ſo very beneficial and ſerviceable to the Jews, as to be repreſented in ſuch a viſion, as in the midſt of them, for their relief and protection; but an angel of the Lord is here meant, as this man is expreſsly called, ỷ. 11. and not a created angel; for he is diſtinguiſhed from the angel that talked with the prophet, ỷ. 9, 13, 14. The Jews, as Jerom relates, think that the angel Michael is meant, by whom they underſtand a created angel; for otherwiſe, if they took him to be as he is, the Son of God, the archangel, the head of principalities; who is, as his name ſignifies, like unto God, and equal to him, it would not be amiſs: and it is uſual for a divine perſon to be called the angel of the Lord, as was he that called to Abraham when ſacrificing his ſon, and to Moſes out of the buſh; and who went before the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, and who is called the angel of God's preſence, and the meſſenger and angel of the covenant; and the ancient Jews themſelves own that a divine perſon is here meant; for on quoting theſe words, I ſaw a man, &c. they ſay [n], there is no man but the holy bleſſed God; as it is ſaid, the Lord is a man of war, the Lord is his name; and tho' he is diſtinguiſhed from the Lord of hoſts, ỷ. 12. the reaſon of this (or otherwiſe it is the title of this angel alſo; ſee Hoſ. xii. 4, 5.) is becauſe he here appears in the form of a man; and becauſe of his office as an interceſſor and advocate for his people, ỷ. 12. a character, which well agrees with Chriſt, who is the advocate with the Father for his ſaints, and who ever lives to make interceſſion for them, and is always heard and anſwered with good and comfortable words: and he is called a man; not that he is a mere man, or was really man when this viſion was ſeen; but he then appeared in an human form, becauſe he ſhould become man, and quickly would be, as it was purpoſed, propheſied, and agreed he ſhould be: and he is repreſented as riding, to denote his majeſty and glory as a king, or as a general of an army, in which he rode proſperouſly; ſee Pſ. xlv. 4. Rev. vi. 2. and xix. 11, 14. as alſo his readineſs, ſwiftneſs and haſte he made to help and ſave his people; as the people of the Jews, in this their preſent time of diſtreſs, being oppoſed and hindered in building their city, in particular; ſo in general, all his people, in whatſoever caſe or circumſtances they may be: thus riding, when aſcribed to a divine perſon, is an emblem of haſte and quick diſpatch, to aſſiſt and relieve the diſtreſſed; ſee Deut. xxxiii. 26. Pſ. lxviii. 4, 5, 32, 33. ſo Chriſt, who here appears as a man, was ready and forward in the council and covenant of grace, to agree to become man, and be the ſurety of his people, and die in their room and ſtead, in order to ſave them: his frequent appearances in an human form before his incarnation, ſhew how willing and ready he was really to aſſume the human nature; and as ſoon as the time appointed for it was up, he tarried not; when the fulneſs of time was come, God ſent him, and he came at once, and immediately; and as ſoon as poſſible he went about the buſineſs he came upon, took delight and pleaſure in it, was conſtant at it till he had finiſhed it; and even his ſufferings and death, which were diſagreeable to nature, conſidered in themſelves, were wiſhed and longed for, and chearfully ſubmitted to by him: and he is quick in all his motions to help his people in all their times of need; nor can any difficulties prevent him giving an early and ſpeedy relief; he comes to them leaping on the mountains, and ſkipping on the hills; and at the laſt day he'll come quickly to put them into the poſſeſſion of ſalvation he has wrought out for them; and will be a ſwift witneſs for them, and againſt wicked men that hate them, and oppoſe them: and he is upon a red horſe, ſignifying either his incarnation, and his bloody ſufferings and death; and his taking peace from the earth when on it, not intentionally, but eventually, thro' the wickedneſs of men; ſee Rev. vi. 4. or his indignation againſt his enemies, and his wrath and vengeance upon them, and the deſtruction of them; and may have a particular reference to thoſe who oppoſed the building of the temple; ſee Iſ. lxiii. 1, 2: and he ſtood among the myrtle-trees which were in the bottom; by the myrtle-trees may be meant the Iſraelites, as Kimchi interprets it; and that either as in Babylon, which he ſuppoſes is deſigned by the bottom; agreeable to the Targum, which paraphraſes the words, and he ſtood among the myrtle-trees which are in Babylon; or rather, as now returned to their own land; and ſo may denote the low eſtate and condition in which they were when they begun to rebuild the temple, being feeble, and oppoſed by their enemies mightier than they; but yet inaſmuch as the Lord was in the midſt of them, they had encouragement to go on in the work, as is ſuggeſted in Hagg. ii. 3, 4, 5. tho' the ſaints and people of God in general may be here meant by the myrtle-trees; and the ancient Jews [o] interpret them of the righteous, ſaying, there are no myrtle-trees but the righteous; and give this as a reaſon, why Eſther was called Hadaſſah, Eſth. ii. 7. which ſignifies a myrtle-tree, becauſe this is the name of the righteous [p]; and theſe may fitly be compared to ſuch trees for their goodlineſs and beauty to look at, for their ſweet and fragrant ſmell, for their verdure and greenneſs, and for their flouriſhing in vallies and watry places [q], ſignified here by the bottom; all which is true of the ſaints, who are pleaſant plants, comely thro' Chriſt's comelineſs; whoſe graces, when in exerciſe, ſend forth a ſweet ſmell; whoſe prayers are odours, and whoſe good works are acceptable, being done in faith; whoſe leaves never wither, and who flouriſh much, being planted by the river of divine love; and in whom the grace of God ever remains, and they perſevere in grace to the end: theſe may be ſaid to be in the bottom, or in a low eſtate; not only before converſion, but after; when corruptions prevail, temptations are ſtrong, grace is weak; God hides his face, Chriſt is abſent, and the Spirit withdraws his influences; and ſo it is true of the church in general, when under perſecution, or peſtered with falſe teachers, and when the life and power of religion are almoſt gone; and yet even then Chriſt ſtands in the midſt of them, to ſympathize with them, and as ready to help and aſſiſt them, to deliver them out of their troubles, to protect them from their enemies, and to reſtore them to their former ſtate and condition. A grove of myrtle-trees in a plain, in which they delight, being dark and ſhady, is thought by ſome to be an emblem of this world, in which there is a mixture of good and bad men; and of the care of providence over human affairs, conſulting the good of man, eſpecially the raiſing up of the church of God out of a low eſtate by Chriſt, and his apoſtles, and other miniſters of the word, performing their offices, according to the different abilities and gifts God has beſtowed upon them [r]: and behind him were there red horſes, ſpeckled and white; that is, with riders on them. Some [s] Jewiſh writers interpret this viſion of the four kingdoms; and underſtand by the red horſe with the man upon it, in the former clauſe, the Babylonian monarchy, of which Nebuchadnezzar was the head; and by theſe three ſorts here, the Medes, Greeks, and Romans, by inverting the order of them; they interpreting the white horſes with the riders on them of the Medes and Perſians; who were kind to the Jews, and under whom they were diſmiſſed from their captivity, and their temple rebuilt: the ſpeckled or thoſe of different colours, the Macedonians or Grecians; ſome of which were friends, and kind and benevolent to the Jews; and others cruel perſecutors of them; and the red, the Romans, who were bloody, and ſlew multitudes of them, and deſtroyed their city and temple: but others, as Jerom obſerves, who relates the above ſenſe, keep the order of the text, and explain the particulars of it thus; the red horſe on which the man rode, and the red horſes behind him, of the Aſſyrians and Chaldeans, who were ſanguine; the one carried away the ten tribes under Salmaneſer; and the other the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, burning the city of Jeruſalem, and laying waſte the temple; the ſpeckled, or thoſe of various colours, the Medes and Perſians; ſome of whom were mild and gentle, as Cyrus, and Darius the ſon of Hyſtaſpes, and Ahaſuerus, whom the Greeks call Artaxerxes, under whom was the hiſtory of Eſther; and others were cruel, as Cambyſes, &c. thoſe, who think that Alexander the Great is meant on the red horſe, ſuppoſe that thoſe that ſucceeded him are meant by the other horſes of various colours; namely, the Lagidæ and the Seleucidæ, or the kings of Egypt and Syria, who were ſometimes very fierce and furious, and ſometimes very friendly to the Jews; at leaſt different kings, and at different times: but it ſeems better to interpret them of ſaints, the godly and faithful followers of Chriſt; not only the godly among the Jews, who were made as his goodly horſe in the battel, ch. x. 3. but the church and people of God in general, who are compared to a company of horſes in Pharaoh's chariot, Cant. i. 9. for their ſtrength, courage, ſerviceableneſs, and the value Chriſt has for them: thus, as he is elſewhere repreſented as riding on a white horſe, under the goſpel-diſpenſation, as the general of an army, and mighty conqueror; ſo the armies of heaven that follow him on white horſes, and clothed in white, are the called, and faithful, and choſen, Rev. xvii. 14. and xix. 14. and ſome of theſe being deſcribed by red horſes with riders on them, may ſignify ſuch who have been called to ſhed their blood, and lay down their lives for Chriſt, and his goſpel, and their profeſſion of it, even the martyrs of Jeſus; and others by ſpeckled horſes, or of various colours, may intend ſuch profeſſors of religion, who, tho' not called to die for Chriſt, yet ſuffer perſecution in various ways, both by reproach and affliction; and whoſe lives may be a chequered work of comforts and troubles, of proſperity and adverſity: and others by white horſes, may point at ſuch who are not only clothed with fine linen, clean and white, the righteouſneſs of the ſaints; and who are more than conquerors thro' Chriſt, who has loved them, which are characters common to all ſaints; but who enjoy a great deal of liberty, peace, and proſperity all their days. Some [t] reſtrain this to the apoſtles of Chriſt, and ſucceeding miniſters of the word; and obſerve, ſerve, that as horſes carry men and other things into the various parts of the world, ſo the miniſters of the goſpel bear the name of Chriſt, and carry his goſpel into the whole world; and as horſes don't go into any part of it of themſelves, but as they are directed by their maſters, ſo the goſpel-miniſters are ſent under the direction of Chriſt, ſome here, and ſome there; and as horſes going thro' towns and villages are moſtly annoyed by the barking of dogs, which yet they regard not, ſo as to ſtop their ſpeed; thus likewiſe faithful preachers are followed with the calumnies of wicked men, with their ſcoffs and jeers, reproaches and perſecutions; but none of theſe things move them, or cauſe them to deſiſt from their work; and as Chriſt the Son of God ſtood among theſe horſes, ſo he is, and has promiſed to be with his miniſtring ſervants unto the end of the world; and as they are like horſes, docible and laborious, ſo the various colours of theſe may have reſpect to them; ſome of whom are called to reſiſt even unto blood; and others to various trials; as well as they have different gifts, and are of different uſefulneſs, and all of them at laſt victorious over their enemies; and are under Chriſt their head, and are ready to do his will in whatſoever he directs them; tho' the more commonly received opinion is, that angels are deſigned, and as it ſeems from ℣. 10, 11. compared with ch. vi. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. ſee alſo 2 Kings ii. 11. and vi. 17. ſignified by horſes, for their ſtrength, courage, ſwiftneſs, ſerviceableneſs, and diſpoſition for war; and theſe different colours may repreſent the different ſtate and condition of the nations with whom they were concerned, and to whom they were ſent, as cruel or kind, to the people of God; and their different employments and ſervices, both to help the ſaints, and render vengeance to their enemies; and the various offices they perform, with reſpect to Chriſt and his people, in things temporal and ſpiritual; and the place and ſituation of theſe horſes being behind Chriſt, may denote his ſuperiority over them: he is ſuperior to all monarchs and monarchies, kingdoms and ſtates; he is King of kings, and Lord of lords; the kingdoms of this world are his, and he is the governor among the nations; they are all behind, and under him, and diſpoſed of by him at his pleaſure; and he can reſtrain them when he thinks fit, from doing any hurt to his people: he is ſuperior to all men, even the beſt and greateſt; he is the head of the church, and king of ſaints; and it is their buſineſs, and even their honour and privilege, to follow him whitherſoever he goes: and he is ſuperior to angels, has a more excellent name and nature than they, is the creator and maker of them, and is worſhipped by them; and even as Mediator, is in a greater office, and in an higher place at the right-hand of God than they are; they are at his beck and command, and at hand to be ſent forth on all occaſions to do his buſineſs, to miniſter for him, and to his people; they are his ſervants, and devoted to his ſervice, and are ready to do his pleaſure.

℣. 9. Then ſaid I, O my Lord, &c.] Theſe are the words of the prophet Zechariah to the angel that ſhowed him this viſion: what are theſe? what is the meaning of this viſion? particularly who are meant by the horſes, red, ſpeckled and white, and thoſe upon them? and the angel that talked with me; who ſeems to be different from the angel of the Lord, the man among the myrtle-trees, ℣. 8, 10, 11. he was one of the miniſtring ſpirits; ſee Rev. xvii. 1. and xxi. 9: ſaid unto me, I will ſhew thee what theſe be; that is, give an interpretation of the viſion, and point out the perſons intended by the horſes.

℣. 10. And the man that ſtood among the myrtle-trees, anſwered and ſaid, &c.] And ſo prevented the angel from giving the account he was about to give; and who was more capable of it, and which to do was great condeſcenſion in him, and was doing the prophet a ſingular honour: theſe are they whom the Lord hath ſent to walk to and fro thro' the earth; which is a deſcription of the angels, the miniſtring ſpirits ſent forth by God to take their tour throughout the earth; not to do miſchief, as ſatan does; but to do good to kingdoms, nations, and men in general, and to the heirs of ſalvation in particular; for which they are commiſſioned and empowered of God; ſee Heb. i. 14.

℣. 11. And they anſwered the angel of the Lord, that ſtood among the myrtle-trees, and ſaid, &c.] That is, the miniſtring angels, ſignified by the red horſes, ſpeckled and white, replied to what the angel of the Lord had ſaid concerning them; or rather agreed to, and confirmed his account of them; or elſe gave up the account of their tour thro' the earth; with their obſervations upon the ſtate of it: we have walked to and fro thro' the earth; according to their miſſion and commiſſion: and behold, all the earth ſitteth ſtill, and is at reſt; was free from wars, as it was in the reign of Darius; tho' the people of the Jews were infeſted with enemies, who gave them trouble, and hindered all they could the rebuilding of the temple; wherefore it follows:

℣. 12. Then the angel of the Lord anſwered and ſaid, &c.] The ſame that was among the myrtle-trees in the bottom, ℣. 8, 10, 11: O Lord of hoſts, how long wilt thou not have mercy on Jeruſalem, and on the cities of Judah; which were fallen to ruin, and had lain waſte for many years. Theſe words are expreſſive of the interceſſion of Chriſt on the behalf of the people of the Jews, his profeſſing people, both with reſpect to their temporal and ſpiritual good: againſt which thou haſt had indignation theſe threeſcore and ten years? the time of the Babyloniſh captivity, which laſted ſuch a term of time, and which was a token of the divine diſpleaſure with them; but to be reckoned, not from Jeconiah's captivity, to the deliverance from it by Cyrus, as it is reckoned, Jer. xxv. 1, 11. Dan. ix. 2. but from the taking of Jeruſalem, and the deſtruction of the temple under Zedekiah, to the rebuilding of the temple under Darius Hyſtaſpis, in whoſe ſecond year Zechariah now propheſied, ℣. 17. which was a ſpace of ſeventy years.

℣. 13. And the Lord anſwered the angel that talked with me, &c.] See ℣. 9. what was the effect of Chriſt's interceſſion for the people of the Jews, was communicated to a miniſtring angel, and by him to the prophet Zechariah: with good words, and comfortable words; ſuch as would be for the good and comfort of God's people, as follows; ſee Iſ. xl. 1, 2.

℣. 14. So the angel that communed with me, &c.] Having an order from the other angel, or the Lord of hoſts: ſaid unto me, cry thou; proclaim, publiſh, declare in the hearing of the people, for their comfort and encouragement. The Targum renders it, propheſy: ſaying, thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, I am jealous for Jeruſalem, and for Zion, with a great jealouſy; which is expreſſive of his conjugal affection for his church and people, his zeal for their good, and his indignation at their enemies, and of the vengeance he would execute on them.

℣. 15. And I am very ſore diſpleaſed with the heathen that are at eaſe, &c.] The Chaldeans and Perſians, and other nations, enemies of the Jews, who were now free from war, and enjoyed great proſperity, when the ſtate and condition of the Jews was very low and diſcouraging: for I was but a little diſpleaſed; that is, with his people the Jews, for their ingratitude, idolatry, and immorality; and which diſpleaſure he ſhewed by ſuffering them to be carried into captivity; ſee Iſ. liv. 8: and they helped forward the affliction; that is, the heathens, among whom the Jews were carried captive; they added to their affliction; they oppreſſed them more than they ought to have done, and more than was agreeable to the will of God, and right in his ſight; and they inſulted them in their miſery, and rejoiced over them. The word עזר, in the Arabic language, ſignifies to abound [u]; and the meaning is, that they abounded in bringing evil upon the people of the Jews; they multiplied their afflictions and diſtreſſes.

℣. 16. Therefore thus ſaith the Lord, I am returned to Jeruſalem with mercies, &c.] Having returned the people of the Jews from their captivity to Jeruſalem, in which he had ſhown abundant mercy to them: my houſe ſhall be built in it, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; meaning the temple, where he dwelt, and was worſhipped; the foundation of which had been laid two months before this prophecy was delivered, Hagg. ii. 18. and which ſhould be raiſed up, and finiſhed, notwithſtanding all the oppoſition of the enemy, and the diſcouragements of the people: and a line ſhall be ſtretched forth upon Jeruſalem; to meaſure with it, and build by it, the wall, ſtreets, and houſes of Jeruſalem. The meaning is, that not only the temple ſhould be built, but the city likewiſe, and that in great order, and with great exactneſs and ſymmetry; ſee ch. ii. 1, 2, 3, 4. The Targum paraphraſes it, upon the building of the walls of Jeruſalem.

℣. 17. Cry yet, ſaying, &c.] That is, propheſy again, as the Targum paraphraſes it; publiſh and declare openly before all: thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, my cities thro' proſperity ſhall yet be ſpread abroad; or, according to the Targum, the cities of my people ſhall be yet filled with good; and ſo the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions, my cities ſhall yet flow with good things; with all temporal proſperity and happineſs; which was fulfilled in the times of Nehemiah, Zerubbabel, and the Maccabees; and eſpecially in the times of the Meſſiah, when, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, they were filled with good; with him who is goodneſs itſelf, and with all bleſſings of grace in him; and with the good news and glad tidings of the everlaſting goſpel preached by him and his apoſtles: or the meaning is, thro' the increaſe of men, and the affluence of all temporal mercies, not only the city of Jeruſalem, but other cities of Judea, called the Lord's, becauſe of his peculiar regard unto them, ſhould be enlarged, and be ſpread here and there; or rather, abound with plenty of all good things, as the word in the Arabic [w] language ſignifies: and the Lord ſhall yet comfort Zion, and ſhall yet chuſe Jeruſalem; for his habitation, building again the city and temple in it: according to Capellus, tho' the temple was finiſhed in the ſixth year of Darius, Ezra vi. 15. yet the rebuilding of Jeruſalem was not till ſeventy years after; namely, in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes Longimanus, in which Nehemiah was ſent to rebuild it, Neh. ii. 1. for Darius reigned thirty-ſix years; Xerxes, who ſucceeded him, reigned twenty years; and in the twentieth of Artaxerxes, the walls of Jeruſalem were rebuilt by Nehemiah; ſo that from the finiſhing of the temple, are to be reckoned thirty years of the remainder of the reign of Darius, twenty years of Xerxes, and as many of Artaxerxes; and he obſerves, that the ſeventieth number thrice occurs in the reſtoration of the Jews; not without myſtery, as it ſhould ſeem: from the Babyloniſh captivity under Jeconiah, to the putting an end to it by Cyrus, were ſeventy years; from the taking of Jeruſalem, and the deſtruction of the temple under Zedekiah, to the rebuilding of it under Darius Hyſtaſpis, were alſo ſeventy years; then from the rebuilding of the temple, to the rebuilding of Jeruſalem under Artaxerxes Longimanus, were likewiſe ſeventy years; ſo that the walls of Jeruſalem lay in ruins twice ſeventy years, that is, one hundred and forty years; and it may be further obſerved, that from the decree granted to Nehemiah in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes, ſeven weeks, or forty-nine years are allowed in Daniel's prophecy for the finiſhing that event; namely, the building again the walls and ſtreets of Jeruſalem in troubleſome times, Dan. ix. 25. which carries the completion of this affair ſo many years farther; which, when effected, would be a comfort to Zion, the inhabitants of it, and all that wiſhed well unto it; and be a proof and evidence of God's choice of it for his worſhip and ſervice; and eſpecially this was fulfilled by bringing into Jeruſalem, and the temple there, the meſſenger of the covenant, the Meſſiah, the conſolation of Iſrael; and this may have a further reference to the latter day, when the people of the Jews ſhall be converted, and all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved; which will be the conſolation of them, and ſhow that God has choſen them, and not caſt them off.

℣. 18. Then I lift up mine eyes, &c.] To behold another viſion, which follows: and ſaw, and behold four horns; either iron ones, ſuch as Zedekiah the ſon of Chenaanah made to puſh the Syrians with, 1 Kings xxii. 11. or horns of beaſts, as the horns of unicorns, to which the horns of Joſeph are compared, Deut. xxxiii. 17. and ſignify kingdoms or kings, and theſe very powerful and mighty; and ſo the Targum interprets them, of four kingdoms; and which Kimchi and Abarbinel underſtand of the four monarchies, Babylonian, Perſian, Grecian, and Roman; ſo ten horns, in Dan. vii. 24. and Rev. xvii. 12. deſign ten kings or kingdoms; unleſs rather, ſeeing theſe horns were ſuch who had already diſtreſſed and ſcattered Judah, Iſrael, and Jeruſalem; and two of the above monarchies were not yet in being, the Grecian and Roman, when this viſion was ſeen; and one of thoſe that were, were friends to the Jews, as the Perſians; they may in general ſignify all the enemies of the Jews that were round about them, on the four corners of them; as the Syrians, Aſſyrians, and Babylonians on the north; the Ammonites and Moabites on the eaſt; the Edomites and Egyptians on the ſouth; and the Philiſtines on the weſt, as Junius thinks. Cocceius interprets them of four kings, Salmaneſer, Nebuchadnezzar, Xerxes, and Artaxerxes the firſt, called Longimanus; and may be applied to the antchriſtian ſtates, pagan and papal, in the ſeveral parts of the world, called horns, Dan. vii. 24. Rev. xii. 3. and xiii. 1.

ỳ. 19. And I ſaid unto the angel that talked with me, &c.] Ver. 9, 13, 14: what be theſe? that is, who do theſe horns ſignify? and what or whom do they repreſent? and he anſwered me, theſe are the horns which have ſcattered Judah, Iſrael, and Jeruſalem; which may deſign the diſtreſſes, vexations, and captivities of the people of Iſrael by their enemies, as by the Moabites, Ammonites, &c. in the times of the Judges; and the captivity of the ten tribes of Iſrael by Salmaneſer; and of the two tribes of Benjamin and Judah, and of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by Nebuchadnezzar; when they were ventilated, or fanned, as the word [x] ſignifies, and ſo ſcattered abroad; ſee Jer. iv. 11. and xv. 7. and alſo their troubles in the times of the Medes and Perſians under Cambyſes, until this ſecond year of Darius; and may likewiſe have reference prophetically to their after-troubles and captivity by the Romans; and to Rome pagan, which perſecuted and ſcattered the churches of Chriſt, and people of God, in the ſeveral parts of the world; and the antichriſtian ſtates, the perſecutors of the ſame.

ỳ. 20. And the Lord ſhewed me four carpenters.] To ſaw and cut in pieces the four horns; or rather, four blackſmiths [y]; theſe horns were horns of iron; ſo the word is rendered a ſmith in 1 Sam. xiii. 19. and indeed it ſignifies both a worker in wood, and a worker in iron; and who are ſometimes diſtinguiſhed by what they work in, whether wood or iron; ſee Iſ. xliv. 12, 13. The Jews ſay [z], theſe four carpenters are, Meſſiah ben David, Meſſiah ben Ephraim, Elijah, and the prieſt of righteouſneſs; or, as elſewhere [a], Elijah, the king Meſſiah, Melchizedek, and he that was anointed for war; tho' Kimchi much better interprets them of the kings, the princes above, who preſide over kingdoms, that is, the angels; and ſo Jerom and Theodoret; who have been ſometimes employed in the deſtruction of the enemies of God's people, or in preventing them doing the miſchief they otherwiſe would; and even the ſeveral monarchies themſelves have been the means of deſtroying each other; ſo the Babylonians were deſtroyed by the Medes and Perſians; the Perſians by the Grecians; the Grecians by the Romans; and the Romans by the Goths, Hunns, Vandals, &c. in the weſtern part of the empire; and by the Saracens and Turks in the eaſtern part of it: and they may be applied to the apoſtles of Chriſt, who were chiefly mechanics, mean and illiterate perſons, yet workmen in the goſpel, that need not to be aſhamed; and who were ſent by Chriſt into the four parts of the world, to ſpread his goſpel, ſet up his intereſt, and pull down the kingdom of ſatan: and ſince the Jews make the Meſſiah himſelf one of theſe carpenters, they have no reaſon to upbraid, or be offended at Jeſus our Meſſiah being a carpenter, and a carpenter's ſon, as in Matt. xiii. 55. Mark vi. 3. and Kimchi owns, that their ancient Rabbins explain this verſe of the days of the Meſſiah.

ỳ. 21. Then ſaid I, what come theſe to do? &c.] That is, theſe four carpenters; for being artificers or workmen, as the Targum renders the word; the prophet concluded there was ſome work for them to do: and he ſpake, ſaying; meaning the angel that talked with him, and interpreted the viſions to him: theſe are the horns which have ſcattered Judah; not that the carpenters were the horns, for theſe two are diſtinct from, and oppoſite to one another. The words ſhould rather be rendered, theſe horns which have ſcattered Judah, as before ſaid, ỳ. 19: ſo that no man did lift up his head; or, as the Targum paraphraſes it, did not ſuffer (a man) to go with an erect ſtature; but thro' oppreſſion, ſorrow, and miſery was obliged to ſtoop, and bow, and hang down his head: but theſe are come to fray them; theſe carpenters are come to fright the horns, to put terror into thoſe kings and kingdoms: to caſt out the horns of the Gentiles; to deſtroy their kingdoms, and take away their power from them: which lift up their horns over the land of Judah to ſcatter it; who make uſe of their power, and do hurt to the people of Iſrael, and triumph and inſult over them; ſee Pſ. lxxv. 4, 5. all which may be applied to the miniſters of the goſpel, who are workmen; and whoſe buſineſs it is to fray or terrify the horns, wicked men, even men in power, the enemies of Chriſt's church and people; by their preaching, which has made a Felix to tremble; by their prayers, which they have been more afraid of, than an army of men, as Mary queen of Scots ſaid of the prayers of John Knox; and by their good lives and converſations, which made Herod ſtand in fear of John the Baptiſt; nay, even they have been a terror to the devil himſelf, and have been the means of caſting him, and his principalities and powers, out of the Gentile world, and out of both the bodies and ſouls of men; and of caſting down the ſtrong holds of ſin, and of breaking in pieces the kingdom and intereſt of ſatan, and of building up the churches of Chriſt: the work of theſe ſpiritual carpenters is, to cut down men, comparable to ſtrong, ſturdy and lofty trees, for the pride and haughtineſs of their hearts, the ſtiffneſs and ſtubbornneſs of their wills, and for their ſhew of goodlineſs and beauty: this is done by the miniſtry of the word, the cutting doctrines of it, accompanied with the Spirit and power of God; as it is ſaid, I have hewed them by the prophets, I have ſlain them by the words of my mouth, Hoſ. vi. 5. whereas, when before, they grew up, and ſtood on their own bottom, their morality, civility, and works of righteouſneſs; now they are cut down, and die to all theſe things, as to any hope of ſalvation by them; and then, as the carpenter ſmooths and planes a timber he has hewed, and fitly frames it together, and joints it in, and lays it on a good foundation; ſo do goſpel-miniſters, as inſtruments in the hands of God, after hewing and cutting work thro' the miniſtration of the law, the killing letter, and which works wrath; ſpeak comfortably to ſuch ſouls, by directing them to the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, for pardon of ſin, and juſtification of life; and miniſterially lay them in the ſpiritual building, the church; or adviſe, and exhort them to ſubmit to the ordinances of Chriſt, and join themſelves to goſpel-churches; and above all things, inſtruct them to build on Chriſt, the ſure foundation in Zion; and miniſterially lay him as the alone-foundation to build upon for life and ſalvation, and not upon any works of righteouſneſs done by them; and put them upon walking according to the line and rule of the divine word, in matters of worſhip, diſcipline and converſation; and as there were in the firſt times of the goſpel many ſuch builders, and have been more or leſs ſince; ſo there will be many more in the latter day, who will be very ſucceſsfully employed in building, repairing, and beautifying the church of God; ſee Iſ. lviii. 12. and lx. 10. and lxi. 4. Zech. vi. 15. CHAP. II.

THIS chapter contains a prophecy of the church under the goſpel-diſpenſation; of the largeneſs and numbers of it; and of its protection and glory, thro' the preſence of God in it. In this viſion, a man is ſeen with a meaſuring line in his hand, to meaſure Jeruſalem with, ℣. 1, 2. upon which an angel bids the angel that talked with the prophet to declare to him the largeneſs, populouſneſs and ſafety of Jeruſalem, ℣. 3, 4, 5. then follows an exhortation to the people of God to come out of Babylon, ℣. 6, 7. and then a promiſe of the calling of the Gentiles, and of God's gracious inhabitation in his church, which would be matter of joy to Zion; and of his inheriting Judah, and chuſing Jeruſalem, ℣. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. and the chapter is concluded with an addreſs to all mankind, to be ſilent before the Lord, ſince he was raiſed up out of his habitation, ℣. 13.

℣. 1. I lift up mine eyes again, and looked, &c.] And ſaw a third viſion; which, as Kimchi owns, refers to the times of the Meſſiah; tho' it might be of uſe to the Jews then preſent, to encourage them to expect the rebuilding of Jeruſalem, in a literal ſenſe: and behold, a man with a meaſuring line in his hand; by whom is meant, not Nehemiah, nor Zerubbabel; ſee ch. iv. 10. who were concerned in the building of Jeruſalem; nor any mere man, nor even a created angel; for tho' he may be the ſame with the other angel, that did not talk with the prophet, ℣. 3. as Kimchi obſerves; ſeeing he ſeems to be ſuperior to him that did; yet not a miniſtring ſpirit, but the Meſſiah, who in this book is often ſpoken of as a man; ſee the note on ch. i. 8. and by the meaſuring line in his hand, may be meant eternal predeſtination, the Lamb's book of life, which is in his keeping; and is the meaſure and rule by which he proceeds in the vocation, juſtification, and glorification of the firſt-born, whoſe names are written in heaven; or the ſcriptures of truth, the meaſure and rule of doctrine, diſcipline, worſhip, and converſation; and according to which, Chriſt forms, conſtitutes, and regulates goſpel-churches; ſee Ezek. xl. 3. Rev. xi. 1.

℣. 2. Then ſaid I, whither goeſt thou? &c.] As it ſhewed great freedom and boldneſs in the prophet to put ſuch a queſtion to the man with the meaſuring reed, it was great condeſcenſion in him to return him an anſwer, as follows: and he ſaid unto me, to meaſure Jeruſalem; not literally underſtood, which was not yet thoroughly built; but the goſpel-church, often ſo called; ſee Heb. xii. 22. and this meaſuring of it denotes the conformity of it to the rule of God's word; a profeſſion of the true doctrines of it, and an obſervance of the ordinances of it, as delivered in it; and an agreement of the walk, life, and converſation of its members with it: to ſee what is the breadth thereof, and what is the length thereof; the length of the new Jeruſalem is as large as the breadth; its length, breadth, and height are equal, Rev. xxi. 16.

℣. 3. And behold, the angel that talked with me, went forth, &c.] See ch. i. 9, 13, 14, 19. and he went forth from the place where the prophet was, with whom he had been converſing: and another angel went out to meet him; the ſame that was ſeen among the myrtle-trees, ch. i. 8. and here, with a meaſuring line in his hand, ℣. 1.

℣. 4. And ſaid unto him, &c.] That is, the other angel ſaid to the angel that had been talking with the prophet, run, ſpeak to this young man; meaning Zechariah, who was either young in years, as Samuel and Jeremiah were, when they propheſied; or he was a ſervant of a prophet older than he, and therefore ſo called, as Joſhua, Moſes's miniſter, was, Numb. xi. 28. as Kimchi obſerves: ſaying, Jeruſalem ſhall be inhabited as towns without walls; this ſhows that this is not to be underſtood of Jeruſalem in a literal ſenſe, for that was not inhabited as a town without a wall; its wall was built in Nehemiah's time, and remained until the city was deſtroyed by Veſpaſian; yea, it had a treble wall, as Joſephus ſays [b]; but of the church of Chriſt in goſpel-times; and denotes both the ſafety and ſecurity of it; ſee Ezek. xxxviii. 11. and the populouſneſs of it; and eſpecially as it will be in the latter day, when both Jews and Gentiles are called, and brought into it; which ſenſe is confirmed by what follows: for the multitude of men, and cattel therein; the Jews being meant by men; ſee Ezek. xxxiv. 31. and the Gentiles by cattel, to which they uſed to be compared by the former: this will be fulfilled, when the nation of the Jews will be born at once, and all Iſrael will be ſaved, and the fulneſs of the Gentiles ſhall be brought in; for the number of the ſpiritual Iſrael, the ſons of the living God, both Jews and Gentiles, ſhall be as the ſand of the ſea, which cannot be meaſured, Hoſ. i. 10. Rom. ix. 26. and when there will be ſuch a large increaſe of converts, and ſuch flockings to Zion, to the ſpiritual Jeruſalem, the church of God, that the place will be too ſtrait for them, Iſ. xlix. 19, 20. whereas, when Jeruſalem in a literal ſenſe was rebuilt, after the Babyloniſh captivity, there was a want of perſons to inhabit it, and lots were caſt for one out of ten to dwell in it; and they were glad of others that offered themſelves willingly to be inhabitants of it, Neh. xi. 1, 2. for there was but a ſmall number that returned from Babylon to repeople the city of Jeruſalem, and the whole country of Judea; no more came from thence, but forty-two thouſand, three hundred, and threeſcore, beſides men and maid-ſervants, which amounted to ſeven or eight thouſand more, Ezra ii. 64, 65. Neh. vii. 66, 67. which were but a few to fill ſuch a country, and ſo many cities and towns that were in it, beſides Jeruſalem; and yet Joſephus [c] affirms, that the number of thoſe of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, that came up from thence, and were above twelve years of age, were four millions, ſix hundred, and twenty-eight thouſand; in which he is followed by Zonaras [d], and it is admitted and approved of by Sanctius on the place; which is not only contrary to the accounts of Ezra and Nehemiah, but is incredible; that ſuch a number that went into captivity, which was not very large, ſhould under all the diſtreſſes and oppreſſions they laboured, in ſeventy years time, ſo multiply, and that two tribes only, as to be almoſt eight times more than all the twelve tribes were at their coming out of Egypt; a number large enough to have over-run the Babylonian monarchy; and too many to be ſupported in ſo ſmall a country as the land of Canaan: wherefore, upon the whole, it muſt be beſt to interpret this of ſpiritual and myſtical Jeruſalem, and of the populouſneſs of the church of Chriſt in the latter day.

[b] De bello Jud. l. 5. c. 4. §. 2.

℣. 5. For I, ſaith the Lord, will be unto her a wall of fire round about, &c.] So that ſhe needs no other wall to ſecure her, the power of God encompaſſing her about as the mountains did Jeruſalem, Pſ. cxxv. 2. and he being as a wall of fire to terrify and deſtroy her enemies; for our God is a conſuming fire, Heb. xii. 29. Druſius thinks 'tis a metaphor taken from travellers in ſome countries, who kindle fires about their tents, to keep off lions, and other beaſts of prey; and obſerves of lions particularly, that they are exceedingly terrified by fire; for which he refers to John Leo in his deſcription of Africa; and Pliny makes [e] mention of ſeveral things that are terrifying to them, but eſpecially fires, he ſays; and ſo Dr. Shaw [f] of late, ſpeaking of the lions in Barbary, remarks, fire is what they are the moſt afraid of; yet notwithſtanding all the precautions of the Arabs in this reſpect, with others, he takes notice of, it frequently happens, that theſe ravenous beaſts outbraving all thoſe terrors, will leap into the midſt of an incloſure or fold, and drag from thence a ſheep, or a goat; and Tavernier [g] tells a ſtory, by which he thinks it appears to be a vulgar error, that lions will not come near the fire; tho' the relation itſelf ſhews it to be not only a received opinion, but a common cuſtom to light fires in the night, to preſerve from lions: his ſtory is, "a "party of Dutch ſoldiers, under the command of "a ſerjeant, far advanced in the country (about "the Cape of Good Hope), and night coming on, "they made a great fire, as well to keep them-"ſelves from the lions, as to warm themſelves, "and ſo lay down to ſleep round about it; being "aſleep, a lion ſeized one of the ſoldier's arms, "which with difficulty was got out, after the lion "was ſhot;" but this ſeems to be the caſe, when theſe creatures are dreadfully hunger-bitten; however, be it as it will, God is the ſure and ſafe protection of his people; who went before the people of Iſrael in a pillar of cloud by day, and in a pillar of fire by night, when they paſſed thro' a terrible wilderneſs, in which were beaſts of prey; and ſurrounded Eliſha with horſes and chariots of fire, when the king of Syria ſent a large hoſt to take him; ſo that he could ſay to encourage his ſervant, they that be for us are more than they that be with them, 2 Kings vi. 15, 16, 17. who ſeem to be angels; and the Jews [h] here interpret it of the family of God, his angels, made a wall to Jeruſalem to preſerve it; the cherubim and a flaming ſword ſet to keep the garden of Eden, were, according to Lactantius [i], a wall of fire about it; for (he ſays) when God caſt man out of paradiſe, he walled it about with fire: but that was that man might not enter in; but here he himſelf is a wall of fire, that his people may be ſafe; hence they have no reaſon to fear the wrath of their enemies, the moſt fierce and furious, ſavage and cruel, comparable to lions, bears, &c. for if God is for them, on their ſide, and on all ſides of them, who can be againſt them to any purpoſe? The Targum paraphraſes it, "my "word ſhall be unto her, ſaith the Lord, as a "wall of fire encompaſſing her round about:" and will be the glory in the midſt of her; appear glorious in her, be glorified in her, and by her, and be her glory, and make her glorious; as the Lord does by granting his gracious preſence with his church and people, in his word and ordinances; ſee Iſ. iv. and lx. 13.

℣. 6. Ho, ho, &c.] This word expreſſes a call and proclamation; and is doubled, as Kimchi obſerves, to confirm it; and ſo the Targum paraphraſes it, "proclaim to the diſperſed:" come forth, and flee from the land of the north, ſaith the Lord; that is, from Babylon, which lay north of Judea; ſee Jer. i. 13, 14. and iii. 12. and vi. 22. and xvi. 15. where many of the Jews continued, and did not return with the reſt when they came up out of the captivity; and are therefore called to come forth from thence in haſte; and figuratively deſigns, either the people of God that are among the men of the world, and are called to ſeparate from them, and have no fellowſhip with them; or ſuch as will be in myſtical Babylon, a little before its deſtruction; and will be called out of it, leſt they partake of her plagues; ſee Rev. xviii. 4: for I have ſpread you abroad as the four winds of the heaven, ſaith the Lord; meaning either the diſperſion of the Jews in Babylon, and other countries; or of the people of God, being ſcattered up and down in the juriſdiction of Rome, papal; or the ſenſe is, that it was his will and purpoſe when they were come out of Babylon, that they ſhould be ſpread in the ſeveral parts of the world, to ſupport the cauſe of Chriſt, and ſtrengthen his intereſt.

℣. 7. Deliver thyſelf, O Zion, &c.] Or make thy eſcape, you that belong to mount Zion, the city of the living God, and ought to have your abode there, and not in Babylon: flee from thence, that dwelleth with the daughter of Babylon; in any of the antichriſtian ſtates, who are the daughters of Babylon, the mother of harlots, Rev. xvii. 5. ſo it may be rendered, that inhabits the daughter of Babylon [k]; dwells in any of the cities, towns, and villages belonging to it.

℣. 8. For thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, &c.] Chriſt, who is the true Jehovah, and Lord of armies, as appears from his being ſent in the next clauſe: after the glory; which is promiſed, ℣. 5. ſo the Targum and Kimchi; or, afterwards ſhall be the glory[l]; or a glorious time and ſtate; that is, after God's people are brought out of myſtical Babylon, when the Jews ſhall be converted, and the fulneſs of the Gentiles ſhall be brought in, then will be the latter day-glory; and at the ſame time will be the fall and deſtruction of antichriſt, and of the antichriſtian ſtates, as follows: hath he ſent me unto the nations which ſpoiled you; the Chaldeans and Babylonians, who ſpoiled and carried captive the Jews; or the antichriſtian nations, which perſecuted and waſted the people of God, the followers of the Lamb; but now Chriſt will be ſent, and will come in a ſpiritual manner, and take vengeance on them; he will deſtroy antichriſt with the breath of his mouth, and with the brightneſs of his coming; with the ſharp ſword going out of his mouth, Rev. xix. 15: for he that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of his eye; either his own eye, he hurts himſelf; or the eye of the Lord of hoſts; of mine eye, as ſome read it[m], as the Vulgate Latin verſion; which ſhows how near and dear the Lord's people are to him. The pupil or apple of the eye is a little aperture or perforation in the middle of the tunic or coat of the eye, called the uvea and iris, about which the iris forms a ring; and thro' this little opening the rays of light paſs to the cryſtalline humour, to be formed on the retina or net, at the bottom of the eye. It is a very weak and tender part, and eaſily hurt with the leaſt thing; and fitly deſcribes the feeble ſtate of Chriſt's people; and how ſoon and eaſily they may be diſturbed, diſtreſſed, and hurt by their enemies: and as this is a principal part of the eye, and a part of a man's ſelf, dear and valuable to him; ſo are the Lord's people parts, as it were, of himſelf; they are members of his body, cloſely united to him; and whatever injury is done to them, he reckons as done to himſelf: Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? Acts ix. 5. and being highly eſteemed by him, and having the ſtrongeſt affection for them, he reſents every affront given them, and will puniſh all that hurt them; and exceeding careful is he of them, to keep and preſerve them from being hurt: he kept him as the apple of his eye, Deut. xxxii. 10. which, being ſuch an uſeful and tender part as it is, it is wonderfully provided for by nature againſt all events; beſides the orbit in which it is placed; and the eye-brows, which prevent many nuſances; and the eye-lids, which cover and defend it in ſleep; and the fringes of hair on them, which break the too violent impreſſions of light, and keep off moats and flies; there are no leſs than ſix tunics or coats about it[n], as ſo many preſervatives of it: now, as the God of nature has taken ſo much care of this uſeful member of the human body, how much more careful and tender muſt we ſuppoſe the God of grace, and our merciful Redeemer and high-prieſt to be over his dear people, parts of himſelf, redeemed by his blood, and deſigned and prepared for eternal glory and happineſs; and how daring muſt ſuch be, who offer the leaſt violence unto them; nor muſt they expect to eſcape his wrath and vengeance, that ſeek their hurt, and give them diſturbance; ſee Pſ. xvii. 8. and as this may reſpect the Jews called out of Babylon in the two preceding verſes, it may be concluded that they were obedient to the divine call, tho' it is not recorded; it being not likely that God, who had ſo great a regard for them, would ſuffer them to continue there to their deſtruction; for it was about two years after this prophecy, in the fourth year of Darius, or the beginning of the fifth, that Babylon revolted from him, and was beſieged twenty months by him, before he took it; and which he did at laſt by the ſtratagem of Zopyrus, one of his generals, when he beat down its walls and gates, and put to death three thouſand of the inhabitants that were moſt guilty[o]; but before this, it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that the people of God, ſo dear unto him as is expreſſed, were called out from hence; as thoſe of his people, equally dear to him, will be called out of myſtical Babylon before its deſtruction; ſee Rev. xviii. 4.

℣. 9. For behold, I will ſhake mine hand upon them, &c.] The nations; either the Babylonian, or the antichriſtian ſtates; meaning, that he would exert his power, and inflict puniſhment on them, and utterly deſtroy them; which would be done by the bare ſhaking of his hand: and they ſhall be a ſpoil to their ſervants; as the Babylonians were to the Perſians; not thro' Cyrus, which had been done; but thro' Darius, who took Babylon, after a ſiege of twenty months, and put great numbers to death; and all became a ſpoil to the Perſians, who had been their ſervants: or the ten kings, that gave their kingdoms to the beaſt, and were ſubject to him; but now ſhall hate the whore, and eat her fleſh; and all her riches and revenues ſhall be a ſpoil unto them, and be divided among them, Rev. xvii. 12, 16: and ye ſhall know that the Lord of hoſts hath ſent me; either the prophet Zechariah, that he was a true prophet, and had his miſſion from the Lord of hoſts, as will appear by the accompliſhment of theſe prophecies; or rather, Chriſt, ſent by God the Father; and who will be known and owned by the Jews, as well as by the Gentiles, to be the ſent of God, when they ſhall be converted, and antichriſt ſhall be deſtroyed. Kimchi refers this, and the following verſe, to the times of the Meſſiah.

℣. 10. Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion, &c.] Or, congregation of Zion, as the Targum paraphraſes it; the Jewiſh church, great numbers of that people being converted, and in a church-ſtate; or the whole chriſtian church at this time, conſiſting of Jews and Gentiles, who are called upon to rejoice and ſing at the deſtruction of antichriſt; ſee Rev. xviii. 20. and xix. 1, 2. and becauſe of the preſence of God in the midſt of them, as follows: for lo, I come; not in the fleſh: this is not to be underſtood of the incarnation of Chriſt; or of his coming in human nature to dwell in the land of Judea; but of his ſpiritual coming in the latter day, to ſet up his kingdom in the world, in a more viſible and glorious manner: and I will dwell in the midſt of thee, ſaith the Lord; the preſence of Chriſt in his churches, and with his people, in attendance on his word and ordinances, will be very manifeſt and conſtant in the latter day.

℣. 12. And the Lord ſhall inherit Judah his portion in the holy land, &c.] The Lord's people is his portion, and the lot of his inheritance; whom he has choſen, and calls as ſuch, whether they be Jews or Gentiles; but here it ſeems to mean the believing Jews; who, it is very likely, upon their converſion, will be returned to their own land, here called the holy land; becauſe formerly here the Lord's holy people dwelt; his holy ſanctuary was, and his holy worſhip and ordinances were attended on; and where now he will poſſeſs and enjoy his people, and favour them with communion with himſelf: and ſhall chuſe Jeruſalem again; after long trodden down of the Gentiles; as it formerly was a place of divine worſhip, ſo it ſhall be again; and which will be performed in it in a more ſpiritual and evangelical manner than ever; or it may reſpect the people of the Jews, who, being called by grace, this will be a kind of a renovation of their election, and an evidence of it; ſee Rom. xi. 26, 27, 28.

℣. 13. Be ſilent, O all fleſh, before the Lord, &c.] Be filled with fear, awe, and aſtoniſhment at the wonderful work of God; the deſtruction of antichriſt; the converſion of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles: let them not open their mouths, or dare to ſay one word againſt it. The Targum interprets the words of the wicked, and paraphraſes them thus, "let all the wicked be conſumed before the Lord;" ſee Pſ. civ. 35. and it ſeems to deſign the reſt of the people, who will not be converted; called fleſh, being not only frail and mortal, but corrupt and ſinful; and ſo not able to contend with God, who is mighty in ſtrength, and glorious in holineſs, and a God doing wonders. A like phraſe is in Hab. ii. 20: for he is raiſed up out of his holy habitation; which is heaven, Iſ. lxiii. 15. where he ſeemed to have been as it were aſleep for many hundreds of years, even during the reign of antichriſt; but now he will be as a man awaked out of his ſleep, and will ariſe to take vengeance on his and his churches enemies, and to help them, and make them happy and glorious.

CHAP. III.

IN this chapter, under the type of Joſhua the high-prieſt, is ſhewed the ſtate and condition of the prieſthood, and of the church of God in his times; and in it are ſeveral promiſes concerning the true high-prieſt, Chriſt, and of the efficacy and permanency of his prieſthood. The viſion of Joſhua is in the form of a judicial proceſs: Joſhua is the perſon accuſed, and is deſcribed by his ſituation, ſtanding before the angel of the Lord; and by the filthy garments he had on, which were the ground of the charge againſt him, ℣. 1, 3. The accuſer of him is ſatan, who ſtood at his right-hand; and his judge is the angel of the Lord, before whom he was, ℣. 1. The ſentence given againſt his accuſer is by way of rebuke, enforced by the Lord's choice of Jeruſalem, and merciful deliverance of this perſon; and as given in his favour, is an order to take his filthy garments from him, and clothe him with change of raiment, and to put a fair mitre on his head; which were accordingly done, ℣. 2, 4. 5. and a promiſe is made him, by way of proteſtation, that if he would walk in his ways, and keep his charge, he ſhould judge his houſe, and keep his courts, and ſhould have a walking place among thoſe that ſtood by, ℣. 6, 7. and next Joſhua, and thoſe that were with him, are addreſſed as men wondered at; and are called upon to hearken to a promiſe of the Meſſiah, under the character of the branch, ℣. 8. and under that of a ſtone with ſeven eyes on it, and engravings in it, by whom the iniquity of God's people is removed, ℣. 9. and the chapter is cloſed with an account of the proſperity, peace, and ſafety of the ſaints under the goſpel-diſpenſation, ℣. 10.

℣. 1. And he ſhewed me Joſhua the high-prieſt, &c.] Who was one that came up out of the captivity, and was principally concerned in building the temple, and had many enemies to obſtruct him in it; and who falling into ſin, or his ſons, in marrying ſtrange wives, Ezra x. 18. which he might connive at, ſatan was ready to catch it up, and accuſe him before God; tho' rather Joſhua is to be conſidered, not perſonally, but typically, repreſenting the ſtate and condition of the prieſthood, in which office he was; and which was very low, mean and abject, under the ſecond temple; or the church of God, which the prieſts, eſpecially the high-prieſt, were repreſentatives of: and indeed this viſion may be accommodated to the caſe of any ſingle believer, fallen into ſin, and accuſed by ſatan, and whoſe advocate Chriſt is: ſtanding before the angel of the Lord; not any created angel, but Chriſt the angel of God's preſence, who is called Jehovah, ℣. 2. is the rebuker of ſatan, and the advocate of his people; and who takes away their ſins, and clothes them with his righteouſneſs: and ſtanding before him, does not mean barely being in his ſight and preſence, but as miniſtring to him; this being the poſture both of angels and men, the ſervants of the Lord, Dan. vii. 10. Pſ. cxxxiv. 1. and cxxxv. 1, 2. either he was offering ſacrifice for the people, or aſking counſel of God for them; or rather giving thanks for his and their deliverance from captivity, being as brands taken out of the fire; and praying to be ſtript of his filthy garments, and to be clothed with others more decent, and becoming his office; and for help and aſſiſtance in the building of the temple, and againſt thoſe that obſtructed him: alſo he was brought and placed here as a guilty perſon, charged with ſin; and to be tried before him, ſatan ſtanding at his right-hand to reſiſt him; either to hinder him in his work of building the temple, by ſtirring up Sanballat, and other enemies; or rather to accuſe him of ſin, and bring a charge againſt him, and get ſentence paſſed upon him; ſo the accuſer uſed to ſtand at the right-hand of the accuſed. The Targum paraphraſes it, "and ſin ſtanding at his "right-hand to reſiſt him:" when the people of God fall into ſin, ſatan the accuſer of the brethren, their avowed enemy, obſerves it, and accuſes them before the Lord, and ſeeks their condemnation. Maimonides [p] underſtands this, of his ſtanding at the right-hand of the angel; but it was not uſual for the proſecutor, accuſer, or pleader, whether for or againſt a perſon arraigned, to ſtand at the right-hand of the judge: indeed, in the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, or grand court of judicature, there were two ſcribes ſtood before the judges; the one on the right-hand, the other on the left; who took down in writing the pleadings in court, and the ſentences of thoſe that were acquitted, and of thoſe that were condemned; he on the right-hand the former, and the other on the left-hand the latter [q]. The prince or chief judge of the court ſat in the middle; and his deputy, called Ab Beth Din, or father of the court, ſat at his right-hand; and a wiſe man, a principal one, at his left [r]; but it was uſual for the pleader, who was called בעל ריב Baal Rib, to ſtand on the right-hand of the party cited into the court, whether he pleaded for, or againſt him [s]: and to this cuſtom is the alluſion here, and in Pſ. cix. 6, 31. where ſatan, who is the accuſer of men, and pleads againſt them, is placed at the right-hand, as here; and God, who pleads the cauſe of his poor people, is alſo repreſented as ſtanding on their right-hand. The buſineſs of ſatan here was to accuſe, to bring charges, to plead for condemnation, and endeavour to get the ſentence of it paſſed againſt Joſhua; for he was at his right-hand, to be an adverſary to him, as his name (ſatan) ſignifies, which he has from the word here uſed; being an enemy to mankind in general, and eſpecially to the people of God, and more eſpecially to perſons in ſacred public offices; to whom he is ἀντίδικος a court-adverſary, as the apoſtle Peter calls him, 1 Pet. v. 8. who appears in open court againſt them, and charges them in a moſt ſpiteful aud malicious manner; and is a moſt implacable, obſtinate, and impudent one, as his name ſignifies, and the word, from whence it is derived [t]; tho' Maimonides [u] thinks the name is derived from שטה, which ſignifies to decline, or go back from any thing; ſince he, without doubt, makes men to decline from the way of truth, to the way of falſhood and error.

℣. 2. And the Lord ſaid unto ſatan, &c.] The ſame with the angel of the Lord, ℣. 1. having heard the charge brought by him againſt Joſhua, here called Jehovah, being the ſon of God, and properly God: the Lord rebuke thee, O ſatan; theſe words may be conſidered, either as the interceſſion of Jehovah the Son, with Jehovah the Father, for Joſhua and his church, and againſt ſatan; that he would reprove him for his malice and wickedneſs; ſtop his mouth, and ſilence him, that he might not go on to accuſe; that he would confound his ſchemes, and reſtrain him from doing miſchief; tread him down, and bruiſe him under the feet of his people, and pour out his wrath upon him: or as a declaration of what ſhould be done to him, or what he himſelf would do; for it may be rendered, the Lord will rebuke thee [w]; as the following clauſe is by ſome, who take this to be a wiſh, and the following a poſitive declaration, that Jehovah the Father would certainly rebuke ſatan; as might be concluded from the reaſons and arguments uſed by the angel, taken from God's choice of Jeruſalem; the building of which ſatan endeavoured to hinder, tho' God had choſen it for his habitation and worſhip; and from the deliverance of Joſhua out of the fire for that purpoſe: and this reproof of him on the behalf of his people, is founded on their election of God; even the Lord that hath choſen Jeruſalem rebuke thee; which act is eternal; ſprings from the love and grace of God towards them; antecedes all works, good or bad, done by them; ſtands firm, ſure, and unalterable; ſuch who are intereſted in it, are called, juſtified, and ſhall be glorified; nor has ſatan any thing to do with them; nor will any charge of his be of any avail againſt them, Rom. viii. 33: is not this a brand pluckt out of the fire? which is to be underſtood of Joſhua; not of his being delivered out of that fire, into which the Jews [x] ſay he was caſt, along with Ahab and Zedekiah, whom the king of Babylon roaſted in it, Jer. xxix. 22. when he marvellouſly eſcaped; others ſay [y], 8000 young prieſts fled to the temple, and were burnt in it, and only Joſhua was preſerved; but of his deliverance out of the Babyloniſh captivity, and alſo of the prieſthood, which, during the captivity, when the temple was deſtroyed, and temple-ſervice ceaſed, was like a brand in the fire; and tho' Joſhua the high-prieſt was returned, and the prieſthood in ſome meaſure reſtored, yet not to its former glory, the temple not being yet built; and therefore was but like a ſmoking fire-brand; likewiſe the people of God may be meant; ſee Amos iv. 11. who are by nature like a branch cut off, a dry ſtick caſt into the fire, and half burnt; they are in a ſtate of ſeparation from God, Father, Son, and Spirit; and they are unprofitable and unfruitful, and in danger in themſelves of being conſumed in the fire of divine wrath, of which they are as deſerving as others, and are under the ſentence of it; and when convinced, have dreadful apprehenſions of being conſumed by it; but thro' the grace, mercy, love, and power of God, they are plucked out of this ſtate in effectual vocation, and are ſecured from everlaſting deſtruction; wherefore ſatan is rebuked for attempting to bring any who are inſtances of ſuch grace and goodneſs into condemnation; it being wicked and malicious, bold and daring, vain and fruitleſs; ſince ſuch are ſecured by the grace and power of God, and are preſerved for everlaſting glory and happineſs.

℣. 3. Now Joſhua was clothed with filthy garments, &c.] Having fallen into ſin. The Jewiſh writers [z] interpret this of the ſin of his children in marrying ſtrange wives, Ezra x. 18. or he had married one himſelf, as Jerom from the Jews, on the place; or a whore, as Juſtin Martyr [a] ſuggeſts; or had been ſlothful and ſluggiſh in rebuilding the temple; and be it what it will, ſatan had aggravated it, and repreſented him as a moſt filthy creature, ture, covered with ſin, and as it were clothed with it: ſins may well be called filthy garments, ſince righteouſneſſes are as filthy rags, Iſ. lxiv. 6. It may alſo denote the imperfection of the Levitical prieſthood, and the pollutions in it, at leaſt in thoſe who officiated therein, and eſpecially under the ſecond temple; as well as may repreſent the defilements of the Lord's people by ſins they fall into: and ſtood before the angel; as an accuſed perſon, charged with ſin, and waiting the iſſue of the proceſs againſt him: he ſtood under an humble ſenſe of his iniquities, looking to the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt for pardon and juſtification; praying and intreating that theſe filthy garments might be took away from him, and he be clothed with fine linen, ſuitable to his character as a prieſt. Such a ſordid dreſs was the habit of perſons arraigned for crimes. It was uſual, eſpecially among the Romans, when a man was accuſed of, and charged with, capital crimes, and during his arraignment, to let down his hair, ſuffer his beard to grow long, to wear filthy ragged garments, and appear in a very dirty and ſordid habit; hence ſuch were called ſordidati [b]: nay, it was not only cuſtomary for the accuſed perſon, when he was brought into court before the people to be tried, to be in ſuch a filthy dreſs; but even his near relations, friends and acquaintance, before the court went to voting, uſed to appear in like manner, with their hair diſhevelled, and clothed with garments foul and out of faſhion, weeping and crying, and deprecating puniſhment; thinking by ſuch a filthy and deformed habit, to move the pity of the people [c]. It is ſaid of the embaſſadors of the Rhodians at Rome, upon a certain victory obtained, that they appeared at firſt in white garments, ſuitble to a congratulation; but when they were told that the Rhodians had not ſo well deſerved to be reckoned among the friends and allies of the Romans, they immediately put on ſordid garments, and went about to the houſes of the principal men, with prayers and tears intreating that cognizance might firſt be taken of their cauſe, before they were condemned [d]: tho', on the contrary, ſome, when arraigned, as defying their accuſers, and as a token of their innocence, and to ſhew the fortitude of their minds, and even if they could to terrify the court itſelf, would dreſs out in the moſt ſplendid manner; or however, would not follow the above cuſtom. It is reported of Scipio Africanus, that when he was arraigned in court, he would not omit ſhaving his beard, nor put off his white garments, nor appear in the common dreſs of arraigned perſons [e]: and when Manlius Capitolinus was arraigned in court, none of his relations would change their cloaths; and Appius Claudius, when he was tried by the Tribunes of the common people, behaved with ſuch ſpirit, and put on ſuch a bold countenance, as thinking that by his ferocity he might ſtrike terror into the Tribunes; and ſo Herod, when he was accuſed before Hyrcanus, went into the court clothed in purple, and attended with a guard of armed men [f]: whether the above cuſtom obtained in Judea, and ſo early as the times of this prophet, is not ſo evident; tho' Joſephus ben Gorion ſays, it was a cuſtom for a guilty perſon to ſtand before the judges clothed in black, and his head covered with duſt [g]; however it is certain, that with the Jews a diſtinction was made in the dreſs of prieſts, who, by the Sanhedrim, were found faulty or not; ſuch as were, were clothed and veiled in black; and ſuch as were not, but were found right and perfect, were clothed in white; and went in, and miniſtred with their brethren the prieſts [h].

℣. 4. And he anſwered, and ſpake, &c.] That is, the angel of the Lord, before whom Joſhua ſtood, anſwered to the accuſations of ſatan, and the intreaties of Joſhua: and ſpake unto thoſe that ſtood before him; not the fellows that ſat before Joſhua, ℣. 8. for the prieſts, who were Joſhua's fellows, could not take away ſin; nor indeed can miniſters of the goſpel, only miniſterially or declaratively, as inſtruments, in bringing the good news of pardon to the comfort of diſtreſſed minds; whom the miniſtring angels may here repreſent, that ſtood before Chriſt the archangel, the head of all principalities and powers, and who are miniſtring ſpirits to him; and ſo the Targum paraphraſes it, "and "he ſaid to them who miniſtred before him;" who, tho' they can't expiate ſin, or make atonement for it, may bring the tidings of pardon to a poor fallen believer: ſaying, take away the filthy garments from him; it may be obſerved, that the garments of the prieſts were to be new and fair, according to the Jewiſh canon [i]; and if they became filthy, they did not whiten them, nor waſh them, but left them for threads (or wicks of candles) and put on new; and ſo orders are here given, not to waſh the filthy garments of Joſhua, but to take them away: it is not, take him, ſatan, the addreſs is not to him; nor angels, who are ſpoken to, take away this filthy creature from me, I can't bear the ſight of him; but take away his ſins, not the being, power, or ſenſe of them; nor does it ſignify making atonement for them, or removing them out of the ſight of juſtice; but a taking them away out of Joſhua's ſight, and giving him a ſenſe of pardon, a comfortable view of it, in which angels and miniſters of the word may be aſſiſting; ſee Iſ. vi. 6, 7. and xl. 2. and is effectually done, when Chriſt, who has power to forgive ſin, makes an application of forgiving grace himſelf, as follows: and unto him he ſaid; that is, the angel of the Lord ſaid to Joſhua: behold, I have cauſed thine iniquity to paſs from thee; which ſhows that he had ſinned, and interprets the filthy garments he was clothed with: Chriſt took his iniquity upon himſelf, bore and made ſatisfaction for it, and removed it as far from him as the eaſt from the weſt; and now cauſed the guilt of it to paſs from his conſcience, and gave him a comfortable view of the free and full pardon of it. The word, behold! is prefixed to this declaration of pardon, to aſcertain the truth of it, to fix his attention to it, and raiſe his admiration at it: and I will clothe thee with change of raiment; garments to put on and off; for in thoſe hot countries, they uſed to ſhift their garments often; and theſe do not deſign prieſtly garments, ſuch as the high-prieſt put on on the day of atonement, when he put off his common garments, and having done his work, ſhifted again, Lev. xvi. 23, 24. ſuch change of garments the high-prieſt indeed had, and ſo had the common prieſts; for they did not wear the ſame garments when out of ſervice, as when in it; ſee Ezek. xlii. 14. and xliv. 19. and the notes there; but prieſtly garments ſeem rather to be intended in the following verſes, which were put on along with the mitre: change of raiment here rather ſignify, ſuch as uſed to be wore on feſtivals and holy days, rich, valuable, precious garments; ſuch as men wore when they went abroad, and appeared in company, and upon return home put off again; and eſpecially clean, neat garments, as ſome render the word [k], in oppoſition to filthy ones Joſhua was clothed with: when arraigned perſons put on ſordid garments, they were ſaid mutare veſtem, to change their apparel; but here clean, inſtead of filthy garments, are called change of raiment with great propriety; and a happy exchange is this indeed! The word is in the plural number, and may point at more garments than one, different ſuits of apparel, with which changes might be frequently made, both for delight and refreſhment; and may have regard to the ſeveral garments of believers in Chriſt, of all good men, partakers of the grace of God: they have the garment of an outward holy converſation, which they are to watch and keep, leſt they walk naked; and which, as it is often ſpotted with ſin, they waſh and make white in the blood of the Lamb: and there is the integrity and faithfulneſs of the ſaints in the performance of their duty, in their ſeveral ſtations of life; and eſpecially of thoſe in public office, in the diſcharge of that; who, as Job, put on righteouſneſs, and it clothes them, and judgment is as a robe and diadem to them, ch. xxix. 14. and there is the garment of internal holineſs, the new man, conſiſting of the ſeveral graces of the Spirit, which is put on as a garment, and makes believers all glorious within; as well as their clothing is of wrought gold, the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; the principal garment, called the robe of righteouſneſs, and garments of ſalvation; the beſt robe, and wedding garment, fine linen, clean and white, which is the righteouſneſs or righteouſneſſes of the ſaints, Rev. xix. 8. and ſo the Targum renders the word here, with righteouſneſſes; tho', as one change of raiment, or ſuit of apparel, may be meant, ſo one ſort of righteouſneſs only may be pointed at, even the one obedience of Chriſt, or his juſtifying righteouſneſs; which may be ſo called, to denote the excellency and fulneſs of it, being ſufficient to clothe and juſtify all the elect of God; like raiment, this is not in the ſaints, but put upon them, and covers them, and keeps them warm; protects from injuries, and beautifies and adorns: this robe of righteouſneſs Chriſt has wrought out for his people, and he clothes them with it; it is his gift unto them, and they receive it from him; by which they are freed from all ſin and condemnation, and their perſons and ſervices are accepted with God.

ỿ. 5. And I ſaid, let them ſet a fair mitre upon his head, &c.] Theſe are either the words of Jehovah the Father, who has all the angels at his command, and can order them to do what he pleaſes; always regards the interceſſion of Chriſt; is ever well pleaſed with his righteouſneſs, and with his people, as clothed with it; and where he gives grace, he gives more grace: a man clothed with Chriſt's righteouſneſs is upon riſing ground; he is in the way to great honour and glory: or, as ſome think, they are the words of the angel of the Lord, the Meſſiah, continued, who willed, ordered, and commanded his miniſtring ſervants to do this, that Joſhua might appear agreeable to the dignity of his office, and look great, as well as clean and neat: or rather they are the words of Zechariah the prophet; and deſign either the inward thoughts, and ſecret wiſhes of his mind; or were an humble requeſt of his, and was regarded; who ſeeing ſomething wanting to make Joſhua a complete high-prieſt, intercedes for it: ſo one ſaint rejoices in the reſtoration of another; and is ſo far from envying the gifts and graces of the greateſt, that he wiſhes him more: ſo they ſet a fair mitre upon his head; ſuch as the high-prieſt wore; on which was a plate of gold, and on it written, holineſs to the Lord; and was an emblem of Chriſt being made ſanctification to his people; ſee Exod. xxviii. 4, 36. The mitre was a garment of the high-prieſt, a ſort of covering for the head, a cap or turbant: it was made of linen, and is called the linen mitre, Lev. xvi. 4. and that which Joſhua might have wore before, being ſtained and foul, it is requeſted that a fair or clean [l] one might be ſet upon his head. It conſiſted, as the Jewiſh writers ſay [m], of ſixteen cubits or ells, which were rolled up in the form of a Turkiſh turbant; and has its name in Hebrew from its being thus rolled up. The account Joſephus [n] gives of it is, that it was "a cap "or bonnet wore on the head, not riſing up in a "point, nor encompaſſing the whole head, but "put on little more than the middle of it; and is "called Maſnaempthes (it ſhould be, Mitznephet); "and is formed in ſuch a manner, as to look like "a crown, made of a linen web, like a ſwath or "roller; for it is many times rolled about and "ſewed;" and with which Jerom's account of it agrees; who ſays [o], "the fourth ſort of garment "is a round cap or bonnet, ſuch as we ſee painted "on Ulyſſes, like a globe, circle, or ſphere, divided "in the middle, and one part ſet on the head: "this we, and the Greeks call, a Tiara; the Hebrews, Mitznephet: it has no point at top, nor "does it cover the whole head to the hair, but "leaves a third part of the forehead uncovered; "and ſo bound with a lace at the back of the "head, that it cannot eaſily fall from it: it is "made of fine linen, and is ſo well covered with "a linen cloth, (and which alſo Joſephus takes "notice of in the above place) that no traces of "the needle appear without." It hid the ſeams, and the deformity of them: both the high prieſt, and the common prieſts wore mitres, as appears from Exod. xxviii. 4, 37, 39, 40. and the difference between them, according to the Jewiſh writers [p], ſeems chiefly to lie in the manner of rolling and wrapping them: the mitre of the high-prieſt was wrapped about his head, as you roll a broken limb, roll upon roll, and did not riſe up to a point, but was flat on his head; but that of the common prieſts conſiſted of various folds and rolls, which gradually roſe up to a point, as a night-cap, or high-crowned hat. Joſephus [q] contrary to all other writers, makes the high-prieſt to have two mitres; for he ſays, he had a cap like to the former, ſuch as all the reſt of the prieſts had, upon which another was ſewed, variegated with blue, or a violet colour; which Braunius[r] thinks is a miſtake of his, ariſing from the blue lace, with which the plate of gold, that had engraven on it, holineſs to the Lord, was faſtened to the mitre; or elſe that the place is corrupted, or has been interpolated by ſome other hand; ſince this would make the high-prieſt to have nine garments, and not eight only; but Fortunatus Scacchus[s] takes the paſſage to be genuine, and argues from it for another mitre or cap, more worthy of the high-prieſt; and which was peculiar to him, and was very curiouſly wrought, and on which the celeſtial globe was figured; and ſo Joſephus ſays[t], that the cap being made of blue or hyacinth, ſeemed to ſignify heaven; for otherwiſe the name of God would not have been put upon it. The ſon of Sirach, Eccl. xlv. 12. ſpeaks very highly of this covering of the high-prieſt's head, calling it, "a crown of "gold upon the mitre, wherein was engraved ho"lineſs, an ornament of honour, a coſtly work, "the deſires of the eyes, goodly and beautiful;" as here a fair mitre: and clothed him with garments; prieſtly ones, ſuitable to his office, which were in all eight; which were the linen breeches; the coat of linen; an embroidered girdle; a robe of blue; an ephod of gold; a breaſt-plate curiouſly wrought, in which were the Urim and Thummim; a mitre of fine linen, and a plate of pure gold on it, Lev. viii. 7, 8, 9. and on the day of atonement, he wore the four following extraordinary garments, breeches, coat, girdle and mitre all of linen, Lev. xvi. 4[u]. all which were typical of the clothing of believers by Chriſt, by whom they are made prieſts unto God: and clothed him with garments; prieſtly robes, ſuitable to his office: and the angel of the Lord ſtood by; to ſee all done according to his order; and not as a mere ſpectator, for he was concerned in clothing him himſelf; and he ſtill ſtood to denote his conſtant care of Joſhua, and his regard to him, and as having ſomething more to ſay to him, as follows:

℣. 6. And the angel of the Lord proteſted unto Joſhua, ſaying.] He not only gave his word, but annexed his oath; he called as it were heaven and earth to witneſs; and this he did to confirm the faith of Joſhua in the promiſes he was about to make, as well as in the bleſſings of grace beſtowed upon him; as the pardon of his ſins, the juſtification of his perſon, and acceptance with God.

℣. 7. Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, &c.] For this angel was no other than the Lord of armies in heaven and in earth: if thou wilt walk in my ways; preſcribed in the word of God, moral, ceremonial, and evangelical; in Chriſt the grand way, and indeed the only way of ſalvation; and in the paths of faith, truth, righteouſneſs, and holineſs; in the ways of God's commandments, which are pleaſant, and attended with peace; ſuch a walk and converſation, and ſuch obedience the grace of God teaches, and obliges to: and if thou wilt keep my charge; the things he gave in charge, all his commands and ordinances, particularly ſuch as belonged to the prieſtly office and Levitical ſervice; ſee Numb. iii. 7, 8. all which might be expected after ſo many favours granted: then thou ſhalt alſo judge my houſe, and ſhalt alſo keep my courts; preſide in the temple, be governor in it, and have the care of all the courts belonging to the people and the prieſts, and the advantages ariſing from thence. The meaning is, that whereas the office of the prieſthood was in diſuſe thro' the captivity, and was become contemptible thro' the ſins of the prieſts, it ſhould now be reſtored to its former honour and glory: to have a place in the houſe of God, the church, is a great honour, and ſtill more to be a governor and ruler in it: and I will give thee places to walk among thoſe that ſtand by; either among fellow-prieſts, or fellow-ſaints; or rather among the angels that ſtood before the angel of the Lord, and miniſtred to him; ſignifying that he ſhould enjoy their company, be like unto them, and join in ſervice with them in heaven, in a future ſtate: and walking places among them, denote the pleaſures of the heavenly ſtate, as well as the ſafety and glory of it; ſee Iſ. lvii. 2. Rev. iii. 4. and xxi. 24. The Targum very agreeably paraphraſes the words thus, "and in the reſurrection "or quickning of the dead, I will raiſe or quicken "thee; and I will give thee feet walking among "theſe Seraphim." The alluſion is to thoſe walks that were in the temple, ſuch as Chriſt walked in, John x. 23. and the pavement in Ezekiel's temple, ch. xl. 17, 18.

℣. 8. Hear now, O Joſhua the high-prieſt, &c.] What he was about to ſay further concerning the bringing forth of the Meſſiah, the antitype of him, and of all the prieſts: thou and thy fellows, that ſit before thee; the Jews interpret[w] theſe, of Hananiah, Miſhael, and Azariah, for whom wonders were wrought in delivering them from the fiery furnace; but rather they deſign the prieſts, and the prophets, and chief men that came up with Joſhua out of the captivity; and eſpecially the young prieſts that ſat before him as his diſciples, to be inſtructed by him in things belonging to the prieſtly office: for they are men wondered at; or, men of a ſign[x], or wonder; typical of Chriſt the great high-prieſt; they were men wondered at, as all the people of God are: they are wondered at by themſelves, that God ſhould have any love to them, any thoughts concerning them; make a covenant with them in his Son; ſend him to die for them; call them by his grace; make them ſons and heirs of his, and at laſt bring them to glory: and they are wondered at by the men of the world; that they ſhould make ſuch a choice as they have; that they ſhould bear afflictions with ſo much chearfulneſs and patience; that they ſhould be ſo ſupported under them, and even thrive and flouriſh amidſt them. The life of a believer is all a myſtery, and wonderful: and they are wondered at by the angels, as they are the choſen of God, the redeemed of the Lamb, and called from among men; and they ſhall be the ſpectators of wonderful things themſelves, which they will be ſwallowed up in the admiration of to all eternity. The Targum paraphraſes the words thus, "for they are men worthy "to have miracles wrought for them;" and indeed, tho' they are not worthy, yet miracles of grace are wrought for them, and one follows: for behold, I will bring forth my ſervant the BRANCH; not Zorobabel, as ſome interpret it; but the Meſſiah, ſiah, as the Targum of Jonathan paraphraſes it; and which is the ſenſe of ſome other Jewiſh writers. Kimchi, tho' he interprets the branch of Zerubbabel, yet obſerves, there are ſome of their interpreters who explain it of the Meſſiah; and it is as if it was ſaid, tho' I bring you this ſalvation, yet I will bring you a greater ſalvation than this, at the time I ſhall bring forth my ſervant the branch: and again they interpret it of him, becauſe the name of the Meſſiah is Menachem, i. e. the comforter; and which is numerically the ſame with Tzemach the branch; and Aben Ezra, who firſt explains it the ſame way as Kimchi, yet adds, but many interpreters ſay this branch is the Meſſiah; and he is called Zerubbabel, becauſe he is of his ſeed, even as he is called David; and David my ſervant ſhall be their prince for ever, Ezek. xxxvii. 25. likewiſe another Jewiſh writer, R. Abraham Seba [y], underſtands it of the Meſſiah. The heathens uſed to call their heroes the branches of the gods; the branch of Jupiter, and the branch of Mars, &c. are frequently met with in the poets [z], and perhaps taken from this name of the Meſſiah; who is the ſervant of God as Mediator, and became ſo by being made of a woman, and made under the law; and is a ſervant of God's chooſing, ſending, and rewarding; the chief of whoſe ſervice lay in the redemption of his people; and who was an obedient, diligent, prudent, and faithful ſervant. The name of the branch is given him elſewhere, Iſ. iv. 2. Jer. xxiii. 5. and deſigns his deſcent as man, and the meanneſs of it; and yet his fruitfulneſs in himſelf, and to his people: the bringing him forth, intends his incarnation; and ſhews that he exiſted before, and was with God, and is brought forth by him as an inſtance of his grace and love to men; and becauſe this was a matter of great moment, and very wonderful, and would certainly be done, and deſerved attention, the word, behold! is prefixed to it. The Septuagint render this word by ανατολη, the riſing ſun, or that part of the heavens where the ſun riſes, the eaſt; and the Vulgate Latin verſion has Orientem, the eaſt: hence another Zechariah calls the Meſſiah, the day-ſpring from on high, Luke i. 78. and one of his titles is, the ſun of righteouſneſs, Mal. iv. 2. The eaſtern part of the heavens was attributed by the heathens to their gods, and reckoned their ſeat and abode [a]; and from hence the Meſſiah came, that man from heaven; he was born in the eaſtern part of the world. Some render the words, in Mic. v. 2. his goings forth are out of the eaſt [b]; and it was from the mount of Olives, which was to the eaſt of Jeruſalem, that he went up to heaven; and from the ſame point of the heavens will he come again, ſince his feet will ſtand on that mountain, Acts i. 11, 12. Zech. xiv. 4. he is the angel ſaid to aſcend from the eaſt, Rev. vii. 2. and perhaps it is owing to this verſion of the word here, and elſewhere, when uſed of the Meſſiah, that he came to be known among the Gentiles by this name; to which it is thought Tacitus [c] has reſpect, when he ſays, "many were perſuaded, that in the ancient books "of the prieſts, were contained a prophecy, that "at that time Oriens, or the eaſt, ſhould prevail;" that is, ſuch an one ſhould exiſt, or rule in the world, whoſe name is Oriens, or the riſing ſun.

℣. 9. For behold, the ſtone that I have laid before Joſhua, &c.] Not the plummet in the hand of Zerubbabel; nor the firſt and foundation-ſtone of the temple laid by him in the preſence of Joſhua; but Chriſt the ſtone of Iſrael, whom the builders refuſed, the foundation and corner-ſtone of the ſpiritual building the church: and this was laid before Joſhua to build his faith upon, to view his ſafety and ſecurity on it, and to take comfort from it for himſelf; and to lay it before others, and inſtruct them in the nature and uſe of it, for their comfort alſo. It was prophetically laid before him in the prophecies of Chriſt, that went before; and typically, when the foundation of the temple was laid, Ezra iii. 9, 10. the temple being a type of the church, and the foundation of it a type of Chriſt: and this being done by Jehovah, ſhews that he is the chief builder; that this ſtone muſt be an excellent one, that is of his laying; that that building muſt ſtand, which this is the foundation of; and that under-builders have great encouragement to work; ſee Iſ. xxviii. 16. Vitringa, on the place referred to, interprets Joſhua of Iſaiah, who propheſied of this ſtone in the ſaid place, and before whom it was laid by a ſpirit of prophecy; Iſaiah and Joſhua being words of the ſame ſignification and formation: but Iſaiah was no high-prieſt; for there is no room to think that Joſhua in this verſe, is another, and diſtinct from, Joſhua the high-prieſt, in the former: upon one ſtone ſhall be ſeven eyes; meaning either the eyes of Chriſt himſelf, which he has, and are in him; for Chriſt is not only a living ſtone, but a ſeeing one, even all-ſeeing; he is all eye. This may be an alluſion to ſuch ſtones that have the reſemblance of eyes upon them: ſuch a ſtone is that which Scheuchzer [d] ſpeaks of, and calls Siliculus Ommatias, being found in the river Sila; which repreſents the fore part of the bulb of the eye, and the black pupil of the eye in a ſnowy white; and after a ſmall interſtice, as ſurrounded with another black circle; with which may be compared the Achates, in the middle of which is an onyx, reſembling an eye, and is therefore named by Velſchius [e], Achates Ommatias, and Onych-Ophthalmos. Some ſtones have on them the figures of the eyes of animals, and have their names from them; as the Ægophthalmos, which is very much like to the eye of a goat; and Lycopthalmos, in the middle of which the black is ſurrounded with white, as the eyes of wolves, and in all reſpects like unto them; and Hyophthalmos, which bears the likeneſs of the eyes of ſwine: and ſome reſemble human eyes; there is one called Triophthalmos, which is bred with the onyx, and repreſents three eyes of a man together; all which are made mention of by Pliny [f]: but here is a ſtone with ſeven eyes in it, denoting perfection of ſight in him as a divine perſon, ſpecial overſight of his people, and fulneſs of grace in him as Mediator; for the fulneſs of the gifts and graces of the Spirit in him, for the uſe of his people, is ſignified by ſeven eyes, Rev. v. 6. they may deſign the omniſcience of Chriſt in general, which reaches to all perſons and things, and greatly qualifies him to be the head of the church, and judge of the world; and likewiſe his ſpecial knowledge, care, and watchfulneſs of his own people, from everlaſting, in time, at, and before, and after converſion, under all their trials and exerciſes: or they deſign the eyes which are looking to him, and are intent on him; and the ſenſe is, that all eyes are upon him: the eyes of God the Father were upon him in the council and covenant of peace, and under the Old Teſtament, as the ſurety of his people, to make ſatisfaction for them; and when the fulneſs of time was come to ſend him forth; and during his infancy, and throughout his life, to preſerve him; and in the whole of his humiliation, ſufferings and death, his eye was on him, with pleaſure and ſatisfaction; and when in the grave, to raiſe him up; and now in heaven, for the acceptance of his people: the eyes of the holy Spirit are on him, to take of his things, and ſhew them to his people: the eyes of angels are upon him, in point of dependence, ſervice and worſhip; their eyes were upon him when here on earth, as he aſcended to heaven, and now he is there: the eyes of all the ſaints, under the Old Teſtament, were upon him, expecting him, and looking to his perſon, and to his blood, and ſacrifice, that were to be offered; the eyes of all believers, under the New Teſtament, in all times and places, are to him for pardon, righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation; and the eyes of all, good and bad, will be faſtened on him, when he comes a ſecond time, in the clouds of heaven; and the eyes of all the glorified ones will be upon him to all eternity, beholding his glory; to this ſenſe agrees the Targum, which renders the words, upon one ſtone, ſeven eyes look to it. R. Joſeph Kimchi interprets theſe eyes of ſeven men, Joſhua, Ezra, Zorobabel, Nehemiah, and the three prophets, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi: behold, I will engrave the graving thereof, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; either with the names of his elect, which are not only written in the book of the Lamb; but their perſons are put into his hands, and engraven there; and are bore upon his ſhoulders, he having the care and government of them; and are upon his breaſt-plate, and on his heart, he being their repreſentative, and preſenting them for a memorial before the Lord; as the names of the tribes of Iſrael were on the ſtones, on the ſhoulders, and on the breaſt-plate of the high-prieſt; in all which Jehovah is concerned: or elſe with the gifts and graces of the Spirit, like a carved or poliſhed ſtone; his human body was prepared and formed by him, and his human ſoul was filled with him; and he, as Mediator, was full of grace and truth; which is one branch of his glory, and draws the eyes of believers to him: or theſe engravings may intend the ſufferings of Chriſt; the wounds and marks in his fleſh; or, the openings [g], in his feet, hands, and ſide, as it may be rendered; the inciſions and cuts made there by the nails and ſpear; which were according to the determination, will, and pleaſure of God; according to his purpoſing and commanding will, which Chriſt was obedient to; and are pleaſing to God, as being the accompliſhment of his counſel and covenant; ſatisfactory to his law and juſtice; what procured the ſalvation of his people, and brought glory to him: unleſs this is rather to be underſtood of the exaltation and glorification of his human nature in heaven; of his being beautified, adorned, and crowned with glory and honour there, and made the head-ſtone of the corner; and indeed all theſe things may be included. The alluſion ſeems to be to engraving of ſtones, either by nature, or by art; ſome have forms and figures on them, which are not engraven by art, or man's device, but are of God, and by nature; ſuch as thoſe ſtones before-mentioned, that have the reſemblance of eyes upon them; and the Achates, which was wore in the ring of Pyrrhus king of Epirus, in which were ſeen the nine muſes, and Apollo holding an harp; and which were not engraven by art, as Pliny [h] obſerves; but the ſpots of nature's own accord were ſo placed, as that to each muſe its proper enſign was given: others are engraven by the art of men, as the onyx-ſtones, which had the names of the children of Iſrael on them, wore on the ſhoulders of the high-prieſt; by which inſtance it appears, that the art of engraving on precious ſtones is very antique, and in which the ancients are ſaid to excel; their engravings on agates, cornelians, and onyx, ſurpaſs any thing of that kind produced by the moderns. Pyrgoteles in the times of Alexander, and Dioſcorides under the firſt Roman emperors, were the moſt eminent engravers we read of. This art, with other polite arts, was buried under the ruins of the Roman empire; until it was retrieved in Italy at the beginning of the 15th century, by two Italians; and from that time has been common enough in Europe [i]: but ſince this ſtone here was for building, rather the alluſion is to the engraving and poliſhing of corner-ſtones and frontiſpieces in edifices; and particularly to thoſe coſtly, curious, and carved ſtones uſed and laid in the temple; ſee Mark xiii. 1. Luke xxi. 5. or to the firſt ſtone laid in the foundation, in which little orbs were engraven, and medals of gold or ſilver put in them, bearing the name, country, and deſcent of the builder, and the day, year, and reign in which the ſtructure was begun; which little orbs are thought to be called eyes, becauſe of the orbicular form of the eye [k]: ſo Grotius thinks, the engraving of the ſeven eyes on the ſtone is here referred to; which ſtone he takes to be the plummet in the hand of Zorobabel, when the formation of the temple was laid, ch. iv. 10. at which time theſe ſeven eyes were cauſed ſuddenly to appear on it, and is the wonder ſpoken of, ℣. 8: and I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day; not Judea, nor Chaldea, but Immanuel's land, the church and people of God, Iſ. viii. 8. even all the elect and covenant-ones, for whom Chriſt ſuffered and died, and who are laid upon this ſtone; their ſins Jehovah removed from them to Chriſt their ſurety; and Chriſt by bearing them, and the puniſhment of them, took them away; and God removed them, both from him and them, upon his becoming a ſacrifice for them; and that wholly out of ſight, ſo as that he never will impute them to them, nor condemn them for them; and this was all done in one day. Jarchi upon the text, ſays, "I know not what day this is;" but we chriſtians know it was the day on which Chriſt ſuffered and died, and offered himſelf a ſacrifice for ſin; by which one offering of himſelf, once for all, he put away ſin for ever; it was all done in one day, Heb. vii. 27. and ix. 26, 28. and x. 10, 12, 14. on the day he ſuffered, when he expiring on the croſs, ſaid, it is finiſhed; namely ſin, and complete ſalvation from it.

day of ſalvation, the acceptable time, and year of the redeemed: ſhall ye call every man his neighbour under the vine, and under the fig tree; which may be expreſſive of the deſire of gracious ſouls after the converſion of others; they would have them come under the means of grace; and are deſirous that the means might be bleſſed to them; that they might know Chriſt, and be partakers of the ſame grace with them; which ariſes from a ſenſe they have of the bleſſings they ſhare in; from a love to immortal ſouls, and a deſire to promote the glory of God: alſo of the fruitfulneſs and plenty of the goſpel-diſpenſation; Chriſt is the true vine, laden with precious fruits; from him ſaints have all their fruitfulneſs; they ſit under his ſhadow with delight, and his fruit is ſweet unto them; the proviſions of his houſe are very excellent and precious, to which others are invited to partake of: likewiſe of the fellowſhip and communion which ſaints have with each other; they converſe in private, join in public worſhip, and feaſt together at the Lord's table; and encourage one another ſo to do; all which is crowned with the preſence of God, and fellowſhip with him: moreover the words may ſuggeſt, that peace and tranquillity enjoyed by believers under the goſpel-diſpenſation, and that ſafety and ſecurity which they have in, and thro' Chriſt; ſee the note on Mic. iv. 4.

CHAP. IV.

IN this chapter are contained the viſion of a golden candleſtick, and of two olive-trees by it, and the explanation thereof. The preparation to this viſion, which is the awaking of the prophet, as of a man out of ſleep, is in ỳ. 1. The viſion of the candleſtick, and olive-trees, is in ỳ. 2, 3. The candleſtick is deſcribed by the matter of it, gold; and by the parts of it, its bowl, lamps, and pipes; and the olive-trees by their ſituation; the explanation of which is at the requeſt of the prophet, he not knowing what they meant, ỳ. 4, 5. when it is obſerved to him, that this repreſents, under the type of Zerubbabel building the temple, the building of the goſpel-church by Chriſt; and which is done and finiſhed, not by might, or power of man, but by the Spirit, notwithſtanding all oppoſition, and contempt of it, to the great joy of many, who obſerve the grace of God, and his providential care and goodneſs in it, ỳ. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. and upon the prophet's enquiring the meaning of the two olive-trees, which he was ignorant of; he is told that theſe are the two anointed ones that ſtood by the Lord of the whole earth, ỳ. 11, 12, 13, 14.

ỳ. 1. And the angel that talked with me, &c.] See ch. i. 9, 13: came again, and waked me, as a man that is wakened out of his ſleep; into which he fell, after he had had the former viſion; ſee Dan. viii. 8.

ỳ. 2. And ſaid unto me, what ſeeſt thou? &c.] That is, after he was awake, and had looked about him: and I ſaid, I have looked, and behold, a candleſtick all of gold; ſuch an one as was in the tabernacle of Moſes, only with this difference; that had no bowl on the top, nor ſeven pipes to it, nor two olive-trees on each ſide of it, with two pipes to them, Exod. xxv. 31—37. ſuch a candleſtick was never in being, only in viſion; and is an emblem of the church of Chriſt, into which the light of the goſpel is put by Chriſt, and held forth by it, and eſpecially by its miniſters; ſee Rev. i. 12, 13, 20. for the light put into this candleſtick, the church, is not the light of nature or reaſon, which is the candle of the Lord ſearching into the inward parts of man; by which he may diſcern ſomewhat of the being and perfections of God in his works, and of moral good and evil; but it is too dim to direct and guide him in the affair of ſalvation: nor the law of Moſes, ſaid to be a light, and a lamp; by which men might come to the knowledge of ſin, but not of a Saviour from it: but the light of the glorious goſpel of Chriſt, which was like a candle lighted up in the evening of the Jewiſh diſpenſation, and placed in the chriſtian church; and gave light, not only to the ſaints in Judea, but in all parts of the world, whither it has been carried; for this candleſtick is portable, and has been removed from place to place; and wherever it is ſet, it gives light, and removes the darkneſs of error, infidelity, and immorality; and is uſeful to direct the ſaints in their walk and converſation, and render them more capable of working with delight and pleaſure; and will blaze out more brightly in the end of the world, when it is about to be no more; and by the light of it loſt ſinners, like the loſt piece of ſilver, are looked up, ſtrayed ones are brought back, and backſliders reſtored; hypocrites and formaliſts, heretics and falſe teachers, and their doctrines, are diſcovered and detected; and ſaints are enlightened, comforted and directed: and this candleſtick being all of gold, may denote the value of it; the true church of Chriſt, and the real members of it, are highly eſteemed by Chriſt; the precious ſons of Zion, are comparable to fine gold, jewels and precious ſtones; they are the excellent in the earth, in whom is his delight: and likewiſe its brightneſs and purity, ſplendor and glory; its members being poſſeſſed of the gifts and graces of the Spirit, of the pure and glorious doctrines of the goſpel, and exerciſing holy diſcipline, and living holy lives and converſations: and alſo the duration of it, which will be to the end of the world, the gates of hell not being able to prevail againſt it; and which is continued, not by might or power of man, but by the Spirit of the Lord, and his grace, which is ſufficient for it, and with which it is ſupplied; not by any natural or artificial means, but by a wonderful and uncommon manner; ſignified by oil not preſſed from the olive by the help of man, but flowing from two olive-trees, on both ſides the candleſtick, of itſelf, freely, and conſtantly. This candleſtick may primarily reſpect, and may be an emblem of, the then preſent ſtate of the Jewiſh church, when this viſion was ſeen, and point at how it was raiſed up, reſtored, and preſerved; but has a further view to the church of God, under the goſpel-diſpenſation, unto the end of the world: with a bowl upon the top of it; an oil-veſſel or cruet, round, and large enough to hold the oil, which ſupplied it, and its ſeveral lamps, whereby its light was maintained and continued; and this may intend, either the fulneſs of grace in Chriſt, which is as a fountain, as the word [l] here uſed ſignifies, Joſh. xv. 19. to ſupply his church and people; and from whence they have the oil of grace in meaſure, which is in him without meaſure, whereby their lamps are filled, and their lights are kept burning; and who is fitly placed as the head of the church for this purpoſe, as this bowl was upon the top of the candleſtick: or rather, ſince this bowl is but a meaſure, tho' it may be a large one, it may ſignify that large portion of gifts and grace which is communicated to the church in all ages, and abides in it, and is ſeverally divided to the miniſters and members of it, for its profit and edification; to one one gift, to another another; to ſome greater, and others leſs; and all for mutual good; and which are given forth from Chriſt and his Spirit; who, as Capellus thinks, may be meant by the two olive-trees, who of themſelves, without preſſing, having all fulneſs of grace in them without meaſure, freely and liberally impart it; and keep filling the bowl, ſo that there is conſtantly a ſupply of the Spirit, and grace for the church and people of Chriſt in all ages; according to Iſ. lix. 21. my Spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, ſhall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy ſeed, nor out of the mouth of thy ſeeds ſeed, ſaith the Lord, from henceforth, and for ever. Cocceius thinks the merit of Chriſt is meant by this bowl or cup, by which he obtained the promiſe of the Spirit: and his ſeven lamps thereon; on the candleſtick; ſuch a number of lamps were on the candleſtick in the tabernacle, Exod. xxv. 37. and may deſign the many members of the church bearing the lamps of profeſſion; or rather the miniſters of the goſpel, who are the lights of the world, and bright and burning ones, that hold forth the word of life both in doctrine and converſation; unleſs the gifts and graces of the Spirit, qualifying them for ſuch work, ſhould be meant; ſee Rev. iv. 5. but rather miniſters themſelves are deſigned, who are called lights and lamps, Matt. v. 14. John v. 35. and the number ſeven being a number of perfection, may denote a fulneſs and ſufficiency of goſpel-miniſters, which Chriſt furniſhes his church with, and will do unto the end of the world; he having a perfection of gifts in his hands for them, to fit them for his ſervice; juſt as theſe are called the ſeven pillars of wiſdom's houſe, Prov. ix. 1. Cocceius thinks by theſe ſeven lamps are intended the ſeven churches, or the ſeven ſtates of the church under ſeveral periods in the goſpel-diſpenſation; the ſame with the ſeven churches of Aſia, and the ſeven golden candleſticks, in the midſt of which Chriſt was ſeen by John, Rev. i. 4, 11, 12: and ſeven pipes to the ſeven lamps which were upon the top thereof; theſe pipes, infuſories or funnels, were at the bottom of the bowl, in which were ſo many holes, that let out the oil into them, by which it was carried to the lamps; a pipe to every lamp. In the Hebrew text it is, ſeven and ſeven pipes [m]; that is, fourteen, two to every lamp; which Fortunatus Scacchus [n] thinks, they being joined to one another, the one put in the neck of the other, were for the better cleanſing and purifying of the oil from any dregs that might be in it. Jarchi is of opinion, there were ſeven to every lamp, in all forty-nine, but without any foundation: by theſe are meant, not the ſeven ſacraments, as ſay the Papiſts; but either the various gifts of the Spirit, fitting miniſters for their ſervice; or the various means they make uſe of to learn the mind of Chriſt in the ſcriptures, to know the goſpel, and more of it, that they may hold it forth to others; ſuch as reading, meditation, and prayer.

℣. 3. And the two olive-trees by it, &c.] Which are explained, ℣. 14. ſee the note there: one upon the right-ſide of the bowl, and the other upon the left-ſide thereof; in ℣. 11. they are ſaid to be on the right and left-ſides of the bowl or candleſtick, which is the ſame; for the ſituation of them was alike, with reſpect to the one and the other: according to Fortunatus Scacchus, theſe two olive-trees did not ariſe out of the earth, and reach the top of the candleſtick; but out of the baſe of the candleſtick, one on the right-hand of the bowl, which hung in the middle of the candleſtick; and the other on the left [o], of which he has given the figure.

℣. 4. So I anſwered, and ſpake to the angel that talked with me, &c.] The ſame that awoke him out of ſleep, and aſked him what he ſaw: ſaying, what are theſe, my lord? that is, what do they ſignify? what do they repreſent? or what are they emblems of? for he knew what they were; that they were a candleſtick, and two olive-trees; but he was deſirous of knowing what the meaning of them were.

℣. 5. Then the angel that talked with me, anſwered and ſaid unto me, &c.] Either to upbraid him with his ignorance and ſtupidity; or rather to quicken his attention, and that of others, to the interpretation of it, he was about to give him: knoweſt thou not what theſe be? art thou ignorant of the deſign of them? or knoweſt thou not what is meant by them? and I ſaid, no, my lord; he made an ingenuous confeſſion of his ignorance, joined with great reſpect unto, and veneration of, the angel that converſed with him.

℣. 6. Then he anſwered, and ſpake unto me, ſaying, &c.] In great condeſcenſion, in order to inſtruct him into the true meaning of the viſion: this is the word of the Lord unto Zerubbabel; this ſignifies what was ſaid by the Lord to Zerubbabel, by ſome one of the prophets ſent unto him: ſaying, not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; that is, that as the candleſtick was ſupplied with oil, from the two olive-trees by the ſide of it, without the help of any man, to pour in the oil, and trim the lamps; ſo the temple ſhould be built by Zerubbabel, not thro' the multitude and ſtrength of men, but thro' the Spirit of God animating, exciting, encouraging, and ſtrengthening them to go thro' the work. The temple was a type of the church, and Zerubbabel a type of Chriſt; he was ſo in the high eſteem he was had in by the Lord; he was choſen by him; made as a ſignet, and was precious to him, Hagg. ii. 23. in his titles and characters, a ſervant of the Lord, and governor of Judah, Hagg. i. 1. and ii. 23. and in his work, in bringing the Jews out of captivity, and in rebuilding the temple: ſo Chriſt is the choſen of God, and exceeding dear and precious to him; is his righteous ſervant, and governor of the church, or king of ſaints; and who has redeemed and delivered his people from the captivity of ſin, and ſatan, and the law; and is the builder of his church; who has laid the foundation of it, and will bring in the head-ſtone; and which church is built up in all generations thro' the converſion of ſinners; and that is done, not by external force, by carnal weapons, or moral ſuaſion; but by the ſword of the Spirit, the word of God; and not by the power of man's free-will, but by the efficacious grace of the divine Spirit: it is indeed done by power and might, but not of the creature: man, whatever power he has to do things, natural, civil, outwardly religious, and materially moral, or however in appearance, has no power to do any thing ſpiritually good; not to think a good thought, nor do a good action, in a ſpiritual manner; much leſs to work ſuch a work as the work of regeneration, converſion, and ſanctification; ſince he is dead in ſin, and can't quicken himſelf; his underſtanding is darkened, yea darkneſs itſelf, and he can't command light into it; his will is ſtubborn and obſtinate, and he can't bend it, and ſubdue it; his heart is hard as a nether mill-ſtone, and he can't ſoften it, and repent of his ſins, in a truly ſpiritual, gracious, and evangelic manner; his affections are inordinate; and he is a lover of ſinful pleaſures, and not of God, nor of any thing divine, to which his carnal mind is enmity; he can't believe in Chriſt of himſelf; faith is not of himſelf, it is the gift of God, and ſo is repentance, and every other grace. The work of grace on the ſoul is expreſſed by a regeneration, a reſurrection from the dead, a creation, and the new man, or a tranſformation of a man into another man; all which require almighty power to effect: regeneration is not of the will of man, nor of the will of the fleſh, but of God, of Jehovah the Spirit: ſanctification is called the ſanctification of the Spirit, and every grace of it is a fruit of his; it is he who is the Spirit of life from Chriſt, that quickens men when dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, and enlightens their dark minds with ſpiritual light, in divine things; it is he that produces evangelical repentance in them, and faith in Chriſt is of his operation; it is he that begins the work of grace on the heart, and carries it on, and cauſes to abound in the exerciſe of every grace, and performs the work of faith with power. The Targum, inſtead of by my Spirit, renders it by my word.

℣. 7. Who art thou, O great mountain? &c.] This is ſaid in reference to thoſe who oppoſed the building of the temple, as Sanballat, and others; or the Perſian monarchy, and Babylon the capital of it; a mountain being a ſymbol of a kingdom, or capital city; ſo Babylon is called, Jer. li. 25. hence the Targum paraphraſes the words thus, "how art thou accounted a fooliſh kingdom before Zerubbabel;" and may denote the oppoſition made to Chriſt, and to the building of his church, both by Rome pagan, and Rome papal; Rome is ſignified by a burning mountain caſt into the ſea, Rev. viii. 8. and may include all the enemies of the church and people of God, as ſin, ſatan, and the world; who, tho' they may look like high and great mountains, and make much oppoſition, and throw many difficulties in their way, yet in the iſſue will be of no avail; ſee Iſ. xlix. 11. and the note there. Some Jewiſh writers [p], by the great mountain, underſtand the Meſſiah, but very wrongly; for he is deſigned by Zerubbabel in the next clauſe; but not by the head-ſtone, as the Targum interprets it: before Zerubbabel, thou ſhalt become a plain; as all oppoſition and difficulties were ſurmounted by Zerubbabel in building the temple; ſo all vaniſh and diſappear before Chriſt, the antitype of Zerubbabel, in the building up of his church, thro' the converſion of ſinners, and in the protection and preſervation of it: and he ſhall bring forth the head-ſtone thereof; that is, he Zerubbabel ſhall finiſh the building of the temple, as in ℣. 9. the head-ſtone being the laſt and uppermoſt ſtone in the building, which is laſt laid, and completes the whole; and in the ſpiritual ſenſe deſigns, not Chriſt the head-ſtone of the corner, for 'tis he that is Zerubbabel's antitype, who brings it in; but the laſt man that will be converted, when the number of God's elect will be completed in regeneration: they are all in Chriſt's hands, and under his care; before converſion they are ſecretly his, his hidden ones; in converſion he brings them forth, and makes them to appear what they are; and when the laſt of this number is born again, the church of the firſt-born, whoſe names are written in heaven, will be wholly built, and nothing wanting in it; and the work of grace will have the laſt hand put to it, and be perfect in all. Chriſt is indeed ſometimes called the head-ſtone of the corner, and the chief corner-ſtone, Pſ. cxviii. 22. Eph. ii. 20. and he is the principal one in the ſpiritual building the church; he is the foundation-ſtone, on which the whole is laid; and he is the corner-ſtone, that joins, knits, and keeps all together; he is both the ſtability, ſafety, and ornament of the building; Chriſt is the firſt, but not the laſt ſtone laid, which this muſt be: rather the perfection of grace is deſigned, or the bringing of the work of God to perfection; which may be ſignified hereby, in alluſion to an edifice, which, when the laſt or top-ſtone is laid, is then completed; and if taken in this ſenſe, muſt be underſtood, not of juſtifying grace, which is complete at once; Chrſt's righteouſneſs being a perfect, juſtifying righteouſneſs, and every believer complete it it; but of ſanctifying grace, which, tho' as to the principle of it, is all wrought together, yet is not at once perfected; it is gradually brought to perfection; there is a perfection of parts, but not of degrees; no man is perfectly holy in himſelf, only as he is in Chriſt; but holineſs in the ſaint will be perfected, for without it no man can ſee the Lord; and this is done at death in every individual believer; and then follows a ſtate of ſinleſs perfection; and the laſt meaſure of grace given, which perfects the work, may be called the head-ſtone, the crowning, finiſhing part: and this will be brought in by Chriſt, the author and finiſher of faith; who is a rock, and his work is perfect; he is able to do it; and who ſo fit, as he who is full of grace? and who ſo proper, as the maſter-builder, and head of the church? this grace, which perfects all, is in Chriſt; he brings it out from himſelf, in whom it has pleaſed the Father all fulneſs ſhould dwell: but it is beſt of all to interpret the head-ſtone of the laſt of the elect of God, and redeemed of the Lamb, that will be called by grace; who has this name, not from any ſuperior excellency in him to any of the other lively ſtones, laid in the ſpiritual building; but becauſe he is the laſt that is put there; and which ſhows, that not one of thoſe God has choſen, and Chriſt has redeemed, ſhall be loſt; it is the will of God, and it is the care of Chriſt, that none ſhould periſh, but all ſhould come to repentance, to the glory of his rich grace; or otherwiſe the building would not be complete, nor the church the fulneſs of him that filleth all in all. The Targum indeed paraphraſes the words of Chriſt, “and he ſhall reveal his Chriſt, whoſe name is ſaid from eternity, and he ſhall rule over all kingdoms:” and mention being made of a capital and principal ſtone in this viſion of the candleſtick, may put one in mind of the ſtone the Jews [q] ſpeak of, which was before the candleſtick in the temple, which had three ſteps, and on which the prieſt ſtood, and trimmed the lamps: and this will be attended with ſhoutings, crying, grace, grace unto it; as the people of the Jews ſhouted, when the firſt ſtone was laid in the foundation of the temple, Ezra iii. 11, 12, 13. ſo it is here intimated, that their acclamations would be very great, when the laſt ſtone would be brought in, and the building finiſhed; which they would aſcribe to the grace, favour, and good-will of God to them: ſo likewiſe, as the work of converſion is wholly owing to the grace of God, an abundance of which is diſplayed in it; when it is finiſhed in the hearts of all the Lord's people, and the laſt man deſigned to be called by it is converted, and ſo the ſpiritual building of the church finiſhed; this will be attended with the ſhouts of angels, who rejoice at the converſion of every ſinner, and much more when all the elect are gathered in; and the acclamations of all the ſaints, for the marriage of the Lamb, will now be come, and the church be ready, as a bride prepared for her huſband; ſee Rev. xix. 6, 7, 8. and xxi. 2, 3. The repetition of the phraſe, grace, grace, denotes that the work of converſion in all the ſaints, from the firſt to the laſt, is only owing to the grace of God, and not to any merit, motive, and condition in man; that they are ſaved and called, not according to their works, but according to the purpoſe and grace of God, his abundant mercy, free favour, and great love; and that this grace is exceeding abundant, which is diſplayed in the converſion of a ſingle individual; and how large and copious muſt it be, which is given forth to them all. It is alſo expreſſive of the vehemency of thoſe that uſe the phraſe; and ſhows, that they have a deep ſenſe of it on their hearts; and are warmed, and glow with it; and can't ſufficiently expreſs their admiration of it; and ſtrive to magnify it to the uttermoſt of their power, being ſenſible of their obligations to God for it, and what gratitude is due to him on account of it: and this will be the cry of every ſaint in glory, throughout the endleſs ages of eternity; nor will the leaſt ſound be heard that is jarring, or contrary to it; all will be of one mind, and in one tone, and ſtrive to out-do each other, in exalting the free grace of God in the higheſt ſtrains, with the greateſt fervency of ſoul, and with the loudeſt acclamations, and thoſe continually repeated.

℣. 8. Moreover, the word of the Lord came unto me, ſaying.] As follows; which is a confirmation of the angel's interpretation of the viſion.

℣. 9. The hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this houſe, &c.] The temple at Jeruſalem, which was laid, or however renewed, after it had been long neglected, even the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, two months before this viſion and prophecy, Hagg. ii. 18. compared with Zech. i. 7: his hands ſhall alſo finiſh it; ſignified by bringing in the head or top-ſtone, ℣. 7. and ſo Chriſt our great Zerubbabel has laid the foundation of his church, which is no other than himſelf; and is a foundation firm and ſtrong, ſure and certain, immoveable and everlaſting; and his hands will finiſh the building of it, by bringing and laying every elect ſoul upon this foundation; which may be concluded from his hands being thoſe which have laid the foundations of the heavens, and the earth; uphold all things in being, and hold the reins of government; and who, as Mediator, has all the perſons of his people in his hands, and all grace and glory for them: his hands alſo have laid the foundation of grace in the hearts of his people, and he will finiſh it; he who is the author, will be the finiſher of faith: and thou ſhalt know that the Lord of hoſts hath ſent me unto you; this clauſe is not an addreſs to Zerubbabel, as Aben Ezra, and others think; but to the people of the Jews, as appears from the plural word uſed, at the end of it; nor are the words ſpoken by the prophet of himſelf; tho' the Targum paraphraſes them to this ſenſe, “and ye ſhall know that the Lord of hoſts hath ſent me to propheſy unto you;” that is, when they ſhould ſee his prophecies accompliſhed, and the temple built, then they would know and acknowledge that he was a true prophet, ſent of God unto them; nor is the angel deſigned, ſo often mentioned, that talked with the prophet; for he was ſent, not to the Jews, but to him; but they are ſpoken of by the Meſſiah, called the word of the Lord, ℣. 8. who, when he ſhall have finiſhed the work of grace on every man's heart by his Spirit, and ſhall have completed the whole goſpel-building the church, by gathering in every one of the elect; then it ſhall be known and owned by all, both the converted Jews and Gentiles, that he is the true Meſſiah, the ſent of God to the forefathers of the Jews, who came to preach the goſpel to them, work miracles among them, and obtain eternal redemption for men.

℣. 10. For who hath deſpiſed the day of ſmall things? &c.] This literally refers to the building of the ſecond temple, which was contemptible to the enemies of Judah, Sanballat, and others; and little in the eyes of many of the Jews themſelves, who had ſeen the former temple, yet not in the eyes of the Lord of hoſts, Ezra iii. 12. Hagg. ii. 3, 6, 7, 8, 9. and ſo the Targum paraphraſes the words, “for who is he that deſpiſeth this day, becauſe the building is ſmall?” but in the ſpiritual ſenſe, to the building up of the church by converſion: the firſt work of converſion may be called a day of ſmall things to men; it may be called a day, becauſe a time of light into themſelves, their ſin and danger, and the way from it; the day of Chriſt's power upon the ſoul, in making it willing to quit all, and be ſaved by him; a ſeaſon in which there is a diſplay of the love, grace, and mercy of God unto it; and is the day of its eſpouſals to Chriſt; and the day of ſalvation, of the knowledge and application of it; and of good tidings, of peace, pardon, and life by Chriſt; and yet a day of ſmall things: not that what is done or made known are ſmall things in themſelves; but the light and knowledge which young converts have of themſelves, of Chriſt, and of the doctrines trines of the goſpel, is but ſmall; and ſo is their faith in Chriſt, but a mere venture on him, or a peradventure there may be ſalvation in him for them alſo; and their ſpiritual ſtrength to exerciſe grace, do their duty, comfort from Chriſt, and in the promiſes and experience of the everlaſting love of God, are but ſmall at firſt; yet this day of ſmall things is not to be deſpiſed: it is not by Jehovah the Father, who regards their prayers, and does not deſpiſe them, tho' like the chatterings of a crane or ſwallow; he takes them by the hand, leads them, and teaches them to walk by faith, and proportions their duty to their ſtrength, and their ſtrength to their day: nor by Jeſus Chriſt, who delights in their applications to him, and never rejects them; regards his buds in his vineyards, the beginnings of grace; the lambs in his flock, the weak and feeble; and the bruiſed reed, and ſmoking flax, who have but little light and grace: nor by the Holy Spirit, who helps their infirmities, makes interceſſion for them with groans unutterable; carries on the good work in them, and performs it till the day of Chriſt: nor ſhould it be deſpiſed by men of greater light, faith, and experience; tho' it is no wonder they ſhould be deſpiſed by carnal men; but even for them to deſpiſe one of the little ones that believe in him, is reſented by him. The intereſt of Chriſt in general, is ſometimes a day of ſmall things; it was ſo among the Jews at the time of Chriſt's aſcenſion; and among the Gentiles, at the firſt preaching of the goſpel to them; and ſo it was at the time of the Reformation, and is ſo now: Jacob is ſmall, but there is a day coming, called the great day of Jezreel, Hoſ. i. 11. For they ſhall rejoice, and ſhall ſee the plummet in the hand of Zerubbabel with thoſe ſeven; which may literally reſpect the building of the ſecond temple; and that was expreſſed not only at the laying of the foundation, Ezra iii. 11, 12, 13. but at the carrying of it on, and eſpecially at the finiſhing of it, Ezra vi. 14, 15, 16. when they ſaw the building riſe under the direction and encouragement of Zerubbabel, who is repreſented here as a maſter-builder, with a plummet in his hand; which is an inſtrument uſed by maſons and carpenters, to draw perpendicular lines with, in order to judge whether the building is upright; and is ſo called, from a piece of lead faſtened at the end of a cord or thread. In the Hebrew text it is called, a ſtone of tin [r]; it may be in thoſe times, they uſed a ſtone for this purpoſe, caſed with tin or lead. And thoſe ſeven with him, may mean ſeveral principal perſons that joined with him, and aſſiſted him in this work; tho' ſome interpret them of the ſeven lamps, and the ſeven pipes to them in the candleſtick; and the Targum explains them of ſeven rows of ſtone, meaſured by the plummet: but rather they are to be underſtood of the eyes of the Lord, after mentioned, which were upon the Jews, in favour of the building, that it might not be cauſed to ceaſe by their enemies, Ezra v. 5. tho' Cocceius chuſes to render the words thus, and thoſe ſeven ſhall rejoice, and ſee the plummet in the hand of Zerubbabel; and applies them to the ſeven churches of Aſia, repreſentatives of the whole church of Chriſt, in ſucceſſive periods, rejoicing at the growing intereſt of Chriſt; and doubtleſs, the myſtical and ſpiritual ſenſe of the words is, that it is matter of rejoicing to gracious ſouls, when the ſpiritual building goes forward, under the direction and encouragement of Chriſt. The carrying on of the work of grace in particular believers, affords joy and pleaſure. This work is in the hands, and under the care of Chriſt; it is curiouſly wrought and framed by line and rule, and goes on to perfection; which being obſerved by others, tho' it is the nature of grace to deſire more, yet it does not envy the gifts and graces of others, but rejoices at them. The carrying on of the work of God in the church in general, is an occaſion of great joy to the ſaints; they rejoice that it is in ſuch hands; not in the hands of miniſters or magiſtrates, or even angels, but in the hands of Chriſt; who is ſo great, and has condeſcended to engage in it; has ſo much wiſdom to manage and conduct it; is ſo faithful in every thing he is concerned, and is ſo able to go thro' with it: they rejoice that it is carried on with ſo much exactneſs; that the whole building is ſo fitly framed and compacted together; every thing in the church being done according to the plummet of God's everlaſting love and eternal purpoſes, which plummet is with Chriſt, Rom. viii. 39. Eph. iii. 11. according to which perſons are called by grace; the bleſſings of grace are beſtowed on them; and they are put in ſuch an office or place in the church: and as this building goes on by an increaſe of perſons, or an addition of ſuch as ſhall be ſaved; and by an increaſe of grace, gifts, and ſpiritual knowledge in them; it is matter of joy to angels and men, and eſpecially to the miniſters of the goſpel. They are the eyes of the Lord, or the eyes of the Lord are they [s], which run to and fro through the whole earth; theſe deſign not the angels, who walk to and fro through the earth, ch. vi. 7. nor the various gifts and graces of the Spirit, Rev. v. 6. but rather the infinite providence of God, ſignified by an eye; it being intuitive, omniſcient, approbative of that which is good, and vindictive of that which is evil; loving to, and careful of the ſaints, making them proſperous and ſucceſsful: and by ſeven eyes, to denote the perfection and fulneſs of it; and theſe being ſaid to run to and fro throughout the earth, expreſſes the large compaſs of perſons and things it reaches to: and it may be obſerved, that the carrying on of the work of God, both in particular perſons, and in the church of God in general, is attended with, and owing to his ſpecial providence, as well as grace.

℣. 11. Then anſwered I, and ſaid unto him, &c.] To the angel that talked with him, ℣. 1, 4, 5: what are theſe two olive-trees upon the right ſide of the candleſtick, and upon the left ſide thereof? in ℣. 2. they are ſaid to be on each ſide of the bowl. The myſtery of the candleſtick being explained to Zechariah by the angel, the prophet deſires to know the meaning of the two olive-trees that were on the right and left of it, one on one ſide, and the other on the other ſide.

℣. 12. And I anſwered again, and ſaid unto him, &c.] Before he could have an anſwer to the former queſtion, he puts the following, as being of the ſame import: what be theſe two olive-branches; which grew upon the olive-trees, and were neareſt to the candleſtick, and the pipes that were to the lamps: theſe, in ℣. 14. are interpreted of the two anointed ones, or ſons of oil, and may deſign the miniſters of the word, if, by the golden oil aftermentioned, is meant the goſpel; even a ſett of evangelical preachers in goſpel-times, in the ſeveral periods of the church; Chriſt's faithful witneſſes, who ſtand on each ſide of the bowl, and receive out of Chriſt's fulneſs gifts and grace, to fit them for their work; and on each ſide of the candleſtick, the church, to impart the oil of the goſpel to it. Theſe may be compared to olive-trees for their beauty and comelineſs in the eyes of ſaints, to whom they bring the good news of ſalvation by Chriſt, Hoſ. xiv. 6. and for their greenneſs and flouriſhing condition, being filled with the gifts and graces of the Spirit, Pſ. lii. 8. and for their fruitfulneſs; for as the olive-tree produces an oil uſed both for light and food, ſo they bring the goſpel with them, which is the means of ſpiritual light, and contains in it refreſhing and delightful food, Deut. viii. 8. and for their fatneſs, with which they honour God and men, Judg. ix. 9. ſo miniſters of the goſpel honour Jehovah, Father, Son, and Spirit, by aſcribing the contrivance, impetration, and application of ſalvation ſeverally to them; and they honour men, by acquainting them what honour all the ſaints have thro' Chriſt, being made kings and prieſts by him; and by ſhewing them what honour they ſhall have hereafter. And they may be compared to olive-branches, with reſpect to Chriſt the good olive-tree, in whom they are as branches; are bore by him, and ſubſiſt in him; receive all they have from him, and do all they do in his ſtrength: and alſo for their tenderneſs and weakneſs in themſelves, and for their fruitfulneſs from him. Which thro' the two golden pipes empty the golden oil out of themſelves; if by the two olive-trees and branches, or anointed ones, miniſters of the goſpel are intended; then, by the golden oil, is meant, not the Spirit and his grace, which is ſometimes compared to oil; nor inward ſpiritual joy and peace, the oil of gladneſs, for miniſters can't communicate either of theſe to others; but the goſpel, and the precious truths of it, compared to oil, becauſe of an healing, chearing, and refreſhing nature; and becauſe beautifying, feeding, and fattening; and becauſe of a ſearching and penetrating nature, and being pure, unmixed, and good for light: and to golden oil, or oil, that being poured out, is like liquid gold, for colour, value, ſplendor, purity, and duration: and this they empty out; which phraſe denotes the fulneſs of the bleſſing of the goſpel they come with; their free and ready delivery of it; their faithfulneſs in giving out all, and keeping back nothing that may be profitable; and their eaſe and ſatisfaction of mind in ſo doing: and this they do, not out of the corrupt fountains of moral philoſophy; nor from the writings of others; nor out of their own heads, or from mere notional knowledge; but out of their hearts, and from their inward experience of goſpel-truths; and which is not to be underſtood excluſive of Chriſt, or of the ſcriptures of truth, from whence they fetch all truth; nor have they this knowledge and experience of or from themſelves. The means by which they communicate the golden oil of the goſpel, are the two golden pipes, the miniſtry of the word, and adminiſtration of ordinances; which are like pipes or canals, thro' which goſpel-grace is conveyed; and are golden, are valuable, to be kept pure, and are durable; they are but pipes, or means, and not to be depended on, yet they are golden, and not to be deſpiſed. But if by the two olive-trees, or anointed ones, are meant two divine perſons, of which ſee ỷ. 14. then by the golden oil may be intended the grace of God, often compared to oil in ſcripture, in alluſion to oil in common, or to the anointing oil, which was made of precious ſpices; or rather, as here, to the lamp-oil for the candleſtick in the tabernacle, which was pure oil-olive: grace, like oil, is of a chearing and refreſhing nature, hence called oil of gladneſs; very beautifying and adorning, like oil, it makes the face to ſhine; and by it the church, and all believers, become all glorious within: it is of a ſearching nature, like oil, it penetrates into the heart, and has its ſeat there; and as oil will not mix with any other liquid, ſo neither will grace with ſin and corruption: but chiefly, as here, may it be compared to oil-olive, becauſe it burns and gives light, as that does in the lamp. The lamp of a profeſſion, without the oil of grace, is a dark and uſeleſs thing. Grace is a light in the inward parts, and cauſes the light of an outward converſation to ſhine in good works before men; and this may be truly called golden, being exceeding valuable, yea, much more precious than gold that periſheth; it being as durable, nay, much more durable than that, for it will laſt for ever, and can never be loſt; ſee 1 Pet. i. 7. Rev. iii. 18. and of this the word and ordinances are the means, and ſo may be deſigned by the pipes, thro' which it is conveyed to the ſouls of men; for faith, and other graces of the Spirit, come by hearing, and hearing by the word of God, Rom. x. 17. hence ſays the apoſtle to the Galatians, ch. iii. 2. received ye the Spirit; that is, the ſpecial gifts and graces of the Spirit, comparable to the beſt oil and pureſt gold; by the works of the law, or thro' the preaching of that, thro' the doctrine of juſtification by the works of it, or by the hearing of faith? by the doctrine of juſtification by faith in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, or by the goſpel preached and heard: this is the uſual way in which the Spirit and his grace are communicated to men; hence the goſpel is called the Spirit, and the miniſtration of the Spirit, 2 Cor. iii. 6, 8. and this ſeems to be a further confirmation of this ſenſe of the words, ſince this golden oil is diſtinct from the pipes thro' which it flows; as grace is from the goſpel, thro' which it is received; whereas, in the other ſenſe, they ſeem to coincide.

[s] עיני יהוה המה oculi Jehovæ ſunt illi.

ỷ. 13. And he anſwered me, and ſaid, &c.] That is, the angel anſwered to the prophet's queſtions: knoweſt thou not what theſe be? and I ſaid, no, my lord; ſee the note on ỷ. 5.

ỷ. 14. Then ſaid he, theſe are the two anointed ones, &c.] Or ſons of oil [t]. Some think the gifts and graces of the Spirit are meant, which come from the God of all grace, remain with Chriſt, are given freely by him to the ſons of God, and are always for the ſervice of the church, and ſufficient for it; others, Chriſt the Son of God, and the Holy Spirit. Chriſt is the anointed one, or ſon of oil, being anointed with the Holy Ghoſt to the office of prophet, prieſt, and king; and with which oil he has ſupplied his candleſtick, the church, in all ages. The Holy Spirit is the oil of gladneſs, and that anointing which teacheth all things. And this is the ſenſe of Capellus, as has been obſerved on ỷ. 2. And the learned and judicious Pemble makes a query of it, whether Chriſt and the Comforter; or Chriſt in his two natures; or Chriſt in his two offices of king and prieſt of his church; or how elſe the words are to be underſtood: and this was the ſenſe of Origen long ago, tho' cenſured by Jerom; it may be the rather, becauſe he interprets the candleſtick of the Father. But theſe epithets, anointed ones, and ſons of oil, are very ſuitable to them; the one being called the Meſſiah, or anointed; and the other the unction, and the oil of gladneſs: and indeed, if by the golden oil emptied out of them, is meant the grace of God, as it frequently ſignifies in ſcripture, no other can be meant; ſince they are the inexhauſtible fountain of all grace and gifts to the church in all ages, whereby it is ſupplied and ſupported; and may be ſaid to ſtand before the Lord of the whole earth, God the Father; who does not immediately by himſelf adminiſter to the church, but by Chriſt the head of it; and Chriſt communicates by his Spirit, whom he ſends from himſelf, and from the Father: and the rather they may be thought to be meant, ſince the miniſters of the word ſeem to be deſigned by the ſeven lamps which receive the oil, or gifts and graces of the Spirit, fitting them for their work, from the bowl on the top of the candleſtick, which is ſupplied with it from theſe two olive-trees; and therefore muſt be diſtinct from them, or otherwiſe they will be ſaid to be ſupplied from themſelves: tho' whereas, both Chriſt and the Spirit communicate by the word and the ordinances, adminiſtered by the faithful diſpenſers of the word; hence thoſe witneſſes of Chriſt, in all ages, may with propriety enough be called two anointed ones, and the two olive-trees, as they are in Rev. xi. 4. where there is a plain alluſion to this paſſage. The Targum renders the words, theſe are the two ſons of princes, or great men. Some Jewiſh writers interpret them of their two Meſſiahs, Meſſiah ben Joſeph, and Meſſiah ben David [v]. Some interpreters underſtand by them Enoch and Elias; others, Peter and Paul; others better, with Kimchi and Ben Melech, Joſhua and Zerubbabel, the one anointed for the prieſthood, and the other for the kingdom; of which two offices Jarchi interprets them; and others the two churches, Jewiſh and Chriſtian. That ſtand by the Lord of the whole earth; the creator and governor of the univerſe: miniſters of the word are on his ſide, abide by his truths and ordinances, and are faithful to his cauſe and intereſt: or, before the Lord of the whole earth [w]; they are his miniſters, and ſerve him; they ſtand, as it becomes them, which ſhows their work is not done; and that it is the Lord's work they are engaged in; and that they continue and perſevere in it: likewiſe it ſhows, that they are under his eye, notice, diſpoſe, care, and protection; that they are in his favour, and enjoy his preſence. How this may be applied to the two divine perſons ſtanding by or before God the Father, has been before obſerved, and to be underſtood of them as in their office-capacity.

CHAP. V.

THIS chapter treats of the judgments of God upon the wicked Jews, for their ſins and impieties, the meaſure of which was filled up, and of the execution of them, which are repreſented in two viſions: the firſt is of a flying roll, which ſignifies the curſe of God, and is deſcribed by its meaſure, the length being twenty cubits, and the breadth ten; and by the extent of it, it reaching to the whole earth; and particularly to thieves and falſe ſwearers, who ſhall be cut off by it; and by the certainty of its coming into the houſes of ſuch, and the utter deſolation it ſhould there make, ℣. 1, 2, 3, 4. and the other is the viſion of an ephah, and a woman ſitting in it, and a talent of lead caſt upon the mouth of it, which ſignified wickedneſs, ℣. 5, 6, 7, 8. this ephah is ſeen to be lifted up between earth and heaven by two women, who are ſaid to have wings like the wings of ſtorks, and the wind to be in them; and who are ſaid by the angel to carry the ephah into the land of Shinar, to build it an houſe, that it might be eſtabliſhed and ſettled upon its own baſe, ℣. 9, 10, 11.

℣. 1. Then I turned and lift up mine eyes, and looked, &c.] The prophet turned himſelf from looking upon the candleſtick and olive-branches, having had a full and clear underſtanding of them, and looked another way, and ſaw another viſion: and behold a flying roll; a volume or book flying in the air; it being uſual for books, which were written on parchment, to be rolled up in the form of a cylinder; whence they were called rolls or volumes.

℣. 2. And he ſaid unto me, &c.] That is, the angel: what ſeeſt thou? and I anſwered, I ſee a flying roll, the length whereof is twenty cubits, and the breadth thereof ten cubits; ſo that it was a very large one, a volume of a very uncommon ſize, eſpecially it may ſo ſeem to us; but in other nations they have very long rolls or volumes, even longer than this: the Ruſſians write their acts, proceſſes, and other court-matters, on long rolls of paper, ſome twenty ells, ſome thirty, and ſome ſixty and more [x]: and this being the length and breadth of the porch before the temple, 1 Kings vi. 3. hence the Jewiſh writers conclude, that this flying roll came from thence: it may deſign either the roll or book in which the ſins of men are written; which is very large, and will quickly be brought into judgment, when it will be opened, and men will be judged according to it; which ſhows the notice God takes of the ſins of men; the exact knowledge he has of them; his ſtrict remembrance of them, and the certain account men muſt give of them another day: or the book of God's judgments upon ſinners, ſuch as was Ezekiel's roll, Ezek. ii. 10, 11. which are many and great; are rolled up, and not at preſent to be ſearched into; but are flying, coming on, and will be ſpeedily executed: or rather the book of the law, called a roll or volume, Pſ. xl. 7. Luke iv. 17, 20. and which will be a ſwift witneſs againſt the breakers of it, as more fully appears from the explanation of it in the next verſe. It is a mere fancy and conceit of ſome, that the Talmud is meant by this roll, the body of the Jewiſh traditions, which make void the commands of God, take away the bleſſing, and leave a curſe in the land, as they did in the land of Judea.

℣. 3. Then ſaid he unto me, this is the curſe, &c.] So the law of Moſes is called, becauſe it has curſes written in it, Deut. xxvii. 15—26. and xxviii. 15—26. and xxix. 19, 20. and xxx. 19. which curſe is not cauſeleſs, but is according to law and juſtice; it is from the Lord, and is no other than the wrath of the Almighty; and wherever it lights, it will remain and continue for ever. Vitringa, on Iſ. xxiv. 6. ſays, this is the curſe which Iſaiah there propheſies of, which had its accompliſhment in the times of Antiochus; but there the prophet is ſpeaking, not of the land of Judea, but of the antichriſtian ſtates. That goeth forth over the face of the whole earth; over the whole land of Judea, and the inhabitants of it, for their breach of the law, contempt of the goſpel, and the rejection of the Meſſiah; and which had its accompliſhment when wrath came upon them to the uttermoſt, in the deſtruction of their nation, city and temple; and is the curſe God threatened to ſmite their land with, Mal. iv. 6. and this curſe alſo reaches to the whole world, and the inhabitants of it, who lie in wickedneſs; and to all ſorts of ſinners, particularly thoſe next mentioned: for every one that ſtealeth, ſhall be cut off as on this ſide, according to it; as it is written and declared on one ſide of the roll: and every one that ſweareth, ſhall be cut off as on that ſide, according to it; as is written and declared on the other ſide of the roll; which two ſins of theft and falſe ſwearing, the one being againſt the ſecond, and the other the firſt table of the law, ſhew that the curſe of the law reaches to all ſorts of ſins and ſinners; to all who do not keep it in every reſpect; and indeed, to all but thoſe who are redeemed from it by the blood of Chriſt; and that it is proportioned according to a man's ſins: and thoſe two are particularly mentioned, becauſe they are ſins which prevailed among the Jews at the time Chriſt was on earth. Theft did, both in a literal and figurative ſenſe, Matt. xxiii. 14. Rom. ii. 21. Luke xi. 52. John x. 8, 10. and ſo did vain ſwearing, Matt. v. 33—36. and xxiii. 16—22.

℣. 4. I will bring it forth, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, &c.] The roll was come forth, and was flying abroad, but the curſe and wrath of God, ſignified by it, is what God would bring forth out of his treaſures, according to his purpoſes and declarations, and execute upon ſinners; which ſhows the certainty of it, and that there is no eſcaping it: and it ſhall enter into the houſe of the thief, and into the houſe of him that ſweareth falſly by my name; and it ſhall remain in the midſt of his houſe, and ſhall conſume it with the timber thereof, and the ſtones thereof; when wrath is gone forth from the Lord, there's no ſtopping it; and where it takes place it will remain, there's no getting rid of it; it makes an utter deſolation of goods and eſtates, and entirely deſtroys both body and ſoul in hell: there ſeems to be an alluſion to the plague of the leproſy, Lev. xiv. 45. So the ſon of Sirach ſays, "a man "that ſwears much ſhall be full of iniquity, and "the plague ſhall not depart from his houſe:" and again, "if a man ſwears in vain, he ſhall not "be innocent or juſtified, for his houſe ſhall be "full of calamities[x]." So the oracle in Herodotus[y], which Grotius has obſerved, makes an utter deſtruction of a man's houſe and family, to be the puniſhment of the ſin of perjury. Moreover, by the houſe of the thief and ſwearer, may be meant the temple, as in the times of Chriſt, which was become a den of thieves and perjurers, and for their ſins became deſolate, Matt. xxi. 13. and xxiii. 38.

℣. 5. Then the angel that talked with me went forth, &c.] From the place where he was, and had been interpreting the viſion of the flying roll, unto another more convenient for ſhewing and explaining the following one; and as it ſhould ſeem, took the prophet along with him: and ſaid unto me, lift up now thine eyes, and ſee what is this that goeth forth; either out of the temple, or out of heaven, into ſome open place, where it might be ſeen.

℣. 6. And I ſaid, what is it? &c.] After he had lift up his eyes and ſeen it, he deſires to know both what it was, and what was the meaning of it: and he ſaid, this is an ephah, that goeth forth; which was a meaſure much in uſe with the Jews, Exod. xvi. 36. Lev. xix. 36. Ruth ii. 17. it is the ſame with the bath, and held above ſeven wine gallons. The Targum interprets this of ſuch who dealt in falſe meaſures, whoſe ſin is expoſed, and their puniſhment ſet forth; but rather it deſigns the meaſure of iniquity filling up, either in Judea, particularly in the times of Chriſt, Matt. xxiii. 32. or in the whole world, and eſpecially in the antichriſtian ſtates, Rev. xviii. 5, 6: and he ſaid moreover, this is their reſemblance in all the earth; or this is their eye[z]; what they are looking at, and intent upon, namely, this ephah; that is, to fill up the meaſure of their iniquity: or as Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it, this ephah, which thou ſeeſt, ſhows that there is an eye upon them which ſees their works; and this is the eye of the Lord, which ſees and takes notice of all the evil actions of men, not as approving them, but as obſerving them, and avenging them. Cocceius, by the ephah, underſtands an abundance of temporal good things beſtowed upon the chriſtian church in Conſtantine's time and following, on which the eyes of carnal men were looking.

℣. 7. And behold there was lift up a talent of lead, &c.] By the angel; ſince he is afterwards ſaid to caſt it upon the mouth of the ephah. A cicar, or talent of ſilver, with the Jews, was equal to three thouſand ſhekels, as may be gathered from Exod. xxxviii. 24, 25, 26. and weighed a hundred and twenty-five pounds[a]; or, as others, a hundred and twenty[b]; and according to the more exact account of Dr. Arbuthnot, a hundred and thirteen pounds, ten ounces, one penny-weight, and 10 $\frac{2}{7}$ grains of our Troy weight. A Babyloniſh talent, according to Ælianus[c], weighed ſeventy-two Attic pounds; and an Attic mina or pound, weighed a hundred drachms; ſo that it was of the weight of ſeven thouſand two hundred ſuch drachms. An Alexandrian talent, was equal to twelve thouſand Attic drachms; and theſe the ſame with an hundred and twenty-five Roman libra's or pounds; which talent is ſuppoſed to be the ſame with that of Moſes. The Roman talent contained ſeventy two Italic mina's, which were the ſame with the Roman libra's[d]. But ſince the Hebrew word cicar, ſignifies any thing plain, and what is extended like a cake, as Arias Montanus obſerves[e], it may here intend a plate of lead, which was laid over the mouth of the ephah, as a lid unto it; tho' tho' indeed it is afterwards called אבן עופרת a ſtone of lead, and ſo ſeems to deſign a weight. And this is a woman that ſitteth in the midſt of the ephah; who in ℣. 8. is called wickedneſs; and here repreſented by a woman, becauſe, ſay ſome, the woman was firſt in the tranſgreſſion; or rather, becauſe ſin is flattering and deceitful, and draws into the commiſſion of it, and ſo to ruin: and this woman wickedneſs, intends wicked men; all the wicked among the Jews, and even all the wicked of the world; who ſit in the ephah, very active and buſy in filling up the meaſure of their ſins, and where they ſit with great pleaſure and delight; very openly and viſibly declare their ſin, as Sodom, and hide it not; in a very proud and haughty manner, with great boldneſs and impudence, and in great ſecurity, without any concern about a future ſtate, promiſing themſelves impunity here and hereafter. This woman is a very lively emblem of the whore of Rome, ſitting as a queen upon many waters; ruling over kings and princes; living deliciouſly, and in great eaſe and pleaſure filling up the meaſure of her ſins. Kimchi interprets this woman of the ten tribes, who wickedly departed from God, and were as one kingdom.

℣. 8. And he ſaid, this is wickedneſs, &c.] A repreſentation of wicked men, who are wickedneſs itſelf, as their inward part is, Pſ. v. 9. and particularly of the wicked one, the man of ſin and ſon of perdition, the Roman antichriſt and apocalyptic beaſt; who tho' he is called by this title, His Holineſs, his true and proper name is wickedneſs; ο ανομος, that wicked lawleſs one, 2 Theſſ. ii. 8. yea, wickedneſs itſelf, being extremely wicked, a ſink of ſin, and of all abominations, Rev. xvii. 5. and xviii. 2. And he caſt it into the midſt of the ephah; that is, wickedneſs; that it might be kept within bounds, and not exceed its meaſure to be filled up: this ſeems to denote ſome reſtraint on ſinners, that they may'nt be able to go all the lengths they would; and ſome rebuke upon them, that they might not lift up their heads with impunity; and ſome check upon them, and their furious rage towards the people of God; and alſo the putting of an utter end to ſin and ſinners, and particularly the followers of antichriſt; ſee Pſ. civ. 35. And he caſt the weight of lead upon the mouth thereof; either upon the mouth of the woman, or of the ephah; and be it which it will, it was done to keep the woman within the ephah, and preſs her down there, and intends the judgments of God upon ſinners; and ſhows that there is no eſcaping divine vengeance; that it falls heavy where it lights, and ſinks to the loweſt hell; and that it will continue, being laid on by the firm, unchangeable, and irrevocable decree of God. Cocceius underſtands this of the Saracens and Turks, and the barbarous nations, being caſt into the Roman empire, to reſtrain the antichriſtian tyranny; but it ſeems better to apply it to the utter deſtruction of antichriſt, ſignified by a milſtone caſt into the ſea, and ſunk there, never to riſe more; ſee Rev. xviii. 21. and with it compare Exod. xv. 10.

℣. 9. Then lift I up mine eyes and looked, &c.] This is not a new viſion, but a continuation of the former, as appears from the ephah ſeen in it: and behold, there came out two women; out of the ſame place the ephah did. The Targum explains theſe two women by two provinces; and Kimchi interprets them of the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, who had been carried captive into Babylon; and others of the two kings, Jehoiakim and Zedekiah, who were the cauſe of the captivity; but Jarchi underſtands by them the Babylonians and Chaldeans, two nations as one, joined in Nebuchadnezzar's armies, which carried them captive: others think the two reformers, Ezra and Nehemiah, are meant, who were inſtruments of purging the Jews, returned from captivity, tho' but weak ones, and therefore are compared to women; yet what they did, they did ſwiftly, and therefore are ſaid to have wings, and under the influence of the Spirit of God; hence the wind or ſpirit [f], is ſaid to be in their wings; and they acted from a tender regard to the glory of God, and the good of their country, and therefore their wings were like the wings of a ſtork; a bird of paſſage, as appears from Jer. viii. 7. and ſo a fit emblem to be uſed in the tranſportation of the ephah; of whom Pliny [g] ſays, from whence they come, and whither they betake themſelves, is yet unknown; and adds, there is no doubt that they come from afar; as it is plain they muſt, if that relation be true, which ſeems to have good authority, that one of theſe creatures, upon its return to Germany, brought a green root of ginger with it; which muſt come from the eaſtern part of the world; from Arabia, or Ethiopia, or the Eaſt-Indies, where it grows [h]: and as it is a bird that takes ſuch long flights, it muſt have wings fitted for ſuch a purpoſe; and which are taken notice of in Job xxxix. 13. to which the wings and feather of the oſtrich are compared; for ſo Bochart [i] there renders the word, the wing of the oſtriches rejoices, truly the wing as of a ſtork, and the feather; or as others, who gave wings to the ſtork and oſtrich? both remarkable for their wings: and Vatablus renders the word here an oſtrich; which, according to Pliny [k], is the largeſt of birds, and almoſt as big as a beaſt. In Ethiopia and Africa, they are taller than a horſe and his rider, and exceed the horſe in ſwiftneſs; and their wings ſeem to be given them to help them in running; but which are not ſufficient to lift them much above the earth, and ſo can't be meant here: but rather the ſtork, whoſe wings are black and white; and when they fly, they ſtretch out their necks forwards, and their feet backwards, and with theſe direct their courſe; when a tempeſt riſes, ſtanding on both feet, they ſpread their wings, lay their bill upon their breaſt, and turn their face that way the ſtorm comes [l]. The Targum renders it an eagle, which is the ſwifteſt of birds, and whoſe wings are very ſtrong to bear any thing upon them, as they do their young, to which the alluſion is, Deut. xxxii. 11. and ſo if meant here, to lift up and bear away the ephah between the earth and the heaven; but the word is never uſed of that bird. The Harpies or Furies with the heathens, are repreſented as women having wings [m], as theſe women are ſaid to have; but theſe are very different women from them. Tho' ſome think the Romans, under Veſpaſian and Titus, are intended; but it may be, that the two perfections of God, his power and juſtice, in puniſhing men for their ſins, are meant, particularly in the laſt times, and at the day of judgment. The power of God will be ſeen in raiſing the dead; in bringing all to judgment; in ſeparating the wicked from the righteous, and in the execution of the ſentence denounced on them: and the juſtice of God will be very conſpicuous in the judgment and deſtruction of them. And the wind was in their wings; they had wings, as denoting ſwiftneſs, as angels are ſaid to have; hence Maimonides, as Kimchi obſerves, thought that angels are here meant; but this denotes, that tho' God is long-ſuffering, and may ſeem to defer judgment, which is ſometimes a ſtumbling to the righteous, and an hardening to the wicked; yet as this is only for the ſalvation of his elect, ſo when once the time is up, and the commiſſion given forth, power and juſtice will ſpeedily execute the ſentence: and the wind being in their wings, ſhews the greater ſwiftneſs and ſpeed in the diſpatch of buſineſs, and the great ſtrength and force with which they performed it: for they had wings like the wings of a ſtork; which being a creature kind and tender, ſhew that there is no cruelty in the diſplays of the power and juſtice of God, in puniſhing ſinners: and they lift up the ephah between the earth and the heaven; which denotes the viſibility of the whole meaſure of the ſins of wicked men; they will all be made manifeſt and brought into judgment: and alſo the viſibility of their puniſhment; they'll go into everlaſting puniſhment, in the ſight of angels and men; and which will be the caſe of the antichriſtian beaſt, Rev. xvii. 8.

℣. 10. Then ſaid I to the angel that talked with me, &c.] This the prophet ſaid after he had ſeen the ephah come forth; the woman, wickedneſs, caſt into it, and the talent of lead upon her; and the two women lifting up the ephah between heaven and earth: whither do theſe bear the ephah? he neither aſks what the ephah ſignified, nor who were the women that bore it, but only whither they bore it.

℣. 11. And he ſaid unto me, to build it an houſe in the land of Shinar, &c.] That is, in the province of Babylon, as the Targum paraphraſes it; for Babel, or Babylon, was in the land of Shinar, Gen. x. 10. and xi. 2. whither the Jews were carried captive, Dan. i. 2. Iſ. xi. 11. and the bearing of the ephah thither, may denote the cauſe of their captivity, the meaſure of ſins filled up by them: tho' this ſome underſtand of the like injuries, oppreſſions, and vexations, brought upon the Chaldeans in the land of Shinar, which they before exerciſed towards and upon the Jews; and others of the rejection of wicked men from among the Jews, by Ezra and Nehemiah, tranſporting them as it were back to Babylon again: others of the diſperſion of the Jews by the Romans, who chiefly ſettled after that in the eaſtern parts of the world; tho' indeed the whole world was a land of Shinar, or ſhaking out [*], unto them; they being ſhook out of their own land, and ſcattered about every where; which diſperſion has been long and laſting, notorious and conſpicuous; and they are now ſettled upon their own baſe, eſtabliſhed upon their former principles of legality and ſelf-righteouſneſs, and rejection of the true Meſſiah: or rather this may be underſtood of the transfer of the ephah, or whole meaſure of iniquity, into myſtical Babylon. The antichriſtian church of Rome is called Babylon; ſhe is repreſented as a ſink of ſin, a myſtery of iniquity, Rev. xvii. 5. and a houſe being built for this man of ſin, antichriſt, denotes the continuance of him; and being eſtabliſhed on its own baſe, ſhews the falſe foundation on which the church of Rome is built, and her carnal ſecurity. So Cocceius, by the two women, underſtands the two kingdoms or powers of antichriſt, the civil and eccleſiaſtical powers; which ſupport the man of ſin, lift him up, and give him the higheſt place in the church, and fix his ſeat where idolatry and perſecution reign, as formerly did in Babylon, in the land of Shinar. Tho' the whole may very well be applied to the laſt and everlaſting puniſhment of ſin and ſinners, when the whole meaſure is filled up. The end of ſin and ſinners is death, and everlaſting deſtruction. The ephah, and the woman in it, are carried, not upwards to heaven, nor to the new Jeruſalem, but to the land of Shinar, the land of ſhaking; to hell, where are utter darkneſs, weeping, wailing, and gnaſhing of teeth; where a houſe is built for them, which denotes their continuance there; and which being eſtabliſhed on its own baſe, ſhews their puniſhment ſhall for ever remain; their worm never dies; their fire is not quenched; the ſmoke of it aſcends for ever and ever; their deſtruction is an everlaſting deſtruction.

CHAP. VI.

THIS chapter contains a viſion of four chariots, and the explanation of it; and an order to make crowns of gold and ſilver for certain uſes mentioned; and a famous prophecy concerning the Meſſiah as the builder of the temple, the church. The chariots are deſcribed by their number, four; by the place, the mountains, from whence they came out; and by the different colour of the horſes in each of them, ℣. 1, 2, 3. upon the prophet's enquiry what theſe were, an explanation is given of them; and they are ſaid to be the four ſpirits of the heavens; and are deſcribed by their ſituation, ſtanding before the Lord of the whole earth; by their miſſion from him; by the ſeveral places to which they were ſent; and by their ſucceſs, or by the good effects produced, at leaſt by ſome of them, ℣. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. then follows the order to make the crowns; and it is declared what they ſhould be made of, gold and ſilver; from whom they were to be had, and who were to be concerned herein; and what was to be done with them; they were to be put upon the head of Joſhua the high-prieſt, ℣. 9, 10, 11. who being an eminent type of Chriſt, a prophecy concerning him is ordered to be delivered to him; who is deſcribed by his name, the man, the branch; by the place he ſhould grow up from; by the work he ſhould do, building the temple of the Lord; by the glory he ſhould have on account of it; and by the offices of king, prieſt, and prophet, he ſhould execute, ℣. 12, 13. and after this was done, then the crowns were to be laid up in the temple of the Lord for a memorial, by the four men abovementioned, ℣. 14. and tho' the Meſſiah is the chief builder of the temple, the church, yet it is ſuggeſted that others, and even Gentiles, ſhould come and build in it; and which when done, it would be evident that the prophet had his miſſion to the Jews

Jews of the Lord; and the chapter is cloſed with a promiſe of the accompliſhment of all this, ſhould they diligently hearken to the voice of the Lord, ℣. 15.

℣. 1. And I turned, and lift up mine eyes, and looked, &c.] When he ſaw another viſion, as follows: and behold, there came four chariots; by which are meant, not the four goſpels; rather the apoſtles of Chriſt, who had their commiſſion from Chriſt; were ſent into all the world by him, and carried his name and goſpel thither; were the inſtruments Chriſt made uſe of in bringing many ſouls to him, and into his church, and for the defence of his goſpel, and of his intereſt; and were military chariots, who fought the good fight of faith; and triumphal ones, who were made to triumph in Chriſt, being more than conquerors thro' him; tho' others think angels are here meant, the chariots of the Lord, Pſ. lxviii. 17. ſince they are called the four ſpirits of the heavens; and are ſaid to go forth from ſtanding before the Lord of the earth, and are ſent by him into the ſeveral parts of it, ℣. 5, 7. and are repreſented by horſes of various colours, as in ch. i. 8. theſe may be ſignified by chariots, for their glory, ſtrength and ſwiftneſs, in which Jehovah rides about the world, and executes his will; and are made uſe of for the deſtruction of the church's enemies, and for its protection and defence. The Jewiſh writers, after the Targum, generally interpret them of the four monarchies, the Perſian, Grecian, and Roman, by whom were ſeverally done the will of God in the world; and ſeem to be greatly the deſign of the viſion: theſe came out from between two mountains, and the mountains were mountains of braſs; ſuch in which this metal is found, as in Chalcis, where it is ſaid to be firſt found [o]; and from thence it has its name in the Greek tongue; or in the iſland of Cyprus, from whence it may be is the name of copper; and ſuch mountains were in Judea, Idumea, and Arabia formerly; as Carmel, according to Heſychius [p]; and Phinon in Idumea; and ſome mountains in Arabia, about eleven miles from Horeb, which, Jerom ſays [q], formerly abounded with veins of gold and braſs: theſe may intend the decrees and purpoſes of God, which, like mountains, are very ancient, earlier than the everlaſting hills, high and deep, not to be reached and ſearched into; are dark, obſcure, and hidden to men, till made known; and are firm, ſolid, and immoveable, and are laſting and durable; and, like mountains of braſs, are never to be broken in pieces, revoked, made null, and void; for they ſtand upon the unalterable will of God, upon the baſis of infallible wiſdom; are ſupported by uncontroulable power, and can't be diſannulled by all the men on earth, and devils in hell: and according to theſe fixed and immutable decrees, the ſaid monarchies in ſucceſſion have took place in the world; unleſs rather it ſhould be thought, that by theſe mountains of braſs, are deſigned the power and providence of God, by which the ſeveral people that firſt founded thoſe empires were reſtrained for a while from going forth to make war upon others, and ſubdue their kingdoms; until the time was come, it was the will of God they ſhould. The alluſion may be to race-horſes in chariots, formerly uſed for ſuch exerciſes, which were held within the circus or bars, till the ſign was given when they ſhould ſtart: in like manner theſe nations were kept within bounds for a while, juſt as the four angels were bound by the providence of God at the river Euphrates, until they were looſed; which ſignify the Saracens, and their numerous army of horſemen under their four leaders, who were reſtrained from over-running the eaſtern empire of the Romans, until it was the pleaſure of God to looſe them, and give them liberty, Rev. ix. 14, 15, 16. Grotius underſtands this literally of the ſtreights of Cilicia, and the faſtneſſes of the mountains there, thro' which the Babylonians and Perſians, Alexander and his generals, uſed to paſs into Syria, Judea, and Egypt; but rather theſe viſionary chariots ſeemed to ſteer their courſe thro' a valley, which lay between two mountains, whereby they eſcaped the difficulties that lay in their way by the mountains; and may denote the low eſtate of theſe monarchies in their original, and the difficulties they grappled with, and got over, before they roſe to the grandeur they did. Some interpret the two mountains of braſs, of the kingdom of Iſrael, after the Babyloniſh captivity, and the kingdom of the Meſſiah; and the four chariots, of the four kingdoms, in this order; the Perſian, the Grecian, that of the Lagidæ and Seleucidæ, and the Roman, which is in courſe laſt; but was ſeen firſt by the prophet, becauſe utter deſtruction was brought upon Iſrael by it [r]: according to this interpretation, the red horſes, are the Romans; and the other, the above-mentioned. So Cocceius is of opinion, that the two mountains are two powerful and unſhaken kingdoms, ſet up by God; or rather two manifeſtations of the ſame kingdom; the one the kingdom of the houſe of David; the other the kingdom of Chriſt, which is ſpiritual, but as to the effect earthly, in the ſubjection of all nations to it, Dan. vii. 22, 27. the kingdom of the houſe of David, as to the external form is aboliſhed, but notwithſtanding remains in the root, until it appears in another mountain; and between theſe two, or in the middle ſpace of time, four kingdoms with their armies would poſſeſs the promiſed land; and he obſerves, that in Dan. ii. 35, 45. mention is made of two mountains, and that theſe chariots in part agree with the ſeveral parts of the image there.

℣. 2. In the firſt chariot were red horſes, &c.] If theſe are to be underſtood of the apoſtles of Chriſt, and miniſters of the goſpel, they may be compared to horſes, for bearing the name of Chriſt, and drawing the chariot of the goſpel; for their ſtrength to labour in the word and doctrine; for their courage in the cauſe of Chriſt; and for their ſwiftneſs in doing his work; and to red ones, for their flaming zeal for the honour of the Redeemer, and their bloody ſufferings for his ſake: and if of angels, they may be compared to horſes, becauſe ſtrong and ſwift to do the will of God; and to red ones, becauſe they are the executioners of his wrath and vengeance on wicked men: but if by the chariots are meant the monarchies, then by theſe red horſes muſt be deſigned the Babylonians and Chaldeans, ſo called becauſe their ſoldiers were clothed in red, and their chariots were like flaming torches; and they were ſanguinary, cruel, and bloody in their tempers, and in their actions to the Jews; and were ſignified by Nebuchadnezzar's head of gold in his image; ſee Nahum ii. 3, 4. Hab. i. 6, 7, 8: and in the ſecond chariot black horſes; which, applied to the apoſtles and miniſters of the goſpel, may denote their mean and abject appearance outwardly; and their knowledge in the myſteries of grace, which are dark and obſcure to others; and, if underſtood of angels, is applicable to them, when meſſengers of ill tidings, or executioners of judgment: but if the monarchies are meant, which ſeems beſt, the Medes and Perſians are intended; and their black colour is expreſſive of the ſorrowful eſtate of the Jews under them, eſpecially in the time of Haman, as Jarchi and Kimchi obſerve: black horſes were reckoned ſtrong, well made, and fit for labour; and the Ethiopians and Moors choſe to have their horſes they uſed in war all of this colour, to ſtrike the greater horror and terror into their enemies; and to ſee black horſes in a dream, was accounted a bad omen [s]. The Medes and Perſians were a ſtrong and warlike people, and were very terrible to their enemies under Cyrus, and very troubleſome and diſtreſſing to the Jews under Cambyſes and Ahaſuerus.

ỿ. 3. And in the third chariot white horſes, &c.] Which, as referring to goſpel-preachers, may denote the purity of their lives and doctrines, and their conqueſts and victories over the ſouls of men by the miniſtry of the word; and as applicable to angels, may expreſs the purity of their nature and actions, the joyful meſſages they bring to the heirs of ſalvation, and their victories over the evil angels; but, as reſpecting the monarchies, point at the Grecians, and the conqueſts of Alexander, and his mildneſs and gentleneſs to the Jews: white horſes were uſed in triumphs, in token of victory [t]; ſee Rev. vi. 2. and xix. 14. and they have been reckoned the ſwifteſt in running; and by the Oneirocriticks, to ſee them in a dream or viſion is a good omen [u]; and ſo it was accounted with the Jews [w]; all which ſuits very well with Alexander, who was famous for his victories over many nations; and who, with great velocity over-ran them, and as ſoon conquered them, and was kind and beneficent to the Jewiſh nation: and in the fourth chariot grizled and bay horſes; ſignifying either the diverſity of gifts in the miniſters of the goſpel; or the different employment and ſervices of angels; or rather the Romans are meant, who were collected out of various nations, and conſiſted of different people, and had divers forms of government, and emperors of different diſpoſitions to the Jews; and particularly as two colours are aſſigned to theſe, it may reſpect the diviſion of their kingdom into pagan and papal, as is predicted in Dan. ii. 41, 42. Kimchi thinks the bay horſes deſign the kingdom of the Iſhmaelites, or Turks, a ſtrong and powerful people; as ſome think the word uſed ſignifies [x]; rather the Goths and Vandals; ſee ỿ. 7. The word for grizled, is by the Targum rendered ſpotted or ſpeckled; and comes from one which ſignifies hail; and ſo denotes ſuch coloured horſes as are ſpotted with white ſpots, like hail-ſtones [y], upon another colour, as black or red; and is by the Septuagint, and others rendered, various [z], of diverſe colours: and the other word for bay, is rendered by them ſterling coloured; the colour of the ſterling, which is a black bird, with white ſpots; and ſo were a fit emblem of the Goths, Hunns, &c. who were of various nations, and had various laws, cuſtoms, and uſages; tho' ſome think by theſe two are meant the ſucceſſors of Alexander, the Lagidæ and the Seleucidæ, put together, becauſe of their intermarriages with one another, as well as ſucceeding Alexander: the former by the grizled, who went and ſettled in the ſouth country in Egypt, ỿ. 6. whoſe firſt king was Ptolemy Lagus, from whence is the name, and who is the king of the ſouth in Dan. xi. 5. and the latter by the bay or aſh coloured, as the Targum; the kings of Syria hiding deep their counſels, as under aſhes, particularly Antiochus, as Grotius obſerves; and ſometimes making war on one nation, and ſometimes on another; and both of them in their turns falling upon the Jews ſuddenly, and with great violence, like hailſtones, and making ſad devaſtations among them, reducing them to aſhes; but then this ſenſe ſhuts out the Romans, the fourth monarchy, from having any place in this viſion, which cannot be admitted; ſince theſe four chariots anſwer to the four ſorts of metal in Nebuchadnezzar's image, and to the four beaſts in Daniel's viſion. So the Jewiſh writers [a] ſay, the red horſes are the kingdom of Babylon, which ſhed much blood in Iſrael; this is the head of gold: the black horſes, the kingdom of the Perſians and Medes, like to a bear, who made black the faces of Iſrael, by the decrees of Haman: the white horſes, the kingdom of Grecia, who made white the faces of Iſrael by reproaches: the horſes grizled and bay, the fourth kingdom, which decreed various decrees, different from one another: and theſe four chariots went out from between two mountains, from between the kingdoms of Judah and Iſrael, which dwell between two countries, that beyond Jordan, and the land of Iſrael; and they went out between them, and carried them captive; and theſe kingdoms are called mountains of braſs, becauſe ſtrong as braſs, and hearkened not to the words of the prophets.

ỿ. 4. Then I anſwered, and ſaid unto the angel that talked with me, &c.] After he had ſeen the chariots come out, and had obſerved the different colours of the horſes in them: what are theſe, my lord? that is, what do they ſignify? what is the meaning of this viſion?

ỿ. 5. And the angel anſwered and ſaid unto me, &c.] In order to grant him his requeſt, and explain the viſion of the chariots: theſe are the four ſpirits of the heavens; or, the four winds of the heavens; the apoſtles and miniſters of the goſpel may be compared to the winds, becauſe their miniſtry is the miniſtration of the Spirit, which is like wind that blows inviſibly, powerfully, and where it liſteth; and becauſe in, and by it, the Spirit breathes life and comfort into the ſouls of men; and becauſe of the powerful efficacy, and penetrating nature of the word preached by them, and their ſwiftneſs and readineſs to do the will of God: angels are called ſpirits or winds, Pſ. civ. 3, 4. they are created ſpirits, and ſo differ from God; are incorporeal ones, and ſo differ from men; and are immaterial and immortal, and ſo die not: they are ſpiritual ſubſiſtences, and ſpirits of the heavens, or heavenly ſpirits; heaven being the place of their abode and reſidence; and they may be compared to winds, for their inviſibility, wonderful penetration into places and things, their very great ſwiftneſs, and prodigious power and ſtrength. The Targum paraphraſes the words thus, “ theſe are “ the four kingdoms, which are as the winds of “ heaven;” and ſo the ſame are ſignified by the four winds in Dan. vii. 2. to which they may be compared, for their ſwift and forcible carrying all before them, and for their fickleneſs and changeableneſs; and to which the ſeveral parts of the world, into which they went, agree: which go forth from ſtanding before the Lord of all the earth; ſo the apoſtles of Chriſt, and miniſters of the goſpel, ſtood before him in his eternal purpoſes and decrees from everlaſting; and went forth, having their commiſſion from him in time; and were ſent by him into the ſeveral parts of the world he is the Lord of; and by whom they were filled with gifts, grace and courage, fitting them for their work. Angels alſo ſtand before him, miniſtring unto him; always behold him; are in his preſence, and enjoy his favour; and go forth from him, being ſent forth by him on various accounts into all the parts of the world; which Jehovah is the creator, upholder, and governor of: moreover, this is applicable to the four monarchies; theſe ſtood before the Lord in his vaſt and infinite mind; in the ſecret decrees of it, before the world was; and the ſending and going forth of them from him, ſhew, that they were powers ordained of God, who has the government of the whole world in his hands.

℣. 6. The black horſes which are therein, &c.] Which were in the ſecond chariot: no further mention is made of the red horſes in the firſt charoit, becauſe the kingdom of the Chaldeans was now extinct: theſe deſign the Medes and Perſians: go forth into the north country; into the country of Babylon or Chaldea, which lay north of Judea; ſee Jer. i. 13, 14, 15. and iii. 12. and vi. 22. and other places; theſe went to Babylon, took that, and ſeized on the empire, and delivered the Jews, who were captives there: and the white go forth after them; the Grecians under Alexander, who went after the Medes and Perſians into the ſame country, and fought Darius the Perſian, and conquered him: and the grizzled go forth toward the ſouth country; the Romans under Julius Cæſar, Auguſtus, and others before them, who went into Egypt, which lay ſouth of Judea, Dan. xi. 5. and conquered that, and other nations, and ſet up the fourth kingdom or monarchy.

℣. 7. And the bay went forth, and ſought to go, &c.] Without leave: theſe deſign either the Romans; or, ſince diſtinct from the grizled, the Hunns, Goths, and Vandals; who ſought to go out of their own places into other countries: and were deſirous that they might walk to and fro thro' the earth; without controul; over-running as they did the Roman empire, and ſet up ten kingdoms in it; unleſs this is to be underſtood of the land of Judea only, thro' which the Romans walked to and fro at pleaſure, and ſubdued it: and he ſaid; that is, the Lord of the whole earth, before whom they ſtood: get ye hence, walk to and fro thro' the earth; as being filled with indignation at them, and yet ſuffered them to have their will; and ſo Kimchi interprets the phraſe, “ he gave them power “ to go and ſubdue lands;” and to the ſame purpoſe Jarchi, “ he gave them power to rule with “ great authority; and this is the kingdom of “ Edom or Rome:” ſo they walked to and fro thro' the earth; either the land of Judea, as the Romans did, and made it a Roman province; and theſe may repreſent Rome papal, ſet up and ſupported by the above people, even the beaſt of Rome, which has reigned over the kings of the earth, to whom the ten kings gave their kingdom and power.

℣. 8. Then cried he upon me, and ſpake unto me, ſaying, &c.] That is, the Lord of the whole earth ſpoke to the prophet with a loud voice, and uttered the following words: behold, theſe that go toward the north country; meaning the Medes and Perſians, which went towards Babylon: have quieted my ſpirit in the north country; by executing the judgments of God upon the Chaldeans, and by helping, favouring, and delivering the people of the Jews; which were very agreeable to the will of God, and well pleaſing in his ſight, ſignified by the quieting or refreſhing his ſpirit.

℣. 9. And the word of the Lord came unto me, ſaying.] Either the word of prophecy from the Lord, as the Targum paraphraſes it; the viſions being ended, the prophetical part of the book begins; and many excellent prophecies concerning the Meſſiah, and his kingdom, are contained in this and the following chapters: or an order from the Lord, which is expreſſed in the next verſes.

℣. 10. Take of them of the captivity, &c.] That is, ſome of them that were returned from the captivity of Babylon, and who are mentioned by name: even of Heldai, of Tobijah, and Jedaiah, which are come from Babylon; either with Zerubbabel and Joſhua, when they came from thence; or who were now juſt come from thoſe that remained there: and come thou the ſame day; this very day in which they were come from thence: and go into the houſe of Joſiah the ſon of Zephaniah; where the above perſons were; or where they were to go along with him: this Joſiah might be either a goldſmith, and therefore the prophet is ſent to him to make the crowns after-mentioned; or elſe he might be a treaſurer belonging to the temple, who had gold and ſilver in his hands, which had been put there for the uſe of it.

℣. 11. Then take ſilver and gold, &c.] Which the Jewiſh writers ſuppoſe were brought by the above men from their brethren in Babylon, as a free will-offering towards the building of the temple; and make crowns; two at leaſt, one of ſilver, and another of gold; the one to be put upon the head of Joſhua the high-prieſt; the other upon the head of Zerubbabel, as Kimchi conjectures; tho' according to the text, they ſeem to be both, or all of them, be they as many as they will, to be put upon the head of Joſhua; and may ſignify the different ſtates of the prieſthood in the preſent time, and when in its priſtine glory; or that both the crown of the prieſthood, and the crown of the kingdom ſhould meet in his antitype Chriſt, who is ſaid to have on his head many crowns, Rev. xix. 12. The Targum renders it, thou ſhalt make a great crown; as if only one crown was to be made of gold and ſilver mixed together; and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it; but more are certainly meant, for it follows: and ſet them upon the head of Joſhua the ſon of Joſedech the high-prieſt; on whoſe head a fair mitre was ſet; ſee ch. iii. 5. and with the mitre was wore by the high-prieſt the holy crown, made of pure gold; and which was no other than the plate or flower of gold, on which was engraved, holineſs to the Lord, Exod. xxviii. 36.

36. and xxix. 6. and xxxix. 30. and this, according to the Jewiſh writers [b], was a plate of gold two fingers broad, and reached from ear to ear; tho' Joſephus [c] ſeems to give a different account of it, he ſays, "the golden crown ſurrounds (either "the mitre, or perhaps rather the forehead or "temples); and on it were three rows of cups or "flowers, like thoſe of the herb we call Saccharus, and the Grecian botaniſts, Hyoſciamus;" or henbane; and after deſcribing the herb, and the figure of the buds, cups or flowers of it, he adds, "like to theſe is made a crown reaching from the "hinder part of the head unto both temples; "for the flowers do not encompaſs the forehead; "but there is a golden plate, which has the name "of God engraved in ſacred letters;" which ſeems to diſagree with the accounts of other Jewiſh writers; unleſs, as Braunius [d] obſerves, they may be thus reconciled, that the crown was nothing elſe but the plate that was two fingers broad, and was in length from ear to ear; ſo that about the temples it was ornamented with three rows of henbane flowers on each ſide: and theſe three rows may give occaſion for the uſe of the word in the plural number; and ſome have called it, a triple crown [e]; and Popiſh writers fail not to improve it in favour of the crown their pontiff wears; and Lyra [f] ſpeaks of little crowns or coronets, even in the mitres of the common prieſts; which (he ſays) were circles in the lower part of them ſo called; wherefore the rows of flowers in the high-prieſt's crown, from whence it might be called ציץ a flower, might with more propriety bear that name. Philo the Jew [g], ſpeaking of the golden plate, ſays it was like a crown engraven with four letters of the name (Jehovah); and farther obſerves, that "the mitre under it kept the plate from touching "the head, on which the cidaris or diadem was "put; for it was like the cidaris which the eaſtern kings uſed for a diadem:" and indeed this crown, and the three rows of flowers in it, were an hieroglyphic or emblem of the threefold office of Chriſt, whom the high-prieſt repreſented, kingly, prieſtly, and prophetic; and ſo may be fitly ſignified here by crowns in the plural number; and it is uſual with the Jewiſh writers to ſpeak of three crowns, the crown of the law, the crown of the kingdom, and the crown of the prieſthood [h]; and very probably from the high-prieſt among the Jews wearing crowns, it was that the prieſts among the heathens had the ſame ornaments on their heads; and to be crowned was with them the ſame as to exerciſe the office of prieſthood [i]; and who was an eminent type of the Meſſiah, and in this of having crowns put upon his head, as the following words ſhew.

℣. 12. And ſpeak unto him, ſaying, &c.] That is, to Joſhua the high-prieſt, having the crowns on his head: thus ſpeaketh the Lord of hoſts, ſaying, behold the man whoſe name is the BRANCH; which is not to be underſtood of Zerubbabel, as ſome Jewiſh writers interpret it; for he was not the branch, by way of eminency, much leſs that righteous branch of David, called the Lord our righteouſneſs, Jer. xxiii. 5, 6. the ſame that is here meant; beſides, he was already grown up out of his place; nor did he build a temple, from which he had great glory; nor was he either king or prieſt, only governor of Judah; and however, not both, as this perſon is repreſented to be; and who is no other than the Meſſiah; and ſo the Targum paraphraſes the words, "behold the man "Meſſiah is his name;" and Jarchi owns, that ſome of their Rabbins interpret the words of the king Meſſiah. The branch is a name, by which the Meſſiah goes in the Talmud [k], and in other Jewiſh writings. It is aſked [l], what is the name of the king Meſſiah; it is anſwered among others, his name is the branch; as it is ſaid, behold the man, whoſe name is the branch, he ſhall grow up out of his place: elſewhere [m] they ſpeak of five letters doubled, which are the foundation of deliverance to certain perſons, or point thereat. The firſt four, they obſerve, were accompliſhed in the deliverance of Abraham from Ur of the Chaldees, of Iſaac from the Philiſtines, of Jacob from Eſau, and of the Iſraelites from Egypt; and the fifth, which is the letter צ, the firſt letter of Tzemach the branch, by it they ſay the holy bleſſed God will redeem Iſrael at the end of the four monarchies; as it is ſaid, behold the man whoſe name is the branch, &c. Philo the Jew [n], interprets this paſſage of a divine perſon, the Son of God, by whom no other than the Meſſiah is meant, "we have heard (ſays he) "one of the friends of Moſes, i. e. Zechariah, ſaying thus, behold the man, whoſe name is the "eaſt, or riſing ſun; (ſo the Greek verſion renders "the words) a new appellation, if you can think "it ſaid of one conſiſting of ſoul and body; but "if of that incorporeal one, bearing the divine "image, you will own that the name is fitly "given him, the ancient ſun, the Father of beings "will cauſe to ariſe; whom otherwiſe he names "the firſt begotten, and who being begotten, "imitates the ways of his Father; and looking "at his archetypal exemplars, forms the ſame." Abendana [o], a modern Jew, obſerves, that "it is "right that the Targum interprets it of the Meſſiah, for of him it is ſpoken; therefore it is "written, and he ſhall grow up out of his place; "for he ſhall go forth from him, and ſhall be of "the ſeed of Zerubbabel,—and the king Meſſiah "ſhall bear the glory of the kingdom, and he "ſhall rule upon the throne of his kingdom;" and when he is called a man, the meaning is not that he is a mere man, nor was he really man before his incarnation; but as he was to be man, and his incarnation was drawing near, he is ſo called: of his name the branch, ſee Iſ. iv. 2. and xi. 1. Jer. xxiii. 5. and Zech. iii. 8. and Joſhua, he is directed to look upon himſelf, with the crowns on his head, as a type of him; and ſo were the prophet, and thoſe that were with him; and he is to be beheld, as before in type, ſo now in truth, by faith, with love and affection, with diligent attention, and great admiration: and he ſhall grow up out of his place; or, from under him [p]; which may regard his natural deſcent as man, and the perſons or perſon from whom he ſprung; as from Abraham, Jacob, Judah, Jeſſe, and particularly from David, from the royal ſeed, as Jarchi interprets it: or elſe the place from whence this branch aroſe, the land of Judea, the tribe of Judah, the city of Bethlehem, where he was born; or Galilee, and particularly Nazareth, where he was brought up, and grew, and increaſed in the ſtature of his body, and in the wiſdom of his mind: or, it may be rendered, from his inferior place[q]; his ſuperior place, as the Son of God, is heaven; his inferior place, as the ſon of man, is the earth; from whence he may be ſaid to be, being born of a woman; and ſo this branch is called, the fruit of the earth, and ſaid to ſpring out of it, Iſ. iv. 2. Pſ. lxxxv. 11. or it is the ſame as מאליו from himſelf, as Aben Ezra obſerves; and ſo Calvin; for this branch did not grow up thro' any ſowing and planting of man, but without any hand or concern of his in it; Chriſt was born of a virgin, thro' the power of the higheſt, and thro' his own power, as God: and he ſhall build the temple of the Lord; not a material temple, but the ſpiritual temple, the church; called ſo in alluſion to the temple of Jeruſalem, built by Solomon; which was typical of the church, in the builder of it, Solomon, the church being built by Chriſt the antitypical Solomon, the true peace, and peace-maker; in the ſituation of it on a mount, which denotes the ſafety, viſibility, and exalted ſtate of the church; in the matter of it, being made of choice ſtones, and excellent timber, to which believers in Chriſt, who as lively ſtones are built up a ſpiritual houſe, are fitly compared; in the magnificence and ſtatelineſs of it, eſpecially as the church will be in the latter day, when the glorious things ſpoken of it will be fulfilled; and in its ſtrength and firmneſs, as well as in its holineſs: and it is called the temple of the Lord, becauſe it is of his building, where he dwells, and where he is worſhipped; and in the building of it Chriſt has a great concern; he is not only the foundation and corner-ſtone of it, but he is the chief, the maſter-builder of it; he builds it on himſelf, and builds it up by his Spirit, his miniſters, his word and ordinances, making thereby continually an increaſe of it, and additions to it; ſee Matt. xvi. 18.

℣. 13. Even he ſhall build the temple of the Lord, &c.] Which is repeated, as Kimchi obſerves, for confirmation-ſake: and he ſhall bear the glory; that is, of building the temple; and the phraſe denotes, that the glory of it ſhall be upon him, ſhall be hung upon him, as in Iſ. xxii. 24. and ſo ſhall be viſible; that it would be weighty and heavy, he having many crowns on his head, put there by all the ſaints, who every one of them aſcribe glory to him; that it would continue, and not paſs away, like the glory of this world; and that he, and he alone, ſhould bear it; not Joſhua, nor Zerubbabel, nor the miniſters of the word, nor members of churches, nor any other, but himſelf; he, and he alone, ſhall be exalted: and ſhall ſit and rule upon his throne; in heaven, having done his work on earth, where he is at eaſe and reſt, and exerciſes power and authority; he rules over the whole world, and the kings of it in general, and in particular over his ſaints, by his Spirit, word and ordinances, feeding, protecting and defending them: and he ſhall be a prince upon his throne; he is both prieſt and king, and exerciſes both offices at one and the ſame time, and even now in heaven; having offered himſelf as a ſacrifice on earth, by which he has put away ſin for ever, and perfected his people; he is ſet down upon his throne, as a king crowned with glory and honour; and ever lives as a prieſt on the throne, to make interceſſion for them; by appearing in the preſence of God for them; by preſenting his blood, ſacrifice and righteouſneſs to his divine Father; by offering up the prayers and praiſes of his people; by declaring it as his will, that ſuch and ſuch bleſſings be beſtowed upon them; and by applying the benefits of his death unto them: and the counſel of peace ſhall be between them both; not between Joſhua and Zerubbabel, who ſhould agree together, as they did, in the adminiſtration of government belonging to their diſtinct offices; rather between the prieſtly and kingly offices of Chriſt; nor the council of peace between the Father and the Son, concerning the ſalvation of the elect; for that was paſt in eternity; but better the goſpel of peace, called the whole counſel of God, which in conſequence of Chriſt being a prieſt on his throne, was preached to both Jews and Gentiles; which brought the glad tidings of peace and ſalvation by Chriſt to both, and was the means of making peace between them both.

℣. 14. And the crowns ſhall be to Helem, &c.] The ſame with Heldai, ℣. 10: and to Tobijah, and to Jedaiah, and to Hen the ſon of Zephaniah; the ſame with Joſiah, ℣. 10: for a memorial in the temple of the Lord; the crowns, after they had been put upon the head of Joſhua, were taken off, and laid up in ſome part of the temple, of which the Jews make mention in their Miſna[r]; and ſay, there were golden chains fixed to the beams of the porch (of the temple), by which the young prieſts went up, and ſaw the crowns; as it is ſaid, Zech. vi. 14. and the crowns ſhall be to Helem, &c. theſe were laid up for a memorial of the liberality and generoſity of thoſe men, as Jarchi interprets it, who had ſo freely and largely offered towards the building of the temple; or rather, as Alſhech[s], another Jewiſh commentator, obſerves, they were for a memorial of ſomething future, even of the Meſſiah, who was typified by Joſhua, when he had thoſe crowns upon him; for thoſe crowns reſpected the glory of Chriſt's government in future times; and being made both of ſilver and gold, and put upon the head of the high-prieſt Joſhua, denoted the union of the kingly and prieſtly offices in the Meſſiah.

℣. 15. And they that are afar off, ſhall come, &c.] Into the temple, not the material temple; nor is this a prophecy which was fulfilled in Herod, a ſtranger, repairing that, as Kimchi ſuggeſts; but into the ſpiritual temple, the church; and is a prophecy of the calling of the Gentiles, who are ſaid to be afar off, Eph. ii. 12, 13. from God; from having his image on them; from ſubjection to his law; from the knowledge and fear of him; and from communion with him: from Chriſt; from the knowledge of his perſon, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation by him; from love to him, faith in him, and fellowſhip with him; from the Spirit of God, and from the people of God, and from any ſolid hope of eternal life: now theſe being called by grace, and brought to Chriſt under the drawings of the Father's love, ſhall come to his church, and join themſelves to his people: and build in the temple of the Lord; upon the foundation Chriſt; and be uſeful in building up others, either by private converſation, or by public preaching the word; it is not ſaid, they ſhall build the temple of the Lord; that is Chriſt's work; but build in it: and ye ſhall know that the Lord of hoſts hath ſent me unto you; that is, the prophet Zechariah, who was ſent to the Jews to declare theſe things to them; or, as the Targum adds, to propheſy unto you; which they would fully know, and be aſſured of, when theſe things ſhould have their accompliſhment: and this ſhall come to paſs, if ye will diligently obey the voice of the Lord your God; not that the fulfilment of the above predictions depended upon their obedience; but when they ſhould in the latter day obey the goſpel of Chriſt, or, the word of the Lord their God, as the Targum paraphraſes it; then this would come to paſs, that they ſhould know that the prophet had his miſſion from the Lord.

CHAP. VII.

THIS chapter treats concerning the nature and uſe of certain feaſts kept by the Jews, on account of the deſtruction of the temple, and other things; and concerning the meſſage of the former prophets to them, and the effects of it. The occaſion of the former, was an embaſſy ſent by the Jews to the prieſts and prophets, to know whether they ſhould continue the faſt of the fifth month; upon which the prophet was ſent by the Lord unto them. The time of the prophecy is noted, ℣. 1. An account of the embaſſy is given, of the perſons that were ſent, and to whom, and upon what account, ℣. 2, 3. The anſwer of the Lord to it by the prophet, ſhewing the uſefulneſs of faſts to him; and putting them upon hearkening to his voice by the former prophets, when Jeruſalem was in great proſperity, ℣. 4, 5, 6, 7. and then they are exhorted by him, in the miniſtry of the preſent prophet, to acts of righteouſneſs, ſeveral ſpecies of which are mentioned; and which were the ſame they had been exhorted to by the former prophets, but had neglected, and hardened their hearts againſt all exhortations and inſtructions, ℣. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. and were the reaſon of their captivity and deſolation, ℣. 13, 14.

℣. 1. And it came to paſs, in the fourth year of king Darius, &c.] Near two years after the foundation of the temple was laid, Hagg. ii. 10, 18. and near two years before it was finiſhed, Ezra vi. 15. when the work was going forward, and there was a great deal of reaſon to believe it would be completed: that the word of the Lord came unto Zechariah, in the fourth day of the ninth month, even in Chiſleu; which anſwers to part of our October, and part of November.

℣. 2. When they had ſent unto the houſe of God, &c.] It is in the Hebrew text, when he ſent Bethel; which ſome, as Kimchi obſerves, take to be the name of a man that was ſent along with thoſe after-mentioned; but the Targum, and the Septuagint render it, when, or after he had ſent unto Bethel; not the place ſo called in Jacob's time; but Jeruſalem, where the temple or houſe of God was now building; and it may be obſerved, that the words are expreſſed in the ſingular number, when he had ſent [t]; and not as we render them, when they had ſent; and agreeably in ℣. 3. it is ſaid, ſhould I weep, &c. as if theſe meſſengers were ſent by a ſingle perſon, and yet a body of people is meant; and not the captives that remained in Babylon, as moſt interpreters underſtand it; but the Jews that were returned from thence, and were in Judea, as Junius and Tremellius obſerve; for to them the anſwer is returned, and to them does the Lord by the prophet direct his ſpeech throughout the whole chapter. The perſons ſent were Sherezer, and Regem-melech, and their men; who theſe perſons were, is not known; they were no doubt principal men of the people, by whom they were ſent, and the chief of the embaſſy, and had others with them inferior to them: part of their buſineſs at Bethel, or the houſe of God was, to pray before the Lord; that they might be directed aright, and have a proper anſwer returned to the queſtion they came with. The temple at Jeruſalem was the place where men uſed to go up to pray; ſee Luke xviii. 10.

℣. 3. And to ſpeak unto the prieſts which were in the houſe of the Lord of hoſts, &c.] That miniſtred in the ſanctuary, as the Targum explains it, who offered ſacrifices, &c. and who were to be conſulted in matters of religion, Mal. ii. 7: and to the prophets; who were then in being, as Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi: ſaying, ſhould I weep in the fifth month; which is the month Ab, and anſwers to July: now on the ſeventh day of this month, according to 2 Kings xxv. 8, 9. the temple was burnt by the Chaldeans; and according to Jer. lii. 12, 13. it was on the tenth of this month, which day was kept by the Jews as a day of faſting and humiliation, in commemoration of it; and by the Miſnic doctors [u] afterwards was removed, and kept on the ninth day of the ſaid month; but ſeeing the temple was in great forwardneſs of being rebuilt, the queſtion with thoſe Jews was, whether they ſhould continue any longer mourning and faſting on that account: ſeparating myſelf; that is, from eating and drinking, and not taking the lawful pleaſures and recreations of life: as I have done theſe ſo many years? for the ſpace of ſeventy years, as in ℣. 5.

℣. 4. Then came the word of the Lord of hoſts unto me, ſaying.] Upon the ſending of this embaſſy, and upon putting this queſtion.

℣. 5. Speak unto all the people of the land, &c.] Of Judea, who had ſent theſe men on this errand, and whom they perſonated, and in whoſe name they ſpake: and to the prieſts; who were conſulted on this occaſion: ſaying, when ye faſted and mourned in the fifth; on the ſeventh or tenth day of the fifth month Ab, on account of the temple being burnt by Nebuchadnezzar: and ſeventh month; the month Tiſri, which anſwers to September; on the third day of this month a faſt was kept on account of the murder of Gedaliah, Jer. xli. 1. tho' Kimchi ſays, he was ſlain on the firſt day of the month; but becauſe that was a feaſt-day, keeping a day for a faſt on this occaſion was fixed on the day following: even thoſe ſeventy years; of their captivity, during which they kept the above faſts. The Jews ſay [w], there was no faſt of the congregation, or public faſt kept in Babylon, but on the ninth of Ab, or the fifth month only; and if ſo, other faſts here, and in ch. viii. 19. muſt be private ones. Theſe ſeventy years are to be reckoned from the nineteenth of Nebuchadnezzar, when the city was deſtroyed, to the ſecond or fourth of Darius: did ye at all faſt unto me, even unto me? the faſt they kept was not according to the command of God, but an appointment of theirs; nor was it directed to his glory; nor was it any profit or advantage to him; and therefore it was nothing to him whether they faſted or not; ſee Iſ. lviii. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7.

℣. 6. And when ye did eat, and when ye did drink, &c.] Either at common meals, or at their feſtivals: did not ye eat for yourſelves, and drink for yourſelves? merely and only for their own refreſhment and pleaſure, and not for the glory of God; tho' that ought to be the principal end in eating and drinking, 1 Cor. x. 31.

℣. 7. Should ye not hear the words which the Lord hath cried by the former prophets, &c.] As Hoſea, Iſaiah, Jeremiah, and others; ſuggeſting, that it would have been much better for them to have regarded the exhortations and inſtructions, which the Lord ſent them by his ſervants, which would have prevented their captivity; and ſo would have had no occaſion of faſting and mourning: for thoſe prophecies were delivered out when Jeruſalem was inhabited, and in proſperity, and the cities thereof round about her; when Jeruſalem, and the cities about it, were full of people, and enjoyed all the bleſſings of life in great plenty; and which would have continued, had they attended to the exhortations, cautions, and warnings given them: when men inhabited the ſouth of the plain? the land of Judea, as the Miſnic [x] doctors ſay, was divided into three parts; the mountainous part, the plain, and the valley. Jeruſalem was in the mountainous part, and theſe are the other two; and not only thoſe parts of the land which were hilly, and thoſe cities that were encompaſſed with mountains, were in ſafety and proſperity; but thoſe alſo that were in the champaign country, and in the low valleys. The ſouth was that part of the land of Canaan, formerly inhabited by the Amalekites, and which they invaded when David was at Ziklag, Numb. xiii. 29. 1 Sam. xxx. 1. Sometimes it was called Negeb, as here; and ſometimes Daroma, as frequently in the Jewiſh writings; in which Judea is often called the ſouth, with reſpect to Galilee; for they diſtinguiſh between the inhabitants of Galilee, and the inhabitants of the ſouth country; and ſay, a diſciple might intercalate the year for Galilee, but not for the ſouth, i. e. Judea. It reached from Eleutheropolis to the ſouth of the land, 18 or 20 miles: it was diſtinguiſhed by the Jews [y], into upper and nether Daroma, or ſouth country; the upper conſiſted of the hilly part of it; the nether of the plain; and by Jerom [z] mention is made of interior Daroma, by which there ſhould be an exterior one. The plain, or Sephela, was all the champaign country, near to Eleutheropolis, to the north and weſt; and ſo the above writer [a] ſays, it was called in his times: now each of theſe were well inhabited; Daroma, or the ſouthern part; hence it is frequent in Jewiſh writings [b], to read of ſuch a Rabbi of Daroma, or the ſouth, as R. Jacob, R. Simlai, and others; and of the elders of the ſouth [c]; and ſo Jerom ſpeaks of Eremmon, and Duma, large villages in his days, in Daroma or the ſouth; the one ſixteen, the other ſeventeen miles from Eleutheropolis; and of Ether, Jether, and Jethan, one of which was eighteen, and another twenty miles from it [d]; and in 1 Maccab. xii. 38. mention is made of Adida in Sephela, fortified by Simon; and in which alſo were various other places well ſtored with inhabitants. This expreſſes the happy and ſafe ſtate the Jews were in before their captivity, and in which they would have remained, had they hearkened to the words of the Lord.

℣. 8. And the word of the Lord came unto Zechariah, ſaying.] Giving him orders to repeat what the former prophets had ſaid, and to urge the ſame things on the people which they had before rejected; the rejection of which had iſſued in their ruin.

℣. 9. Thus ſpeaketh the Lord of hoſts, ſaying, &c.] The ſame things as he had before; for the things following are ever in force, and always to be attended to, and to be regarded, and preferred before any thing, merely ritual and ceremonial; and eſpecially before the traditions and commandments of men, of which nature the above faſts were: execute true judgment; or, judge judgment [e] of truth; this is addreſſed to the judges of the people, that when any cauſe came before them, between man and man, that they would judge righteouſly, according to the law of God; and, without reſpect of perſons, paſs ſentence as the truth of the caſe required: and ſhew mercy and compaſſion every man to his brother; whether in want of food, raiment, or in whatſoever diſtreſs, whether of body or mind; which is much more acceptable to God, than any legal ſacrifices, or outward abſtinences and humiliations, Hoſ. vi. 6. 1 John iii. 17.

℣. 10. And oppreſs not the widow, nor the fatherleſs, the ſtranger, nor the poor, &c.] Such as have no huſband to provide for them, nor father and mother to care for them, and are in a ſtrange land, where they have no friends or acquaintance, and are poor, and can't help themſelves. Laws of this kind were frequently inculcated among the Jews; ſee Deut. xxiv. 14, 17: and let none of you imagine evil againſt his brother in your heart; thoughts of evil are ſinful, and forbidden by the law of God, as well as actions; which agrees with our Lord's ſenſe of the law, Matt. v. 22, 28. ſee Lev. xix. 17.

℣. 11. But they refuſed to hearken, &c.] That is, the Jews before the captivity refuſed to give heed to the above exhortations, and obey the voice of God in them: and pulled away the ſhoulder; from ſerving the Lord, and ſupporting his intereſt: or, they gave, or preſented a rebellious ſhoulder [f]; a refractory one, that ſlides back, like a backſliding or refractory heifer, that will not admit of the yoke, Hoſ. iv. 16. ſo theſe could not bear the yoke of the law, nor the burden of duty; nor ſuffer the words of exhortation, or receive the admonitions given them: and ſtopped their ears, that they ſhould not hear; like the deaf adder, Pſ. lviii. 4, 5. they would not hear, and pretended they could not; which was an inſtance of contempt to the ſpeakers.

℣. 12. Yea, they made their hearts as an adamant-ſtone, &c.] The word here uſed, is tranſlated a diamond, in Jer. xvii. 1. and it is ſaid to be harder than a flint, Ezek. iii. 9. The Jewiſh writers ſay[g], it is a worm like a barley-corn, ſo ſtrong as to cut the hardeſt ſtones in pieces; Moſes (they ſay) uſed it in hewing the ſtones for the two tables of the law, and in fitting the precious ſtones in the Ephod; and Solomon in cutting the ſtones for the building of the temple; and is ſo hard, that it cannot be broken by iron: and as hard is naturally the heart of man, and which becomes more ſo by ſinning, and obſtinate perſiſting in it, that nothing can remove the hardneſs of it, but the powerful and efficacious grace of God: as hard as the adamant is, it is to be ſoftened by the blood of a goat, as naturaliſts ſay[h]; ſo the blood of Chriſt ſprinkled on the heart, and a ſenſe of forgiveneſs of ſin by it, will ſoften the hardeſt heart: leſt they ſhould hear the law, and the words which the Lord of hoſts hath ſent in his Spirit by the former prophets; the words of reproof, admonition, caution, and exhortation, which Jeremiah, and others, were ſent to deliver to them, under the influence of the Spirit of God: therefore came a great wrath from the Lord of hoſts; which brought the Chaldeans upon them, who carried them captive into Babylon.

℣. 13. Therefore it is come to paſs, that as he cried, &c.] The Lord, by the former prophets called them to repentance and obedience: and they would not hear; his words, nor obey his voice: ſo they cried; when they were beſieged in Jeruſalem, and were carried captive into Babylon: and I would not hear, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; ſo as to deliver them out of the hands of their enemies; ſee Prov. i. 24—28.

This pleaſant land is the land of Canaan, a land flowing with milk and honey; the glory of all lands, for its great fruitfulneſs, and delightful ſituation; and eſpecially for being the ſeat of the divine majeſty, and where his people dwelt, and where his temple was, and he was worſhipped; ſee Ezek. xx. 6. Deut. viii. 7—10.

CHAP. VIII.

THIS chapter contains promiſes of various bleſſings to the people of the Jews; and exhortations to ſeveral duties incumbent on them; and is concluded with a prophecy of the calling of the Gentiles. The cauſe of all the bleſſings promiſed is the love of God to them, ſignified by zeal, or jealouſy for them, ℣. 1, 2. The bleſſings promiſed, are the Lord's return to dwell in Jeruſalem, and the integrity and holineſs of that city, ℣. 3. The long-life of the inhabitants of it, and the plenty of children that ſhould be born in it, ℣. 4, 5. and however wonderful and incredible this might ſeem to ſome, it was not to the Lord, who was determined to bring his people that were in ſeveral diſtant countries to Jeruſalem, and ſettle them there; and renew and re-eſtabliſh his covenant with them, ℣. 6, 7, 8. wherefore the Lord encourages them to go on in rebuilding the temple, ℣. 9. and promiſes them that things would be better with them than in times paſt; that whereas there had been nothing but penury, affliction and diſtreſs, now there ſhould be great affluence and proſperity, ℣. 10, 11, 12. and tho' before they were a curſe among the nations, now they ſhould be a bleſſing; and tho' their fathers were puniſhed, they ſhould be dealt well with, ℣. 13, 14, 15. and then they are exhorted to the diſcharge of ſeveral duties mentioned, to which they are induced by the Lord's hatred of that which is evil, and by his turning their faſts into chearful feaſts, ℣. 16, 17, 18, 19. to which is added a prophecy of the calling and converſion of the Gentiles, which would make for the glory of the Jewiſh church; who are deſcribed by their numbers, being many people, and the inhabitants of many cities; by their aſſociation together, to pray to the Lord, and worſhip him; by their coming up to Jeruſalem for that purpoſe; and by their junction with the Jews, to which they'll be encouraged by having heard that God is with them, ℣. 20, 21, 22. 23.

℣. 1. Again the word of the Lord of hoſts came unto me, ſaying.] The phraſe, unto me, is wanting in the Hebrew text; and is the only place it is wanting in, as the Maſora obſerves; tho' undoubtedly it is to be underſtood; and therefore is rightly ſupplied, as it is by the Targum, with me. Mention being made in the latter part of the preceding chapter of the deſolations of the earth, comfort is here adminiſtred, as Aben Ezra notes.

℣. 2. Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, &c.] This prophecy, according to Kimchi and Ben Melech, reſpects time to come; the days of the Meſſiah, in the war of Gog and Magog, when they ſhall come up againſt Jeruſalem, and the Lord ſhall pour out his great wrath upon them; and it ſeems right to interpret it, not only literally of Jeruſalem, but ſpiritually of the church in goſpel-times: I was jealous for Zion with great jealouſy; the Arabic verſion reads, for Jeruſalem, and for Zion; as in ch. i. 14. ſee the note there: and I was jealous for her with great fury; that is, againſt her enemies, mies; the Babylonians and Chaldeans now, and the antichriſtian powers in goſpel-times. The Targum paraphraſes it, againſt the people that provoked her to jealouſy; the paſt tenſe is put for the future, as Kimchi and Ben Melech obſerve.

℣. 3. Thus ſaith the Lord, I am returned to Zion, &c.] The temple being now building, and almoſt finiſhed, and the worſhip of God reſtored in it. The Targum renders it, I will return to Zion; and it may refer to the time of Chriſt's incarnation, when the Redeemer came to Zion, Iſ. lix. 20. or to the time of the converſion of the Jews in the latter day, of both which it is true; ſee Rom. xi. 26: and will dwell in the midſt of Jeruſalem; or cauſe my Shekinah to dwell there, as the Targum paraphraſes it; which was fulfilled when the word was made fleſh, ϗ εσκηνωσεν, and dwelt or tabernacled among the inhabitants of Judea, and of Jeruſalem, and taught his doctrines, and wrought his miracles, in the midſt of them; and will be alſo, when he ſhall dwell among them by his Spirit and grace in the latter day: and Jeruſalem ſhall be called a city of truth; when Chriſt, who is truth itſelf, was in it, and the truths of the goſpel were preached there by him and his apoſtles, and they were received and profeſſed by many, though deſpiſed by others; and eſpecially in the latter day, when the Jews ſhall generally and cordially embrace Chriſt and his goſpel, and ſhall worſhip God in ſpirit and in truth, and not in that ſhadowy, formal, and hypocritical way they do now; ſee Iſ. i. 26, 27. and eſpecially this will be true of the new Jeruſalem, into which nothing ſhall enter that makes a lie, Rev. xxi. 27: the mountain of the Lord of hoſts; which will be eſtabliſhed upon the top of the mountains, and where the Lord will be ſeen and exalted in his glory, even the Lamb with the hundred and forty-four thouſand with him, Iſ. ii. 2. Rev. xiv. 1: the holy mountain; where the holy word of God will be preached, the holy ordinances adminiſtred, and holineſs of life and converſation will be ſtrictly attended to; yea, holineſs will be upon the bells of the horſes, Zech. xiv. 20.

℣. 4. Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, &c.] Theſe words are uſed at every conſolatory promiſe given, as Kimchi obſerves, for the confirmation of it: there ſhall yet old men and old women dwell in the ſtreets of Jeruſalem; ſignifying that the inhabitants ſhould be very heathful; no ſweeping diſeaſe or calamity ſhould be among them, but they ſhould live to a good old age, as follows: and every man with his ſtaff in his hand for very age; or becauſe of multitude of days[i]; the length of time they ſhould have lived in the world, being worn out, not with diſeaſes, but with old age, and therefore obliged to uſe a ſtaff when they walk the ſtreets for their ſupport; all which is an emblem of the healthfulneſs of the inhabitants of Zion, who have no reaſon to complain of ſickneſs, becauſe their ſins are forgiven them; and of that ſpiritual and eternal life, which they that are written among the living in Jeruſalem do enjoy; who are in underſtanding men, fathers in Chriſt, and are growing up to the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt; ſee Iſ. lxv. 20.

℣. 5. And the ſtreets of the city ſhall be full of boys and girls, &c.] Denoting a large increaſe of inhabitants, in a literal ſenſe; and may ſpiritually ſignify the large numbers of converts, of newborn babes, who are regenerated by the grace and Spirit of God, and are accounted of by the Lord for a generation: playing in the ſtreets thereof; being in health and vigour, and in great ſecurity. The Targum renders it, ſinging or praiſing in the ſpacious places thereof; ſinging the praiſes of God in goſpel-ſtrains; ſaying their Hoſannas to the Son of David; rejoicing in the great ſalvation by Chriſt, and magnifying the grace of God, and ſetting forth the glories of it in pſalms, hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs; ſee Matt. xi. 16, 17. and xxi. 15, 16. In Jeruſalem, literally taken, there were various ſtreets, beſides the ſtreet of the temple, which led to it, Ezra x. 9. mention is made of others in Jewiſh writings, as of the upper ſtreet[k], and of the ſtreet of the butchers, and of the ſtreet of thoſe that dealt in wool[l].

℣. 6. Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, &c.] This is repeated for the ſame end as before; ſee the note on ℣. 4: if it be marvellous in the eyes of the remnant of this people in theſe days; either in the then preſent days and time; and the ſenſe is, if it ſhould ſeem wonderful, incredible, and ſcarcely poſſible to the ſmall number of the Jews in Judea, that all the great and good things before promiſed ſhould be fulfilled; or in the times of the goſpel, when the remnant, according to the election of grace, would wonder at the marvellous loving-kindneſs of the Lord, in doing ſuch great things for his church and people: ſhould it alſo be marvellous in mine eyes, ſaith the Lord of hoſts? no, not as if it was impoſſible to be done; it ſhall be done as marvellous as it may ſeem to be. Aben Ezra underſtands theſe words, not as ſpoken by way of interrogation and admiration, but as an affirmation; that God would do that which was marvellous, and ſuch as he had never done the like, even as follows:

℣. 7. Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, behold, &c.] As being ſomething wonderful, of great importance, and deſerving attention: I will ſave my people from the eaſt country, and from the weſt country; this can't be underſtood of bringing thoſe Jews that remained in Babylon, and other places, to their own land, for Babylon lay north of Judea; ſee ch. vi. 6, 8. and as yet there were no Jews in the weſtern part of the world; but now they are chiefly in the eaſt and weſt, from whence they will be gathered at the time of their general converſion: tho' this may refer to the times of the apoſtles of Chriſt, and to their miniſtry in the ſeveral parts of the world; who went forth, eaſt, weſt, north, and ſouth, and were the means and inſtruments of ſaving the Lord's people, both Jews and Gentiles, whereever they came, from the riſing of the ſun, to the ſetting of the ſame; ſee Mal. i. 11. Matt. viii. 11.

℣. 8. And I will bring them, &c.] To Zion, into the church of God, the goſpel-fold, where Chriſt has engaged to bring his other ſheep, that there may be one fold for Jew and Gentile, Jer. iii. 14. John x. 16: and they ſhall dwell in the midſt of Jeruſalem; the goſpel-church; and be no more foreigners and ſtrangers, but of the houſhold of God, enjoying all the immunities and privileges of the Jeruſalem that is above, the mother of us all: and they ſhall be my people; appear to be ſo by effectual vocation; which makes thoſe manifeſt to be the people of God, to be in the covenant of his grace, who before were not known to be ſo, either by themſelves or others, 1 Pet. ii. 10: and I will be their God, in truth, and in righteouſneſs; according to the covenant of his grace, which will now in a very open manner be truly and faithfully fulfilled; and they, in conſequence of the grace beſtowed on them, will worſhip God in ſincerity and truth, being juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and ſo will have no dependence on their own, for their acceptance with God; ſee Hoſ. ii, 19, 20.

℣. 9. Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, let your hands be ſtrong, &c.] In going on with the building of the temple, which was typical of the church of God, ſince ſo many great and good things were promiſed by the Lord, Hagg. ii. 4: ye that hear in theſe days; ſuch as Zerubbabel the ruler, Joſhua the high-prieſt, and the reſt of the people of the land: theſe words by the mouth of the prophets; that is, theſe prophecies of future good things, which were delivered by Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi; who were the prophets, which were in the day that the foundation of the houſe of the Lord of hoſts was laid; which was in the ſecond year of Darius, on the twenty-fourth day of the ninth month, Hagg. ii. 10. 18: that the temple might be built; in order to the rebuilding of it, the foundation was laid; and from that time it was to continue building, till it was finiſhed [m].

℣. 10. For before theſe days, &c.] That the temple began to be built: there was no hire for men, nor any hire for beaſts; that turned to any account; the wages earned by the one, and with the other, were as if they were put into a bag with holes, did not proſper with them, or do them any ſervice, Hagg. i. 6. and ii. 16: neither was there any peace to him that went out or came in, becauſe of the affliction; there was no ſafety in paſſing to and fro, nor any peaceable enjoyment of what a man had, becauſe of affliction and oppreſſion by the enemy on every ſide, and from every quarter: for I ſet all men, every one againſt his neighbour; expreſſive of the inteſtine diviſions and contentions among themſelves, which are ſaid to be of the Lord, becauſe he permitted them as a chaſtiſement upon them for their ſins.

℣. 11. But now I will not be unto the reſidue of this people, &c.] The remnant brought out of captivity, ſettled in the land, and now rebuilding the temple: as in the former days, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; when they neglected the houſe of the Lord, caring only for their own cieled houſes, Hagg. i. 2—11.

℣. 12. For the ſeed ſhall be proſperous, &c.] Being caſt into the earth, it ſhall ſpring up again, and produce a large increaſe; whereas before, tho' they ſowed much, it came to little, Hagg. i. 6: the vine ſhall give her fruit; be loaded with cluſters, and produce large quantities of wine; whereas before, there was a drought upon the new wine; and where there were wont to be had fifty veſſels out of the preſs, there were but twenty, Hagg. i. 11. and ii. 16: and the ground ſhall give her increaſe; as uſual, meaning of wheat and barley; whereas before there was a drought upon the corn, and where there uſed to be an heap of twenty meaſures, there were but ten, Hagg. i. 11. and ii. 16: and the heavens ſhall give their dew; which makes the earth fruitful; whereas before the heaven over them was ſtayed from dew, and inſtead of it were blaſting, mildew, and hail, Hagg. i. 10. and ii. 17: and I will cauſe the remnant of this people to inherit all theſe things; as a ſymbol of better things inherited by the remnant according to the election of grace; and who have the promiſe both of this life and that to come; and who ſeeking in the firſt place ſpiritual things, have all others added to them, convenient for them.

℣. 13. And it ſhall come to paſs, that as ye were a curſe among the heathen, &c.] Reproached, vilified, and called accurſed by them; ſee Jer. xxiv. 9. as true chriſtians, and real believers in Chriſt, are by the men of this world, 1 Cor. iv. 12, 13: O houſe of Judah, and houſe of Iſrael; both being carried captive at different times, and were typical of the true and ſpiritual Iſrael of God: ſo will I ſave you, and ye ſhall be a bleſſing; be bleſſed in themſelves, with the above bleſſings of plenty and proſperity in outward things; ſee Hagg. ii. 19. and a bleſſing to others, and bleſſed by them; and all thoſe who are ſaved in the Lord with an everlaſting ſalvation, are bleſſed with all ſpiritual bleſſings in him: fear not; neither their enemies, nor the accompliſhment of theſe promiſes: but let your hands be ſtrong; as in ℣. 9.

℣. 14. For thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, &c.] In order to aſſure them of the truth of what he promiſed, he obſerves the fulfilment of what he had threatened, he being as true and faithful in the one, as in the other: as I thought to puniſh you; determined to do it, by ſuffering them to be carried captive: when your fathers provoked me to wrath, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; by their immorality, idolatry, and contempt of his prophets: and I repented not; the Targum adds, of my word; of the reſolution he had taken up in his heart, and of the declaration of it by his prophets, that he would puniſh them; this he did not repent of, revoke, change, and alter, but ſteadily abode by it, and executed it.

℣. 15. So again, &c.] Or ſo I am returned [n], as in ℣. 3: I have thought in theſe days to do well unto Jeruſalem, and to the houſe of Judah; by beſtowing the above-mentioned bleſſings on them; and as Jehovah has thought, ſo it comes to paſs, and as he has purpoſed, ſo it ſtands; whatever he determines ſhall be, as for evil, ſo for good, Iſ. xiv. 24: fear ye not; as in ℣. 13.

℣. 16. Theſe are the things that ye ſhall do, &c.] Which were duties incumbent on them, and which it became them to perform, under a ſenſe of the favours beſtowed on them, to ſhew their gratitude to God, and that they might glorify him: ſpeak ye every man the truth to his neighbour; not uſing deceit, prevarication, and lying, Eph. iv. 25. and it becomes every man under the goſpel-diſpenſation, according to the gift he has received, to ſpeak, publiſh, and declare the truth of the goſpel, to the edification of others: execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates; that is, execute true judgment, as in ch. vii. 9. do juſtice between man and man, without reſpect of perſons; the iſſue of which will be peace between the contending parties: and this was to be done in their gates, becauſe there their courts of judicature were kept.

℣. 17. And let none of you imagine evil in your hearts againſt his neighbour, &c.] See the note on ch. vii. 10. hatred without a cauſe was a governing vice under the ſecond temple, and Jarchi ſays was the cauſe of the deſtruction of it; ſee John xv. 25: and love no falſe oath; whereby the character and property of a fellow-creature are hurt; nor any vain one, which the Jews were addicted to, Matt. v. 34, 35: for all theſe are things that I hate, ſaith the Lord; as being contrary to his nature, and to his law; and is a reaſon why they ſhould be hated and avoided by men.

[m] The true reading of theſe words, according to the accents, is, Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts: let your hands be ſtrong, that hear in thoſe days theſe words: out of the prophets, I ſay, ye have heard that from the day the houſe of the Lord of hoſts ſhall be founded, the temple ſhould be continued to be built. ℣. 18. And the word of the Lord of hoſts came unto me, ſaying.] The word of prophecy, as the Targum paraphraſes it: here begins a new prophecy, reſpecting the abrogation of Jewiſh faſts, and the calling of the Gentiles.

℣. 19. Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, &c.] What follows is a full anſwer to the queſtion in ch. vii. 3: the faſt of the fourth month; the month Tammuz, which anſwers to June: this faſt was kept on the ninth day of the month, on account of the city of Jeruſalem being broken up on that day [o], as it is ſaid, 2 Kings xxv. 3, 4. Jer. xxxix. 2. and lii. 6, 7. tho' Kimchi ſays, this was on the ſeventeenth day of that month, as alſo ſays the Miſna [p]; on which day a faſt was kept likewiſe, for the breaking of the two tables of the law on that day: the reconciliation of this, with the above ſcriptures, is attempted in the Talmud [q], by obſerving, that the ſcripture ſpeaks of the firſt temple, the Miſna of the ſecond temple: and the faſt of the fifth; the month Ab, which anſwers to July, on the tenth of which the city was burnt, Jer. lii. 12, 13. but the faſt on account of it was kept on the ninth day; ſee the note on ch. vii. 3. on which day the Jews ſay, that both the firſt and ſecond temple were deſtroyed, Bither was taken, and the city plowed [r]: and the faſt of the ſeventh; the month Tiſri, which anſwers to September; on the third of this month a faſt was kept on account of the murder of Gedaliah; ſee ch. vii. 5. and on the tenth day of the ſame, was the day of atonement, which was the grand faſt; ſee Acts xxvii. 9: and the faſt of the tenth; the month Tebet, which anſwers to December, on the tenth day of which the city of Jeruſalem was beſieged by Nebuchadnezzar; and this faſt was kept on that account, Jer. lii. 4. now of all theſe faſts the Lord by the prophet ſays, they ſhall be to the houſe of Judah joy and gladneſs, and chearful feaſts; that is, there ſhall be no occaſion for them, but on the contrary, ſuch plenty of good things, both temporal and ſpiritual, ſhall be had, that inſtead of them, rather feſtivals ſhould be kept with the greateſt chearfulneſs, joy and gladneſs. So Maimonides [s] ſays, that all theſe faſts ſhall ceaſe in the times of the Meſſiah, with all others, which will be times of joy and gladneſs. Therefore love the truth and peace; love to ſpeak truth, and execute the judgment of peace, ℣. 16. or expreſs by words and deeds love to Chriſt, who is the way, the truth, and the life; and alſo is our peace, the peace-maker, and peace-giver; and on theſe accounts, as well as on others, is greatly to be loved: likewiſe the goſpel, which is the word of truth, and the goſpel of peace; which contains nothing but truth, and is the miniſtry of reconciliation, and is to be loved on that account; and even peace with men is no farther to be loved and ſought after, than as it is conſiſtent with truth; and theſe being the principal things under the goſpel-diſpenſation, theſe, and not faſts, or any other ceremonial obſervances, are to be attended to.

℣. 20. Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, it ſhall yet come to paſs, &c.] This is another thing that ſhall certainly be accompliſhed: that there ſhall come people, and the inhabitants of many cities; in the Gentile world; they ſhall come and hear the word, believe in Chriſt, and join together in a goſpel-church-ſtate; as they did at Antioch, Theſſalonica, Corinth, and many other places: Ben Melech ſays, this ſhall be in the days of the Meſſiah; and ſo it has been in the days of the true Meſſiah Jeſus, and will be again in the latter day.

℣. 21. And the inhabitants of one city ſhall go to another, &c.] Which ſhows their concern for the ſpiritual welfare of each other; their zeal for the honour and glory of God, and their readineſs to attend divine worſhip: ſaying, let us go ſpeedily to pray before the Lord; for pardoning, juſtifying, and ſanctifying grace; which ſhows their ſenſe of need of theſe things, and that they are only to be had of the Lord; and that their caſe required haſte, and would admit of no delay: and to ſeek the Lord of hoſts; by prayer and ſupplication, as before: the Chaldee paraphraſe is, to ſeek doctrine from the Lord of hoſts; to learn the truths of his goſpel; to know his will, and be informed of the right way of worſhipping him, as well as to ſeek to Chriſt for life and ſalvation: I will go alſo; that is, this ſhall ſay to that, as the Targum ſupplies it; one ſhall ſay to another, and expreſs himſelf in ſuch language, by way of example and encouragement.

℣. 22. Yea, many people, and ſtrong nations, &c.] Or mighty kingdoms, as the Targum renders it; even ſuch have embraced the goſpel, and profeſſed the chriſtian religion; of which there has been abundant proof, ſince the downfal of paganiſm under Conſtantine: ſhall come to ſeek the Lord of hoſts in Jeruſalem; that is, ſhall attend the public worſhip of God in the church: and to pray before the Lord; join in public prayer, and other ordinances of the goſpel. This phraſe, which is uſed alſo in the preceding verſe, ſignifies that the Lord, and he only, is the object of prayer; it is not to be made to a creature, or to an idol made with hands, they had been uſed to pray to before, but to the one only living and true God, Father, Son, and Spirit; and that this is to be done as in the preſence of God, who is omniſcient, who knows all perſons and their caſes, and what are their ends and views in their petitions to him, and whether theſe come from a true heart and unfeigned lips; for all things are naked and open unto him, with whom we have to do; that under the goſpel-diſpenſation eſpecially, men may come into the preſence of God with great freedom and liberty, and pour out their ſouls before him, and with great boldneſs and confidence, thro' the blood of Chriſt being ſhed, and a new and living way opened by it, in which they may come and aſk in faith whatever they want; tho' this ſhould always be performed with reverence and godly fear, and with all humility and ſubmiſſion to the will of God: and tho' it may take in all ſorts of prayer, and wherever, and by whomſoever performed, either mental or vocal, in the cloſet or in the family, which is always to be done in like manner before God; yet it ſeems chiefly to deſign ſocial and public prayer; which being put up to God in the ℣. 23. Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, &c.] For the further confirmation and illuſtration of this prophecy: in thoſe days it ſhall come to paſs; this ſhall be done in the times of the preaching of the goſpel by Chriſt and his apoſtles: that ten men ſhall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even ſhall take hold of the ſkirt of him that is a Jew; which may be underſtood either of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; who was a Jew by nation, the Jews were his own people, and Judea his nation; by deſcent, he ſpringing from the tribe of Judah, and the family of David; by religion, being made under the Jewiſh law; by his habit and dreſs, by which, as well as by his language, the woman of Samaria knew he was a Jew, John iv. 9. and very probably he wore the fringe the Jews did on the border of his garment, Matt. ix. 20. Mark vi. 56. and which the Jewiſh doctors think is here meant [t] by the ſkirt; but this may intend in a ſpiritual ſenſe, the ſkirt being put for the whole garment, Ezek. xvi. 8. the robe of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, which ſenſible ſinners take hold of by faith, and put it on as their juſtifying righteouſneſs: and ten men out of all nations being ſaid to do it, and this number ſignifying many, Lev. xxvi. 26. 1 Sam. i. 8. may denote, that the number of them that believe in Chriſt for righteouſneſs, and are juſtified by it, are many, Iſ. liii. 11. tho' they are but few when compared with others; and that as God has choſen, Chriſt has redeemed, ſo the Spirit calls ſome out of all nations; and God is the God of the Gentiles, as well as of the Jews, ſince the one are juſtified by him, as well as the other, Rom. iii. 29, 30. or this may be underſtood of any of the apoſtles of Chriſt, who were all Jews; and eſpecially the apoſtle Paul, who was the apoſtle of the Gentiles; who were ſent into all the world to preach the goſpel to the Gentiles, by which means they came to hear it; and many of them out of every nation laid hold on the ſkirts of theſe men; believed and embraced the doctrines they preached; were greatly affected towards them; gave up themſelves to them; conſorted with them; accompanied them, and cleaved unto them; did not care to part with them, as children, that lay hold on their parents ſkirts, won't leave them, but go with them where they go, as follows: ſaying, we will go with you; either with Chriſt, reſolving to follow him whitherſoever he goes; to hold to him the head; to abide by his truths and ordinances; to walk on in his ways, whatever they ſuffer for his name's ſake: or with his miniſters and people, determining to go along and join with them in all religious exerciſes; ſee Ruth i. 16: for we have heard that God is with you; with Chriſt, as he always was; in the council and covenant of grace before time, and at the beginning of time to his incarnation; and during his ſtate of humiliation, and in his ſufferings and death; and now in his ſtate of exaltation; hence his name Ithiel, God with me, Prov. xxx. 1. ſee John i. 1. and viii. 29. and xvi. 32. or with his miniſters and people, which he has promiſed to be unto the end of the world; and this the Gentiles heard and underſtood, by the power that went along with their miniſtry, to the converſion of multitudes of ſinners; and by the miracles which they wrought, for the confirmation of the doctrines they delivered.

CHAP. IX.

THIS chapter treats of the converſion of the Gentiles, before ſpoken of in general, now particularly named; of the coming of Chriſt into the world, and the advantages of it to his church; of the preaching of the goſpel by the apoſtles, and of their protection, encouragement, and ſucceſs. The Gentiles converted, are firſt the Syrians that dwelt in Hadrach, Damaſcus, and Hamath, the Lord's eye being upon them, ℣. 1. next the Phœnicians, the inhabitants of Tyre and Zidon, who had a vain opinion of their wiſdom, and truſted in their riches, ℣. 2, 3, 4. and then the Philiſtines, the inhabitants of Aſhkelon, Gaza, Ekron, and Aſhdod, guilty of pride, murder, idolatry, and other abominations, ℣. 5, 6, 7. when the church and people of God ſhould be ſafely protected, ℣. 8. to whom, for their joy and comfort, is given forth a prophecy concerning the coming of the Meſſiah; who is deſcribed by his character as a king, juſt, having ſalvation, lowly, and riding on an aſs; by the peaceableneſs of his kingdom; by the ſeveral offices he executes; the prophetic office, ſpeaking peace to the heathen; the kingly office, his dominion being very large; and his prieſtly office, in the effuſion of his blood, by which the covenant is confirmed, his people delivered out of diſtreſs, and encouraged to flee to him as their ſtrong-hold, where they find plenty and protection, ℣. 9, 10, 11, 12. next the apoſtles are repreſented as military men, accoutred with the bow and the ſword of the mighty, ℣. 13. whoſe ſucceſs is owing to the Lord's appearance over them, and the efficacy of his grace and Spirit attending the word, ℣. 14. who are protected and encouraged in it by the Lord, and honoured on account of it, ℣. 15, 16. and the chapter is concluded with an exclamation, wondring at the grace and glory of Chriſt, and expreſſing the ſatisfying proviſions of his houſe, ℣. 17.

℣. 1. The burden of the word of the Lord, &c.] A prophecy, as in Prov. xxxi. 1. which is ſometimes of things ſorrowful and diſtreſſing, as the deſtruction of people, as in Iſ. xiii. 1. and xv. 1. and xvii. 1. and xix. 1. and xxi. 1, 11. and ſometimes of things joyful, as in Zech. xii. 1. and here it contains good news to the church of Chriſt, ℣. 9, &c. and is called a burden, becauſe the word of the Lord is often ſo to carnal men; ſee Jer. xxiii. 33—39. the words may be rendered, a declaration or a publication of the word of the Lord [u]; it ſignifies a publiſhing of it, or bringing it forth; and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, a revelation of the word of the Lord; a carrying of it about: which was made in the land of Hadrach; this is either the name of a man; of ſome king, as Aben Ezra

Ezra obſerves; and ſome Jewiſh writers [w] ſay, the king Meſſiah, who is חד ſharp to the nations of the world, and רך tender to the Iſraelites: or rather the name of a place, and may deſign Syria, to which Damaſcus belonged; ſee Iſ. vii. 8. or ſome place near it: ſays R. Joſe [x], "I am of Damaſcus, and "I call heaven and earth to witneſs that there is "a place there, the name of which is Hadrach." Hillerus [y] takes it to be the ſame with Cæleſyria, or hollow Syria, a vale which lay between Libanus and Antilibanus, and goes by many names; the ſame that is called Hoba, Gen. xiv. 15. the plain of Aven, and the houſe of Eden, Amos i. 5. and here Hadrach; and thinks it had its name from Hadar, a ſon of Iſhmael, Gen. xxv. 15. and obſerves what is ſaid, Gen. xxv. 18. that the Iſhmaelites dwelt from Havilah, which is to the ſouth of Paleſtine, unto Shur, a town ſituated over-againſt Egypt, as you go to Aſſyria; that is, to the Agra of Ptolemy in Suſiana. The Targum renders it, "in "the land of the ſouth." There was a city in Cæleſyria, called Adra by Ptolemy [z]; which, as Jerom ſays [a], was diſtant from Boſtra twenty-five miles; ſince called the city of Bernard de Stampis; where were chriſtian churches in the fourth and fifth centuries, whoſe biſhops were preſent at councils held in thoſe times [b]; and according to this prophecy, here the word of the Lord was to be publiſhed; and it may have reſpect to the converſion of the inhabitants of it in future times: tho' ſome take it to be not the proper name of a place, but an appellative, and render it, the land about, or the land about thee [c]; that is, about Judea; the nations round about it, particularly Syria, Phœnicia, and Paleſtine. And Damaſcus ſhall be the reſt thereof; either of the Lord himſelf; his glorious Shekinah ſhall reſt there, as Kimchi interprets it; and ſo the Targum paraphraſes it, "and "Damaſcus ſhall be converted, that it may be of "the houſe of his Shekinah;" ſee Iſ. xi. 10. or of the word of the Lord, which ſhould be declared and publiſhed there, as it was by the apoſtle Paul, who was converted near it, and preached in it, Acts ix. 3, 19, 20. or of Hadrach, or the adjacent country: unleſs it is to be underſtood of the burden of the Lord reſting on it, or of the taking of this city in the times of Alexander the Great; which, with the deſtruction of the cities after-mentioned, ſome make a type or ſymbol of the abolition of paganiſm in the Roman empire; but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt. When the eyes of man, as of all the tribes of Iſrael, ſhall be towards the Lord; or when the eyes of men ſhall be to the Lord, and to all the tribes of Iſrael; ſo Kimchi and Ben Melech; that is, as they interpret it, when the eyes of all men ſhall be to the Lord, and not to their idols; and alſo to all the tribes of Iſrael, to go along with them in their ways; as it is ſaid above, we will go with you: or they ſhall look to the Lord, even as the tribes of Iſrael themſelves do; and which is true of ſinners when converted, whether Jews or Gentiles; and particularly was true of that great man the apoſtle Paul, who was converted near Damaſcus, when the eyes of his underſtanding being enlightened, and he ſeeing the inſufficiency of all other objects, looked to the Lord alone for pardon, righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation; even as all true Iſraelites do, who are after the Spirit, and not after the fleſh. Tho' ſome underſtand theſe words of the eyes of the Lord being upon every man, as well as upon the tribes of Iſrael; upon wicked men to puniſh them, as upon his people to protect and defend them: and to this ſenſe the Targum inclines, paraphraſing the words thus, "for before "the Lord are manifeſt the works of the children "of men, and he is well pleaſed with all the tribes "of Iſrael."

℣. 2. And Hamath alſo ſhall border thereby, &c.] By the land of Hadrach, or by Damaſcus; and that it was near Damaſcus, is clear from Iſ. x. 9. Jer. xlix. 23. it is called Hamath the Great in Amos vi. 2. and according to Jerom [d], is the ſame with Antioch, which he ſays was ſo called by ſome; and the Targum of Jonathan ben Uzziel on Numb. xiii. 21. renders Hamath by Antioch: and if ſo, here was the Lord's reſt likewiſe; here the goſpel was preached, and many converted, and a church, conſiſting of Jews and Gentiles, was formed; and here the diſciples were firſt called chriſtians, Acts xi. 26. Tyrus and Zidon; theſe were famous cities of Phœnicia; upon the borders of theſe our Lord himſelf was, Matt. xv. 21. of the converſion of the inhabitants of theſe places the pſalmiſt propheſies, Pſ. xlv. 12. here likewiſe the Lord had his reſting place; we read of the diſciples here, Acts xxi. 3, 4. and xxvii. 3: tho' it be very wiſe; particularly Tyre, which was famous for wiſdom, Ezek. xxviii. 3, 4. which the Lord confounded by the preaching of the goſpel, and by the fooliſhneſs of that ſaved them that believe. Kimchi refers this to the times of the Meſſiah; his note is, ſhe ſhall not truſt in her wiſdom in the time of the Meſſiah: ſo Ben Melech.

℣. 3. And Tyrus did build herſelf a ſtrong hold, &c.] Tyre was built upon a rock, and was a ſtrong fortreſs itſelf, from whence it had its name; and beſides its natural defence, it had a wall 150 feet high, and its breadth was anſwerable to its height [e]; but yet, as it could not defend itſelf againſt Alexander the Great, who took it; ſo neither againſt the goſpel of Chriſt, which found its way into it, and was mighty to pull down ſtrong-holds in a ſpiritual ſenſe: and heaped up ſilver as the duſt, and fine gold as the mire of the ſtreets; the riches of theſe cities, eſpecially Tyre, are often made mention of; they were famous for their wealth, being places of great trade and merchandiſe; ſee Iſ. xxiii. 2, 8. Ezek. xxvii. 3. and xxviii. 4, 5. all which were to be holineſs to the Lord, and for the ſufficient feeding and durable clothing of them that dwell before him, Iſ. xxiii. 18. his miniſters.

℣. 4. Behold the Lord will caſt her out, &c.] Or inherit her [f], or them, as the Septuagint render the words; when being converted, ſhe would become the Lord's inheritance and poſſeſſion, and her riches ſhould be devoted to his ſervice: and he will ſmite her power in the ſea; for Tyre was ſituated in the ſea, at the entry of it, and was ſtrong in it, Ezek. xxvi. 17. and xxvii. 3. Kimchi interprets this of her humiliation and ſubjection in the days of the Meſſiah; and in a ſpiritual ſenſe it has been verified in ſuch who have been ſpoiled of their carnal ſtrength, in which they truſted, and have laid down their weapons, and have ſubmitted to the ſceptre of Chriſt: and ſhe ſhall be devoured with fire; with the ſpirit of judgment, and of burning, which purges and removes the filth of ſin; and with the fire of the word, which burns up and conſumes its luſts; and with the flames of divine love, which make ſouls as a whole burnt-offering to the Lord. This was literally accompliſhed in the burning of Tyre by Alexander [g], which injected fear and dread in cities near it, as follow:

℣. 5. Aſhkelon ſhall ſee it, and fear, &c.] That is, as Kimchi explains it, when Aſhkelon ſhall ſee that Tyre humbles herſelf and ſubmits, ſhe ſhall humble herſelf and ſubmit alſo: and the ſenſe may be, that the inhabitants of Aſhkelon, ſeeing that Tyre, with all her wiſdom and ſtrong reaſoning, could not ſtand before the power of the goſpel, but ſubmitted and embraced the chriſtian religion, were induced, through the efficacy of divine grace, to do the ſame; and certain it is, that this place became chriſtian; we read [h] of a biſhop of Aſhkelon in the ſynod of Nice, and of other biſhops of this place in after councils: it belonged to Paleſtine, and was one of the five lordſhips of the Philiſtines, Joſh. xiii. 3. Gaza alſo ſhall ſee it, and be very ſorrowful; this was a city of Paleſtine, near to Aſhkelon; they are mentioned together, Judg. i. 18. the Gentile inhabitants of this place, when they ſaw the progreſs the goſpel made in Tyre, Zidon, and Aſhkelon, were grieved at it, but many among them ſubmitted to it: very likely Philip the evangeliſt firſt preached the goſpel here; ſee Acts viii. 26. there was a chriſtian biſhop of this place in the Nicene council, and others in after ones [i]. And Ekron for her expectation ſhall be aſhamed; this was alſo one of the five lordſhips of the Philiſtines, Joſh. xiii. 3. 1 Sam. vi. 16, 17. which being near to Tyre, had its dependence on that, expecting it could never be taken; but when they ſaw that it was taken by Alexander, it was aſhamed of its vain expectation, hope and confidence: and ſo the inhabitants of this place, when the goſpel came to it, were aſhamed of the houſe of their confidence, as the Targum paraphraſes the words; the confidence they had in their idols, and in the works of their own hands; and were alſo aſhamed becauſe of their iniquities, as the Arabic verſion renders them; being convinced of them, and humbled for them, and betaking themſelves to Chriſt for ſalvation from them. It is probable, that Philip preached the goſpel here, ſeeing it was not far from Azotus or Aſhdod next mentioned, where Philip is heard of after the baptiſm of the eunuch: and if Ekron is the ſame with Cæſarea, that was called Strato's tower, as ſay the Jews [k]; and which alſo Jerom [l] obſerves, ſome ſay are the ſame; it is certain that Philip was there, Acts viii. 40. there were ſeveral chriſtian biſhops of this place in after times [m]. And the king ſhall periſh from Gaza; ſome underſtand this of Batis, who was governor of Gaza, when it was taken by Alexander; who was faſtened to a chariot, and dragged about the city, as Curtius [n] relates; but this man was not a king, but governor of the city under one: I rather think the idol Marnes, which ſignifies the lord of man, and was worſhipped in this place, is here meant; which when it became chriſtian was deſtroyed, and a chriſtian church built in the room of it, as is reported by Jerom [o]. And Aſhkelon ſhall not be inhabited; by heathens, but by chriſtians.

℣. 6. And a baſtard ſhall dwell in Aſhdod, &c.] Some [p] take Mamzer, the word for baſtard, to be the name of a people that ſhould dwell in Aſhdod; this is the ſame place with Azotus, Acts viii. 40. and was alſo one of the five lordſhips of the Philiſtines, Judg. xiii. 3. 1 Sam. vi. 17. ſome, by the baſtard here, underſtand Alexander the Great, who gave out that he was not the ſon of Philip, but of Jupiter Ammon: others think Jonathan the Maccabee is intended, who took this place, and burnt it with fire, and the temple of Dagon in it, 1 Mac. x. 83, 84. and tho' he was not a baſtard, yet was a ſtranger to the Philiſtines; in which ſenſe the Jewiſh commentators, Jarchi and Kimchi, interpret the word, and underſtand it of the Iſraelites who ſhould dwell in this place; even thoſe, as Aben Ezra ſays, who were abject, mean, and deſpiſed among the Iſraelites; which would be a great mortification to the proud Philiſtines, as is ſuggeſted in the next clauſe: and to this ſenſe the Targum paraphraſes the words, "and the houſe of Iſrael "ſhall dwell in Aſhdod, who ſhall be in it as "ſtrangers:" but it is beſt to underſtand this of Iſraelites indeed, of true chriſtians, who are accounted ſpurious, not the children of God, but aliens and ſtrangers, the filth of the world, and the offſcouring of all things; who ſhould dwell here when the goſpel was preached in it, as doubtleſs it was by Philip, Acts viii. 40. and ſo the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic verſions render the words, and ſtrangers ſhall dwell in Aſhdod; men of another religion, and deſpiſed and not owned even by their relations, as if they were baſtards. And I will cut off the pride of the Philiſtines; by Alexander, and by the Jews in the times of the Maccabees, bringing them into ſubjection, which their haughty ſpirits could not well bear; or thro' the abolition of their old heatheniſh religion, in which they prided themſelves. It may be obſerved, that all along the converſion of theſe ſeveral people to chriſtianity, is expreſſed in terms which ſeem to ſignify the deſtruction of them; and that partly becauſe, in the literal ſenſe, reference is had to the conqueſt of them by Alexander, by which means the Greek language obtained in Syria and Phœnicia, into which, a little after, the bible was tranſlated, which paved the way for the bringing of theſe people to the knowledge of Chriſt, through the preaching of the goſpel; and partly becauſe paganiſm was aboliſhed in theſe places, when chriſtianity prevailed.

℣. 7. And I will take away his blood out of his mouth, &c.] The Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic verſions read, their blood; not the blood of the baſtard, but of the Philiſtines. The Targum is, I will deſtroy them that eat blood; the meaning may be, that they ſhall no more thirſt after blood, nor drink it; nor breathe out threatenings and ſlaughter againſt the ſaints, or perſecute the people of God: or that they ſhould no more offer the blood of their ſacrifices upon the altars to their deities, or eat things ſacrificed to them: and his abominations from between his teeth; their idols and idolatries they were tenacious of, as a man is of his food, or of any thing that is grateful to him; it may deſign things ſacrificed to idols eat by them: but he that remaineth, even he ſhall be for our God; the Targum paraphraſes it, "and the proſelytes that re-"main among them, they alſo ſhall be added to "the people of our God:" Jarchi interprets it of the ſynagogues and ſchools in the captivity of Edom or Rome; but Aben Ezra's note is much better, that there ſhall be none remaining of the Philiſtines, but only ſuch who ſerve the bleſſed God openly: but the true ſenſe is, that here ſhould be a remnant, according to the election of grace, who ſhould evidently appear to be the Lord's people, by their converſion and effectual vocation: and he ſhall be as a governor in Judah; the Targum is, "they ſhall "be as the princes of the houſe of Judah;" that is, as the heads of the families in that tribe; ſee Mic. v. 2. compared with Matt. ii. 6. all true chriſtians are as princes, yea, they are kings and prieſts unto God; and ſome of them are כאלף, as a guide, teacher, and inſtructor of others; who go before them, and inſtruct them in the doctrines of the goſpel, as paſtors and miniſters of the word: and Ekron as a Jebuſite; that is, the inhabitant of Ekron, that ſhall be converted to Chriſt, ſhall be as an inhabitant of Jeruſalem, which was called Jebus, 1 Chron. xi. 4. ſhall have a dwelling in the church, the city of God, and enjoy all the privileges and immunities of it. Kimchi ſays this refers to the times of the Meſſiah, when he ſuppoſes the Ekronites will be tributary to the Iſraelites, as the Jebuſites were in the days of David. The Targum is, "and Ekron ſhall be filled with the houſe "of Iſrael, as Jeruſalem." The Syriac verſion is, and Ekron ſhall be as Hebron.

℣. 8. And I will encamp about my houſe, becauſe of the army, &c.] Of profane and wicked men, perſecutors and hereticks, who roſe up in great numbers in the firſt ages of chriſtianity againſt the church, the houſe of God, where he dwells, which conſiſted of perſons called from among the Gentiles as before; in order to protect and defend them from that great company which oppoſed them, the Lord encamped about them, partly by his angels, Pſ. xxxiv. 7. and partly by his miniſters, ſet for the defence of the goſpel; but chiefly by his own power and preſence, who is as a fire round about them. The Targum is, "and I will cauſe my "glorious Shekinah to dwell in the houſe of my "ſanctuary, and the ſtrength of the arm of my "power ſhall be as a wall of fire round about it." Becauſe of him that paſſed by, and becauſe of him that returneth; either that his people might paſs and repaſs with ſafety, who attended the worſhip and ſervice of his houſe; or becauſe of ſatan and wicked men, who go to and fro, ſeeking to do all the miſchief they can to the ſaints of the Moſt High. This may in a literal ſenſe reſpect the care of God over the Jewiſh nation, his church and people, in the times of Alexander, who paſſed to and fro without diſtreſſing them; or in the times of the Lagidæ and Seleucidæ, the kings of Egypt and Syria, during whoſe commotions, and their paſſing to and fro againſt each other, and againſt them, were ſtill continued a kingdom. And no oppreſſor ſhall paſs thro' them any more; or exactor [q]; ſatiſfaction for the ſins of God's people being exacted, required, and demanded of Chriſt their ſurety, it has been given; wherefore no exactor ſhall paſs thro' them, or over them, to require it of them; not the law, for they are freed by Chriſt from the exaction, curſe, and condemnation of it; not juſtice, for that is fully ſatiſfied, and infinitely well pleaſed with the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; nor ſatan, the accuſer of the brethren, requiring puniſhment to be inflicted, which tho' he may do it, will be of no avail againſt them; nor the Jewiſh tutors and governors, who exacted of the people obedience, not only to the law of Moſes, but to the traditions of the elders; ſince Chriſt has redeemed his from this vain converſation, chriſtians are entirely free from that yoke of bondage. This ſhows, that this prophecy is not to be literally underſtood, ſince it is certain, that after the delivery of it, there were oppreſſors or exactors among the Jews in a literal ſenſe: Antiochus and others oppreſſed them before the birth of Chriſt; they paid tribute to the Romans in his time; he was born at the time of a Roman tax; and after his death, Titus Veſpaſian deſtroyed their nation, and city and temple: or if it is, any more muſt be underſtood of a long time as it were, before they were utterly oppreſſed. For now I have ſeen with mine eyes; theſe are either the words of God the Father, looking with pleaſure upon his church and people, about whom he encamps; and upon the ſatisfaction his Son has given to the divine juſtice for their ſins, whereby they are free from all exactions and oppreſſions: or of the prophet Zechariah, as Aben Ezra thinks, who ſaw with his eyes, in the viſions of the night, all that is contained in this prophecy: and now inaſmuch as all this predicted was to be fulfilled in, or near, or about the times of Chriſt, therefore next follows a glorious prophecy of his coming.

℣. 9. Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; ſhout, O daughter of Jeruſalem, &c.] By whom are meant, not the inhabitants of Jeruſalem in common; nor the children in it, that ſaid Hoſannahs to the Son of David; but the church of God, and true believers in Chriſt, who are called upon to rejoice and ſhout; not merely in an external way, by ſhewing marks of outward joy, but in a ſpiritual manner, for which there was good reaſon, as follows: behold thy king cometh unto thee; Aben Ezra ſays, that interpreters are divided about the ſenſe of this prophecy; ſome ſay it is Meſſiah the Son of David; and others, Meſſiah the Son of Joſeph. R. Moſes, the prieſt, he obſerves, thinks that Nehemiah the Tirſhathite is meant; and he himſelf is of opinion, that Judas Maccabæus is intended; but Jarchi affirms, that it is impoſſible to interpret it of any other than the king Meſſiah; and this is the ſenſe of many of their writers, both ancient and modern. It is applied to him in the Talmud; they ſay [r], he that ſees an aſs in his dream, let him look for ſalvation, as it is ſaid, behold thy king cometh unto thee, riding on an aſs. R. Alexander relates, that R. Joſhua ben Levi oppoſed theſe two phraſes to each other, in its time, and I will haſten it, Iſ. lx. 22. and gave this as the ſenſe to reconcile them: if they (the Iſraelites) are worthy, i. e. of the coming of the Meſſiah, I will haſten it; if they are not worthy, it ſhall be in its time: and that he alſo put theſe ſcriptures together, and compared them to that ſcripture, behold one, like the Son of man, came with the clouds of heaven, Dan. vii. 13. and alſo what is written, poor, and riding on an aſs; if they they are worthy, he'll come with the clouds of heaven; if they are not worthy, he'll come poor and riding on an aſs [s]. In an ancient book [t] of theirs, at leaſt ſo reckoned, it is ſaid the king Meſſiah ſhall prevail over them all (the nations of the world, and the Iſraelites) as it is ſaid, poor and riding on an aſs, and on a colt, the foal of an aſs: and in ſeveral other places of that work, and other treatiſes in it [u], the text is applied to the Meſſiah; as it likewiſe is in their ancient Midraſhes or expoſitions. In one [w] it is obſerved, "the Rabbins ſay "an ox; this is the anointed for war, as it is ſaid, "his glory is like the firſtling of his bullock, Deut. "xxxiii. 17. an aſs; this is the king Meſſiah, as "it is ſaid, poor and riding on an aſs:" and again [x], on theſe words, binding his foal to the vine, and his aſs's colt unto the choice vine, Gen. xlix. 11. this remark is made; this ſhall be, when that ſhall come to paſs which is written of him, poor and riding on an aſs. And in another [y] of their expoſitions, the two Redeemers, Moſes and the Meſſiah, are compared together; and among the ſeveral things in which they agree, this is one; as it is ſaid of the former Redeemer, and Moſes took his wife and his ſons, and ſet them on an aſs, Exod. iv. 20. ſo it is ſaid of the latter Redeemer (the Meſſiah) poor and riding on an aſs. And thus it is interpreted by many of their more modern writers [z]. This is to be underſtood of Chriſt's coming, not merely to Jeruſalem, when he rode on an aſs, after-mentioned; but of his coming in the fleſh, when he came to Zion, and for her good; and which was wonderful, and therefore a behold is prefixed to it; and is matter of great joy, which ſhe is called to ſhew, becauſe of the birth of him who is her Saviour; and becauſe of the good things that come by him; and becauſe of his appearing as a king, and her king; for as he was propheſied of as ſuch, as ſuch he came, tho' his kingdom was not of this world; and as Zion's king, being placed there by his Father, and to which he has a right by virtue of redemption, and is owned as ſuch by his people in effectual vocation, and to whom all the following characters belong. He is juſt; not only eſſentially righteous as God, but juſt and upright in the whole courſe of his life as man; and faithful in the adminiſtration of his office as Mediator; and the author and bringer in of righteouſneſs to his people: having ſalvation; the ſalvation of his church and people; which he not only had at heart, but had it to execute, being appointed to that ſervice by his Father, and having agreed unto it as the ſurety of his people, and was the buſineſs he was coming into the world to do, here propheſied of; yea, he is called ſalvation itſelf, as in a parallel text, Iſ. lxii. 11. the purpoſe of it was purpoſed in him; God reſolved to ſave his people by him, and by him only; he never intended to ſave any but in and thro' him; and the thing was not only conſulted with him, but the ſcheme of it was drawn in him; God was in Chriſt reconciling the world unto himſelf. The covenant of grace, in which ſalvation is a principal article, was made with him; and he, as the ſurety of that covenant, undertook it; and in the fulneſs of time being ſent, came to effect it; for which he was abundantly qualified, being God and man in one perſon, and ſo had ſomething to offer as a ſacrifice for ſatisfaction to law and juſtice, in order to obtain it; and could put a ſufficient virtue therein to anſwer the end, being the mighty God; and having as Mediator a commiſſion from his divine Father, he is become by his obedience, ſufferings and death, the author of eternal ſalvation to his people; and in him ſalvation is, and in no other; and in vain it is to expect it from any other, or in any other way, than by him, Acts iv. 12. Jer. iii. 23. Some render the word ſaved [a]; as he was by his divine Father, when he was raiſed from the dead, and not ſuffered to ſee corruption; ſee Heb. v. 7. others, ſaving himſelf [b]; when he raiſed himſelf from the dead, and thereby declared himſelf to be the Son of God; and when he brought ſalvation to his body, the church, which is himſelf, Iſ. lxiii. 5. Lowly; meek, and humble, as he appeared to be in the aſſumption of human nature; in his carriage to ſinners, converſation with them, and reception of them; in his miniſtrations to his diſciples; and in not ſeeking his own, but his Father's glory. Or poor [c]; as Jeſus the Meſſiah was; born of poor parents, had not where to lay his head, and was miniſtred unto by others; ſee 2 Cor. viii. 9. And riding upon an aſs, and upon a colt, the foal of an aſs; which was fulfilled in Jeſus of Nazareth, Matt. xxi. 4, 5. not that he rode upon them both, but on the foal only; for ſo it ſhould be rendered, upon an aſs, that is, upon a colt, the foal of an aſs [d]. The Jews have a fable, that the aſs Abraham ſaddled, when he went to ſacrifice his ſon Iſaac, was the foal of the aſs that was created on the evening of the ſabbath, that is, at the creation; and that the ſame Moſes ſet his wife and ſons upon, when he came out of Midian; and the ſame aſs, they ſay, Meſſiah the ſon of David was to ride upon at his coming [e]; but one of ſuch a prodigious age ſurely could not be called a colt, or a foal; however, this fable ſhews the conviction of their minds, that this is a prophecy of the Meſſiah, and that they expected the Meſſiah to ride upon an aſs, according to it, as our Meſſiah Jeſus did. And the Greeks have another fable, which perhaps took its riſe from this prophecy, that when Antiochus entered the temple at Jeruſalem, he found in it an image of a man in wood, with a long beard, riding on an aſs [f]. And a like falſhood is told by Tacitus [g], that the Jews conſecrated the effigies of an aſs in the inmoſt part of the temple; becauſe a flock of wild aſſes, as he pretends, directed them to fountains of water, when in the wilderneſs, and ready to die with thirſt; and yet he himſelf afterwards ſays, the Jews have no images, neither in their cities, nor in their temple: and from hence it may be aroſe the calumny caſt upon the primitive chriſtians, who were ſometimes confounded with the Jews, that they worſhipped an aſs's head; and which is refuted by Tertullian[h].

℣. 10. And I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim, &c.] That is, the military one; ſignifying that wars ſhall ceaſe, Pſ. xlvi. 9: and the horſe from Jeruſalem; the warlike one; ſee Mic. v. 10. Ephraim deſigns the ten tribes, and Jeruſalem ſtands for the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin; and the ſenſe is, that theſe ſhall be one in the days of the Meſſiah, as Kimchi obſerves; and that all inſtruments of war ſhall be removed from them, and there ſhall be an entire peace between them; ſee Iſ. xi. 13. Ezek. xxxvii. 16, 19: and the battel-bow ſhall be cut off; another inſtrument of war. The Targum paraphraſes it, "I will break the " ſtrength of thoſe that make war, the armies of " the people;" all this does not deſign ſo much the outward peace that ſhould be in the world at the birth of Chriſt, as the ſpiritual peace of his kingdom; and that, as it is not of this world, ſo neither is it ſpread, ſupported, and defended by carnal weapons; and alſo the peaceableneſs and ſafety of his ſubjects, and the deſtruction of their enemies: and he ſhall ſpeak peace unto the heathen; not only the church of Chriſt, gathered out of the Jews, ſhould enjoy great ſpiritual peace, proſperity and ſafety; but the Gentiles alſo ſhould ſhare in it, to whom Chriſt went, and preached peace; not in his own perſon, being the miniſter of the circumciſion; but by his apoſtles, who had the miniſtration of reconciliation committed to them; and being ſent forth by Chriſt, went every where preaching peace by him, who is Lord of all, unto all nations; ſee Eph. ii. 17: and his dominion ſhall be from ſea even to ſea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth; according to Aben Ezra, from the Red-ſea to the ſea of the Philiſtines, and from the river Euphrates to the ends of the earth: or, as Kimchi cites him, from the ſouth-ſea, called the ſea of Edom, to the north-ſea, which is the ſea of the ocean; from the river that goes out from Eden, which is at the beginning of the eaſt, unto the ends of the earth, which is the end of the weſt: or, as the Targum paraphraſes it, "from " the ſea to the weſt, and from Euphrates to the " ends of the earth." The phraſes are expreſſive of the extenſiveneſs of Chriſt's dominion, thro' the preaching of the goſpel, both in Judea, and in the Gentile world, before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; and eſpecially in the latter day; ſee Pſ. lxxii. 8. This and the preceding clauſe are allowed to belong to the Meſſiah, by a modern Jewiſh writer[i].

℣. 11. As for thee alſo, &c.] Theſe words are not ſpoken to Chriſt, for את thee is of the feminine gender; but the congregation of Iſrael, as Kimchi obſerves; or the church of God: nor are they the words of Chriſt to her; he is the perſon before ſpoken of; but of God the Father, who having given out prophecies concerning the coming of Chriſt, and the peaceableneſs and extenſiveneſs of his kingdom, declares to the church the benefits that ſhe and thoſe that belonged to her ſhould receive, by the incarnation, ſufferings, and death of Chriſt: by the blood of thy covenant; not of the covenant of works, nor of circumciſion, nor of that that was made at Sinai, as the Jewiſh writers interpret it: all which were a yoke of bondage; but of the covenant of grace, namely the blood of Jeſus, which is a conſiderable article in that covenant; that by which it is ratified and confirmed, and thro' which all the bleſſings of it come, as redemption, peace, pardon, juſtification, and admiſſion into heaven: and this covenant is called the church's covenant, becauſe it is made with her in Chriſt, her covenant-head, in whom ſhe was conſidered; and it was made on her account, and ſhe has an intereſt in it, and in all things contained therein. God is her covenant-God and Father; Chriſt her ſurety, Mediator, Redeemer, and Saviour, and the covenant itſelf unto her; and all things in it, the bleſſings of grace, and promiſes of good things are hers: and tho' the covenant at Sinai is not the covenant here intended, that being a covenant which gendered to bondage, and under which men were held as convicted and condemned malefactors; and ſo cannot be that, the blood of which is the cauſe of a releaſe from priſon, and of bringing into a ſtate of liberty; yet the alluſion is unto it, which was a typical covenant; and the blood of the ſacrifices then ſprinkled on the people, is called the blood of the covenant, Exod. xxiv. 8. It was not unuſual with the heathens at making covenants, to uſe blood, even human blood: it was a cuſtom with them, to draw it from each other, and drink it, at leaſt lick, and taſte of it, as particularly with the Medes and Lydians[k]; and was reckoned by them the moſt ſacred bond of covenants; and ſuch covenants with the Carmeni and Scythians were accounted the chief covenants of friendſhip, and their mutual blood they uſed the greateſt bond of concord[l]; and the ſureſt pledge of keeping faith, and that it would abide[m]: but the blood of Chriſt ſhed, is a far greater proof, as well as cement of love, concord, and friendſhip; and a much firmer bond of the covenant of grace; and a ſurer pledge of the continuance of it, and of its being faithfully performed; and which, having the nature of a will or teſtament, becomes of force thro' the death of him the teſtator; ſee Dan. ix. 27. Heb. ix. 14, 15, 16. and xiii. 20: I have ſent forth thy priſoners; that is, the church's priſoners; not priſoners to her, or in her; for the church of Chriſt is no priſon; nor are thoſe that have a name, and a place in her, priſoners; they walk at large, and walk at liberty; are fellow-citizens with the ſaints; are Chriſt's free-men, and are poſſeſſed of many privileges and immunities: but theſe deſign ſuch perſons as are in a ſecret relation to her, and yet being in a ſtate of nature, are priſoners; and ſo are ſuch as are not members of any viſible church; nor as yet converted perſons and believers in Chriſt, who have an open relation to the inviſible church; but they are ſuch who ſecretly belong to the general aſſembly, and church of the firſt-born, written in heaven, whoſe names are in the Lamb's book of life; or are choſen in Chriſt, and alſo redeemed by his blood: but being as yet in a ſtate of unregeneracy, are priſoners to ſin; are under the power, dominion, and guilt of it; and being tranſgreſſors of the law, are arraigned by it as guilty perſons; are convicted and condemned, and ſhut up in it, and held under it; and are alſo the captives of ſatan, being led as ſuch by him, at his will; and thus they are priſoners, tho' there is a ſecret connexion between the church and them: and ſooner or later, by virtue of the blood of that covenant, which ſhe and they have an intereſt in, they are brought out of the pit wherein is no water; which is expreſſive of the ſtate and condition men are in by ſin, and whilſt in unregeneracy; they are in mire and clay, in a moſt filthy and famiſhing condition, in a very wretched and uncomfortable one; as in a dark and loneſome dungeon, and where no refreſhment can be had; where there are no true peace, joy, and comfort. The alluſion is to the cuſtom of the eaſtern countries, and ſtill continues, who, in the night-time put their ſlaves into a well or pit, and there ſhut them up till the morning, when they are let out for buſineſs: now, from this ſtate of captivity and bondage to ſin, ſatan, and the law, and from all the miſeries of ſuch a ſtate are the Lord's people, and who belong to Zion, the general aſſembly and church of the firſt-born, delivered by virtue of the blood of Chriſt, ſhed for the redemption of them; in conſequence of which 'tis ſaid to theſe priſoners of ſin, ſatan, and the law, go forth; theſe are made ſenſible of their wretched condition, and are called and drawn out of it, and delivered from it, and brought into a ſtate of liberty. Ben Melech interprets this pit of the captivity of the Jews.

℣. 12. Turn ye to the ſtrong hold, ye priſoners of hope, &c.] That hope for redemption, as the Targum paraphraſes it; not for redemption from the Babyloniſh captivity, at the end of ſeventy years, which was now over; but for redemption and ſalvation by Chriſt; for not the people of the Jews, who ſtaid in Babylon, can be meant; for as they were at liberty to go from thence by the edict of Cyrus, they can't be ſaid to be priſoners, much leſs priſoners hoping for deliverance, when they had, or might have it; but rather the Jews, who were come out of Babylon, as out of a pit, wherein was no water; out of an uncomfortable ſtate and condition, and yet in their own land were encompaſſed with many ſtraits and difficulties, thro' the oppoſition they met with from many, who diſcouraged and hindered them in their work; but were hoping they ſhould ſurmount all their difficulties, and get out of their troubles: tho' it ſeems better to underſtand it of ſuch, who about the time of the Meſſiah's coming, were looking for the conſolation and redemption of Iſrael, and hoping, and waiting for it; as good old Simeon, and others, who were priſoners under the former diſpenſation; but expecting deliverance and ſalvation by the Meſſiah. It may be applied to all ſenſible ſinners, in every age and period of time; all men are concluded in ſin, ſhut up under the law, and led captive by ſatan; but ſome are not ſenſible of their impriſoned ſtate, nor deſirous of being out of it, nor have any hope concerning it; others groan under their bondage, long for deliverance, and are hoping for it: they hope that Chriſt will receive them, and ſave them; that he will pardon their ſins; that the Spirit of God has begun a good work in them, and will perform it; and that they ſhall enjoy eternal glory and happineſs; for all which there is good ground to hope: as that Chriſt will receive ſinners ſenſible of their loſt, periſhing condition, into his arms of mercy; ſince he is the good Samaritan, the merciful high-prieſt, the compaſſionate Saviour; who, in his love and pity, has redeemed the ſons of men; and ſeeing he died for ſinners, even the chief of them; and therefore it need not be doubted, that he will receive them; and beſides, he has made kind invitations to them to come to him, and has promiſed he will in no wiſe reject them; and has actually received ſinners, and moſt kindly and tenderly embraced them: as alſo that they ſhall be ſaved by him; ſince complete ſalvation is wrought out by him, and that for ſuch as are loſt, and even the moſt abandoned of ſinners; and which is freely to be had, not according to the works of men, or as they ſhall deſerve; but purely thro' the free grace of God, and his abundant mercy in Chriſt: as well as that their ſins ſhall be pardoned of God for his ſake, ſeeing there is forgiveneſs with God; he has promiſed, proclaimed, and publiſhed it; the blood of Chriſt has been ſhed for it; and he is exalted as a Saviour to give it, and has ordered it to be preached in his name; and ſome of the greateſt of ſinners have had their ſins forgiven them: likewiſe ſuch have good ground to hope, that the work of God is begun in them; tho' it may be at preſent but a day of ſmall things with them; there being ſome light let into them, as to their ſtate, and the way of ſalvation by Chriſt; ſome fear of God, and love to him, to Chriſt, his people, truths, ordinances, ways, and worſhip; ſin is become odious, and Chriſt precious: and good reaſon they have to hope, and even to be confident, that this good work will be performed in them, tho' at times they have many fears about it; ſince it is in ſuch good hands, and the glory of all the divine perſons is concerned in it; wherefore they may moſt ſafely go on to hope for eternal life, which God has promiſed, before the world began, is in Chriſt, and in his hands to give; and is the free gift of God thro' him, whoſe righteouſneſs entitles to it, and whoſe grace makes meet for it; wherefore having the one, they may truly hope for the other; for grace is a well of living water, ſpringing up unto eternal life: ſuch as theſe may well be called priſoners of hope; partakers of that grace, and as it were ſhut up in it, and under the influence, and in the exerciſe of it; which is a gift of grace; is of the operation of the Spirit of God, thro' whoſe power it is exerciſed; is founded on the perſon, blood, and righteouſneſs of Chriſt; is encouraged by the promiſes of the goſpel; and is increaſed thro' the diſcoveries of the love of God; and deals with things unſeen and future: and thoſe who have the leaſt ſhare of it, as theſe deſcribed are ſuppoſed to have, are here encouraged to turn to the ſtrong hold; by which is meant, not Judea, nor Jeruſalem, nor the temple in it, nor the church of God; but rather the bleſſed God, as Kimchi interprets it; and indeed a divine perſon is intended, even the Meſſiah, who is a ſtrong hold for refuge, and was typified by the cities of refuge, whither the man-ſlayer fled, and was ſafe; to which the alluſion may well be thought to be, ſince one of the names of the cities of refuge was Bezer, which ſignifies a fortreſs, or ſtrong-hold; and comes from the ſame root as the word here uſed: and ſuch who are enabled and encouraged to flee to Chriſt for refuge, are ſafe from vindictive juſtice, which is fully ſatisfied by the blood, righteouſneſs, and atoning ſacrifice of Chriſt; and from the law, its curſes, and condemnation; Chriſt being made a curſe for them, and having had its ſentence of condemnation executed on him; and from all their ſins, and the ſad effects of them; from the guilt of them, and obligation to puniſhment by them; from ſatan, tan, and all enemies, in whoſe power it is not to deſtroy them, being out of their reach; and from the wrath of God, everlaſting deſtruction, and the ſecond death: and ſuch find Chriſt to be a ſtrong habitation, or a dwelling place; where they may, and do dwell ſafely, pleaſantly, and comfortably, enjoying plenty of all good things; their bread in this munition of rocks being given to them, and their water ſure unto them; and to turn to it, is to quit all other dependencies, and to believe in Chriſt, and truſt all with him: even to day do I declare that I will render double unto thee; which is ſaid, either to the church, or rather to her priſoners, to each of them, to encourage them to flee to Chriſt, and truſt in him; ſeeing by the preſent declaration of grace made, they may expect to enjoy all fulneſs of grace, plenty of bleſſings, temporal and ſpiritual; the promiſe of this life, and that which is to come; all ſpiritual bleſſings in Chriſt, grace here, and glory hereafter. So double ſignifies any thing large, ſufficient, plentiful, Iſ. xl. 2. and lxi. 7. particularly the Spirit, and his grace; and double comfort from him, inſtead of diſtreſs and trouble before experienced: according to the accents, the word for double, is to be connected with the word declare, and be read, this day, at this preſent time, however diſtreſſing it may be, or you in it be attended with uncomfortable and diſtreſſed circumſtances, I declare double [n]; double grace, as ſome ſupply it, an abundance of it; which I will render unto thee; to every one of the priſoners of hope, who turn to the ſtrong-hold Chriſt, in whom they will find a fulneſs of all grace, and ſhall receive out of it grace for grace; double grace, a large meaſure of it; double to what was received under the former diſpenſation. Cocceius renders it, another declarer, diſcoverer, or ſhewer forth, do I render unto thee [o]; meaning the Spirit of God, the other comforter from the Father: Chriſt was the firſt declarer, who declared his Father, his nature, perfections, purpoſes, mind and will, John i. 18. the Holy Spirit is the ſecond, or the other declarer, who was to bring all things to remembrance ſpoken by Chriſt, and to lead into all truth, and ſhew things to come, and to take of the things of Chriſt, and ſhew them to his people, John xiv. 16. 26. and xvi. 13, 14. and who was ſent after Chriſt, was received up into heaven, as his ſecond, his deputy, to officiate in his room and ſtead; as this word is uſed ſometimes of the ſecond prieſt, or ſagan, or deputy of the high-prieſt, Jer. lii. 24.

ỳ. 13. When I have bent Judah for me, &c.] By whom are meant the apoſtles, who were Jews, and whoſe miniſtrations were made uſe of as a bow with arrows, to ſtrike the hearts of men, and bring them into ſubjection to Chriſt: they were a bow of the Lord's bending and preparing, and which abode in ſtrength, being made ſtrong and effectual thro' the hands of the mighty God of Jacob: filled the bow with Ephraim; or rather, filled Ephraim with the bow [p]; filled his hand with it; meaning, that ſome out of the ten tribes, as were the apoſtles, ſhould be employed in drawing the bow of the goſpel, and ſhooting its arrows, the doctrines of it; which are comparable to them for ſwiftneſs, ſuddenneſs and ſecreſy, and for their piercing and penetrating nature: and raiſed up thy ſons, O Zion, againſt thy ſons, O Greece; that is, perſons of the land of Judea, as ſuch the apoſtles were, and who belonged to Zion the church of Chriſt; who were raiſed up, qualified, and ſent forth by him into the Gentile world, with weapons of warfare, not carnal, but ſpiritual; againſt the Gentiles in general, and the wiſe men of Greece, as at Athens, in particular, to confound ſome, and to conquer others, and bring them to the obedience of Chriſt. Some underſtand this of the Maccabees raiſed up againſt Antiochus, and the Greeks that poſſeſſed the kingdom of Syria: and made thee as the ſword of a mighty man; that is, made the goſpel in the hands of the church, and of her ſons, as a ſword in the hand of a mighty man, by whom execution is done with it; this is the ſword of the Spirit, even the word of God; and is ſharp and cutting, and is the power of God unto ſalvation; as it is girt upon the thigh, and is in the hands of Chriſt the moſt mighty; and as it is accompanied with the Spirit of God, and of power.

ỳ. 14. And the Lord ſhall be ſeen over them, &c.] His apoſtles and miniſters: or, ſhall appear to them [q]; and be ſeen by them, as he was in the days of his fleſh; they ſaw his perſon, his miracles, his ſorrows, and ſufferings; they ſaw him after his reſurrection, and ſome have ſeen him ſince his aſcenſion, with the eyes of their bodies, as well as with the eyes of their underſtandings; and ſo were fit to be witneſſes of him: or, the Lord ſhall appear over them, or upon them [r]; he was ſeen over, and above them, when he aſcended up to heaven; and upon them, by the deſcent of his Spirit on them at the day of Pentecoſt; and in other miraculous gifts beſtowed upon them: or, the Lord ſhall appear unto, or for them [s]; by giving ſtrength of body, and fortitude of mind; by protecting and preſerving them, and by ſucceeding their labours: and his arrow ſhall go forth as the lightning; meaning the goſpel, and the ſwift progreſs of it, as well as the light it communicates, and the glory that goes along with it, and the efficacy of it: and the Lord God ſhall blow the trumpet; of the goſpel, ſo called, in alluſion to the jubilee-trumpet, which proclaimed liberty to ſervants, and reſtoration of inheritances: or to the trumpets made for the congregation of Iſrael, to gather them together, and to expreſs their joy at feaſts: or to the trumpet uſed to proclaim war, and as an alarm for it; and this was blown by the Lord himſelf in perſon when here on earth, and by his miniſters in his name: and ſhall go with whirlwinds of the ſouth; that is, the Lord in the miniſtration of the goſpel ſhall go forth with the efficacy and energy of the Spirit: the Spirit is compared to wind, becauſe he works in a ſovereign way where he liſteth, and oftentimes imperceptibly, and ever powerfully; and to the ſouth wind, becauſe that brings warmth, ſerenity, and calmneſs, produces rain, and makes fruitful; and he it is which makes the goſpel efficacious; ſee Cant. iv. 16. John iii. 8.

ỳ. 15. The Lord of hoſts ſhall defend them, &c.] Againſt all their enemies; againſt ſatan, and his temptations, and all the oppoſition made by him; againſt the world, and all the rage and reproach of men; this was remarkably verified in the apoſtles, who were preſerved by the Lord amidſt a thouſand ſnares and dangers; and who was able to do it, being Jehovah, and the Lord of armies in heaven, and in earth; he was as a ſhield unto them, as the word [t] uſed ſignifies; and to which he is often compared in ſcripture. The Targum renders it, "the Lord of hoſts ſhall have mercy "on them;" he encompaſſed them about with his favour as with a ſhield: and they ſhall devour; or eat [u]; ſpiritual food; Chriſt the bread of life, whoſe fleſh is meat indeed, and who is lived upon by faith; the bleſſings and promiſes of the everlaſting covenant, of which the meek eat, and are ſatisfied; the goſpel and the truths of it, the words of faith and good doctrine, with which faithful miniſters are nouriſhed; all which is neceſſary, that they may be ſtrengthened, and qualified to feed others with knowledge and underſtanding: and ſubdue with ſling-ſtones; ſuch who are ſtout-hearted, and far from righteouſneſs; who become by their miniſtry penitent and humble, and ſubject to Chriſt, his goſpel and ordinances, even by the means of preaching of the word, which ſeem very unpromiſing and unlikely; being to men fooliſhneſs, and like the ſcrip and ſling David took with him, and by which he brought Goliah down to the ground: and they ſhall drink; of the love of God, which, for its antiquity, purity, and refreſhing nature, is like the beſt wine; and of the blood of Chriſt, which is drink indeed; and of the grace of the Spirit, which revives, ſtrengthens, and extinguiſhes thirſt: and make a noiſe as thro' wine; being full of joy and thankfulneſs for their ſpiritual food and drink; and ſo warm, zealous, and fervent in Spirit, ſerving the Lord; free and open in their miniſtrations, loudly proclaiming the grace of God; bold, and fearleſs of danger: and they ſhall be filled like bowls; that were full of the blood of the offerings, as Jarchi and Kimchi explain it; or rather as the Targum, that were full of fine flour and oil; they having their ſouls filled with good things, as the firſt of the above writers obſerves; a comfortable view of intereſt in the love of God; a large meaſure of ſpiritual joy, and a fulneſs of the gifts and graces of the Spirit, qualifying them for their work: and as the corners of the altar; the Targum is, "they ſhall ſhine as the blood that "ſhines upon the wall of the altar;" at the corners of which it was poured out; ſignifying, that they ſhould be as full of the Spirit, and ſpiritual things, as the altar was of blood: ſo the Jewiſh writers ſay, when the prieſt took the blood in the bowl, he ſprinkled of it two ſprinklings upon the two corners of the altar, on the diameter of it, and below upon the north-eaſt horn, and upon the ſouth-weſt horn; and he ordered it ſo, as to ſprinkle the blood on the horn, that it might ſurround the corners, and that the blood might be on the four ſides of the altar round about [w].

℣. 16. And the Lord their God ſhall ſave them in that day, &c.] In the times of the goſpel, and the diſpenſation of it; meaning either the apoſtles before ſaid to be protected and defended, ℣. 15. or rather the perſons converted, conquered, and ſubdued by them, who are not killed, but ſaved by the Lord their God, their glorious Redeemer, from ſin, ſatan, the law, wrath to come, and out of the hands of all their enemies: as the flock of his people; they being his ſpecial people, by choice, by covenant-grace, and by redemption; and like to a flock of ſheep; to ſheep, for harmleſſneſs, meekneſs, weakneſs, and timorouſneſs, for being prone to go aſtray, and for their being clean, profitable, and ſociable; and to a flock, being a diſtinct ſociety of men, and but one, and a ſmall one too, tho' a flock beautiful and holy: for they ſhall be as the ſtones of a crown; like the gems and precious ſtones, which are on a king's crown; they being Chriſt's jewels, highly valued and eſteemed of by him; and comparable to them, for their richneſs thro' the grace of God, and for their purity, brightneſs, and glory in themſelves, as owing to that; and for the glory they give to Chriſt, and for the durableneſs of them. The Targum renders it, the ſtones of the Ephod; they may be tranſlated, the ſtones of ſeparation [x]; ſet for boundaries to diſtinguiſh places; thoſe being ſeparated by the grace of God in effectual calling, from the reſt of mankind, and laid as lively ſtones upon the foundation Chriſt: lifted up as an enſign upon his land; the land of Judea, as trophies of victorious grace; as monuments of praiſe and thankfulneſs; and as means of encouraging others to ſeek to Chriſt, and believe in him. The alluſion ſeems to be to trophies erected on account of victories obtained by valiant men, to perpetuate their memories; which were ſometimes of braſs, and ſometimes of marble, with inſcriptions and titles on them, that they might endure for ever; and where ſufficiency of ſuch materials could not be got, a vaſt heap of ſtones uſed to be laid together; or large trees, and their branches cut down, and the ſpoils of the enemy laid upon them; and theſe were raiſed up as trophies to perpetuate the memory of mighty men to poſterity. So Germanicus having conquered the nations between the Rhine and the Elbe, piled up a vaſt heap of marble ſtones, and dedicated them to Tiberius [y]; and Fabius Æmilianus having, with an army not amounting to 30,000 men, defeated an army of the Gauls near the river Rhoſne, conſiſting of 200,000 men, ſet up a trophy of white ſtone, as well as built two temples, one to Mars, and another to Hercules [z]; and Domitius Ænobarbus, and Fabius Maximus, having got the victory over the Allobroges, the people of Savoy and Piedmont, erected ſtone towers on the ſpot, and fixed trophies adorned with hoſtile arms, which before had been unuſual [a]; and it was an ancient cuſtom with the Goths and Swedes, in the camps and fields where battels were fought, to fix ſtones like the Egyptian pyramids, on which they engraved, in a brief manner, the famous exploits performed, thereby to perpetuate the memory of the names and actions of great men [b]; and theſe pillars of ſtone ſet up for trophies, the chapiters of them might be made in the form of crowns, and may be here referred to; and ſo ſome render the words to this ſenſe [c].

℣. 17. For how great is his goodneſs? &c.] Not of the land of Judea, as Kimchi; nor of the doctrine of the law, as the Targum; nor of the people of the Jews, but of the Meſſiah: and deſigns not his eſſential, nor his providential goodneſs; but his goodneſs as Mediator, which he has in his heart, and has ſhown unto his people, in being their ſurety, and becoming their Saviour; in aſſuming their nature; bearing their ſins, and obeying, and ſuffering in their room and ſtead: and alſo that which he has in his hands for them, and communicates to them; his fulneſs of grace; all thoſe ſpiritual bleſſings that are in him; the large meaſures of grace given at converſion; and the numerous inſtances of his goodneſs afterwards; yea, it includes glory, as well as grace: and how great is his beauty? not as God, nor as man, but as Mediator; as beheld in the covenant and promiſes; in the goſpel, and in the truths, and in the ordinances of it: corn ſhall make the young men chearful, and new wine the maids; by young men are meant, the ſame as in 1 John ii. 14. believers in Chriſt, who are lively, warm, and zealous for Chriſt, his cauſe and intereſt; who are active, diligent, and induſtrious in the diſcharge of duty; and are ſtrong in Chriſt, and in his grace; and particularly in the grace of faith, and quit themſelves like men: and by maids or virgins are meant the ſame; ſo called becauſe of their chaſte adherence to Chriſt; for their beauty, comelineſs, and attire; and for their purity of divine worſhip and converſation: and the goſpel is intended by corn and new wine; which is compared to corn, in oppoſition to the chaff of human doctrines; and becauſe it contains Chriſt the bread of life, and is nouriſhing and comfortable: and to new wine, not becauſe it is a novel doctrine, for it is the everlaſting goſpel ordained before the world was; but becauſe under the goſpel-diſpenſation, to which this prophecy refers; it is newly, and more clearly revealed; ſee the note on ℣. 15. The effect of which is, that it makes ſaints chearful, fills them with joy and ſpiritual mirth; for it is a joyful ſound: or, ſhall make fruitful [d]; it cauſes them to grow and increaſe, and makes them fruitful in every good word and work: or, ſhall make them ſpeak eloquently [e]; or cauſe them to put forth the fruit of their lips, in giving thanks to God for the abundance of grace beſtowed upon them: or, ſhall make them ſing [f], as others; in pſalms, hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs. This new wine may be interpreted of the gifts and graces beſtowed in great plenty on the day of Pentecoſt, both on ſons and daughters, on ſervants and hand-maids, whereby they propheſied, and ſaw viſions, Acts ii. 16, 17. ſee Eph. v. 18, 19.

CHAP. X.

THIS chapter is a prophecy of the converſion of the Jews in the latter day, when the fulneſs of the Gentiles is brought in, ſpoken of in the preceding chapter. It begins with an exhortation to aſk rain of the Lord; denounces wrath upon his enemies; and conſiſts of various promiſes to his people. The exhortation to aſk rain, is in ℣. 1. to which encouragement is given from its being of the Lord, from his willingneſs to grant it, and from the fruitfulneſs occaſioned by it. The vanity of idols, and idolaters, who can't give it, is expoſed; and the diſtreſs and confuſion they were thrown into, is obſerved, ℣. 2. The anger of the Lord againſt the principal of them, is declared; and his gracious viſitation of the people of the Jews, whom he will honour and glorify, is taken notice of, ℣. 3. from whom the Meſſiah ſprung, than which a greater glory can't be enjoyed, ℣. 4. and then follow various promiſes relating to them; as of victory over their enemies, thro' the preſence of the Lord with them, ℣. 5. of ſtrength and ſalvation to them, as owing to his free grace and mercy, ℣. 6. of inward ſpiritual joy in them and theirs, ℣. 7. of their effectual vocation and ſpiritual increaſe, in conſequence of redeeming grace, ℣. 8. of their having a name, and a place in goſpel-churches, where they'll remember the Lord, and live with their children, being converted, ℣. 9. which converſion of theirs is repreſented in terms alluding to their deliverance from Egypt and Babylon, ℣. 10, 11. and the chapter is concluded with a promiſe of ſpiritual ſtrength, ſo that they ſhall continue in their profeſſion of faith in Chriſt, and perſevere therein to the end, ℣. 12.

℣. 1. Aſk ye of the Lord rain, in the time of the latter rain, &c.] There was the former and the latter rain, of which ſee Hoſ. vi. 3. Joel ii. 23. The former rain was in autumn, a little before, or about ſeed-time; the latter was in the ſpring, and a little before harveſt, which is here referred to. So Heſiod [g] calls thoſe rains the autumnal and vernal rains; and between theſe two rains there was ſeldom any more. Jerom ſays [h], that he never ſaw in the eaſtern countries, eſpecially in Judea, any rain at the end of the month of June, or in July; and now at Aleppo, a little more northerly, for three or four months after May, they have ſcarce ſo much as any dew upon the ground, as Pemble on the place obſerves. So Dr. Shaw ſays [i], little or no rain falls in this climate (of Algiers and Tunis), during the ſummer ſeaſon; and in moſt parts of the Sahara, particularly in the Jercede, they have ſeldom any rain at all. It was likewiſe the ſame in the holy land, Prov. xxvi. 1. where rain is accounted an unuſual thing in harveſt, 2 Sam. xxi. 10. where it is alſo mentioned, from harveſt till rain dropped on them, i. e. their rainy ſeaſon fell out, as in Barbary, in the autumnal and winter months—The firſt rains (he obſerves) fall here ſome years in September, in others a month later; after which the Arabs break up their ground, in order to ſow wheat, and plant beans: this commonly falls out about the middle of October—If the latter rains fall as uſual in the middle of April, (in the holy land we find they were a month ſooner, Joel ii. 23.) the crop is reckoned ſecure; the harveſt coming on in the latter end of May, or in the beginning of June, according to the heat and quality of the preceding ſeaſons: wherefore, ſince there was ſo little rain fell in theſe countries, and particularly in Judea; if theſe former and latter rains failed, a ſcarcity followed; for, for want of the former rain, the earth was hard, and not eaſily plowed up; and for want of the latter, the corn withered away in the blade, and did not ear, at leaſt did not produce ears plump and good; ſo that theſe rains were great temporal bleſſings, and to be aſked for, as they were by the Jews, when they were wanted; and for which they appointed faſts [k]; and were emblems of ſpiritual bleſſings here deſigned; for rain here is not to be literally underſtood, but myſtically and ſpiritually; and deſigns either the love and favour of God, and the comfortable diſcoveries of it; ſee Prov. xvi. 15. and xix. 12. which may be compared to rain in its original; it is from above, from on high, it comes from heaven; it is not owing to any thing in man, but to the will of God; and is diſtinguiſhing, as rain falls on one city, and not on another; in its objects, undeſerving perſons, as rain is ſent on the juſt and unjuſt; in its manner of communication, it tarries not for the will and works of men; it comes at times in great abundance, and the diſcoveries of it are to be aſked for; in its effects, it ſoftens and melts the heart into evangelical repentance; it cools and extinguiſhes the flaming wrath of a fiery law in the conſcience; it refreſhes and revives the drooping ſpirit, and makes the barren ſoul fruitful: or the bleſſings of grace in general may be meant; theſe are from above, depend on the will of God; are to be ſought after, and aſked for; are free grace-gifts; are given largely and plentifully, and make fruitful: or the coming of Chriſt in the fleſh in particular is intended; ſee Hoſ. vi. 3. who came down from heaven; is a free gift of God to men, was ſought after, and greatly deſired, and to be deſired by the Old Teſtament-ſaints, and very grateful to ſuch when he came. This may alſo be applied to his ſpiritual coming in his power and kingdom in the latter day, which is to be earneſtly wiſhed and prayed for, Pſ. lxxii. 7, 8, 16. or elſe the goſpel may be deſigned; ſee Deut. xxxii. 2. Iſ. lv. 10, 11. this is of God, and from above; comes and falls upon the ſons of men, according to divine direction; ſoftens hard hearts, when it becomes effectual; comforts the ſouls of God's people; is a bleſſing to be deſired, and aſked for; and will be enjoyed in great plenty in the latter day: ſo the Lord ſhall make bright clouds; by which may be meant, the miniſters of the goſpel, who are of God's making, and not man's: theſe may be compared to clouds, for their number, eſpecially as they will be in the latter day; and for their moving to and fro, to communicate ſpiritual knowledge: and to bright ones, ſuch as from whence lightning ſprings, thunder-clouds, full of water; (the ſame word is uſed for lightning, Job xxxviii. 25.) becauſe full of goſpel-truths, and becauſe of that clear light they diffuſe to others: and give them ſhowers of rain; productive under a divine influence of large converſions among Jews and Gentiles: to every one graſs in the field; on whom theſe ſhowers fall with efficacy, and a divine bleſſing; every one of theſe have a ſpiritual knowledge of Chriſt, faith in him, repentance towards God, food and fulneſs of it; and are filled with the fruits of righteouſneſs, or good works, to the glory of God; ſee Iſ. lv. 10. The Targum is, "that he may give "to them (the children of men) corn to eat, and "graſs to the beaſts in the field;" taking the words literally.

℣. 2. For the idols have ſpoken vanity, &c.] The vanities of the Gentiles cannot give rain; if they promiſe it, they ſpeak vain things; God only can give it, and therefore it muſt be aſked of him, Jer. xiv. 22. The word for idols is Teraphim, the ſame as in Gen. xxxi. 19. Hoſ. iii. 5. and here ſignifies worſhippers of idols, as the Targum interprets it; and may be underſtood of the idolatrous papiſts, who worſhip idols of gold, ſilver, braſs, and wood, Rev. ix. 20, 21. and who ſpeak lies in hypocriſy, great ſwelling words of vanity, and even blaſphemy againſt God, his name, his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven, 1 Tim. iv. 1, 2. Rev. xiii. 6. Jarchi on 2 Kings xxiii. 24. ſays, the Teraphim are images that ſpeak by ſorcerers or ſorceries; and to ſuch evils, the followers of the man of ſin are addicted, Rev. ix. 21. and xviii. 23. and the Jews [l] have a notion, that thoſe images were ſo formed, that they were capable of ſpeaking and talking with men; ſee Hoſ. iii. 4. they ſeem to confound them with the Taliſmen: and the diviners have ſeen a lie; delivered it out, and others believed it, being given up to judicial blindneſs, becauſe they received not the love of the truth, 2 Theſſ. ii. 10, 11. The Targum is, "the diviners propheſy falſhood;" or preach falſe doctrine, as the Romiſh clergy do, who are meant by the diviners: and have told falſe dreams; about tranſubſtantiation, purgatory, &c. which are viſionary things; falſe doctrines are compared to dreams, Jer. xxiii. 25, 27, 28, 32: they comfort in vain; by works of ſupererogation, by ſelling pardons, and praying ſouls out of purgatory: therefore they went their way as a flock; as a flock of ſheep ſtraying from the fold. The Targum is, "they are ſcattered as ſheep are ſcattered;" that is, the Jews, being hardened againſt the chriſtian religion, by the idolatry, lies and dreams of the Papiſts, wander about in their miſtakes and errors, concerning the Meſſiah; which is their caſe to this day, and will be until the man of ſin is deſtroyed: they were troubled, becauſe there was no ſhepherd; or, no king, as the Targum paraphraſes it; that is, the king Meſſiah, according to them is not yet come; which is their affliction and trouble, that they are as ſheep without a ſhepherd: or, they anſwered, that there is no ſhepherd [m]; they replied to the diviners, the tellers of falſe dreams, and idolaters, and affirmed that the Meſſiah is not come, and that the pope of Rome is not the ſhepherd and biſhop of ſouls.

℣. 3. Mine anger was kindled againſt the ſhepherds, &c.] The Targum interprets it, of kings; as the goats of princes, in the next clauſe; by whom, according to Jarchi, Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Abarbinel, are meant the kings of Greece; but rather the antichriſtian kings are deſigned, the kings of the earth, who have committed fornication with the whore of Rome, which is the cauſe of the anger of the Lord being kindled: or elſe eccleſiaſtical rulers are meant, the Romiſh clergy, the chief of them, as cardinals, archbiſhops, biſhops, &c. who may fitly be repreſented by the ſhepherds of Iſrael in the times of the prophets for their name, profeſſing to be of Iſrael, or to be chriſtians; and by them for their ignorance, covetouſneſs, luxury, diſregard to the flock, tyranny and cruelty over it, and murder of it; ſee Iſ. lvi. 10. againſt theſe the fire of God's wrath will be kindled, and with it will they be deſtroyed: and I puniſhed the goats; not the Seleucidæ, as the above Jewiſh writers; tho' they may with propriety be ſo called, ſince they were the ſucceſſors of Alexander, ſignified by the he-goat in Dan. viii. 5. rather the monks and friars, comparable to theſe for their filthineſs and uncleanneſs; and becauſe they pretend to be guides of the people, and to go before them, and yet uſe them ill, and puſh them with their horns of power; wherefore God will puniſh them, and kill thoſe children of Jezabel with death, Rev. ii. 22, 23: for the Lord of hoſts hath viſited his flock, the houſe of Judah; by ſending the goſpel to them, and his Spirit with it, to make it effectual to their converſion; which will be at the time that the antichriſtian hierarchy will be deſtroyed; then the Lord's flock, who have gone aſtray, ſhall be returned to the true ſhepherd and biſhop of ſouls, and ſhall ſeek the Lord their God, and David their king, and ſhall be ſaved by him: a gracious viſitation this will be! and hath made them as his goodly horſe in the battel; this denotes that the Jews, when converted, will be bold in their God; valiant for the truth on earth; courageouſly fight the good fight of faith, and be victorious over their enemies; and that they will be in great honour and eſteem among the ſaints, tho' ſo mean and juſtly deſpicable now: the ſenſe is, that as the horſe ſhows its ſtrength and courage in battel, ſo ſhould they; ſee Job xxxix. 19—25.

[m] יענו כי אין רעה; teſtificati ſunt nullum fuiſſe paſtorem, Junius & Tremellius, Heb. reſponderunt, Piſcator; reſpondebunt quod non ſit paſtor, Burkius.

℣. 4. Out of him came forth the corner, &c.] Or corner-ſtone; by which is meant a king or ruler, as the Targum, Jarchi, and Kimchi; and is no other than the king Meſſiah, who was to come out of Judah, and did ſpring from that tribe, 1 Chron. v. 2. Heb. vii. 14. and this is a reaſon why God will viſit the houſe of Judah, or the Jews, in the latter day, becauſe the Meſſiah was promiſed and ſent unto them, ſalvation was of them, tho' they rejected him; but the Lord will have mercy on them; the Redeemer ſhall come to Zion in a ſpiritual manner, and turn away iniquity from them, and then all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved by him. The epithet of a corner-ſtone, well agrees with him, that being not only the ornament, but the ſtrength and ſupport of the building, which knits, cements, and keeps the whole together: Chriſt is a beautiful and precious corner-ſtone, which gives glory and luſtre to the church, and is the ſupport, yea the foundation of it; and who joins and unites together men and angels; Jews and Gentiles; Old and New Teſtament-ſaints; ſaints above and below; ſaints in all ages and places, and of all nations and denominations; and is the head of the corner, being ſuperior to men and angels, to the kings of the earth, and to the church of God; ſee Eph. ii. 20. Out of him the nail; the Targum is, out of him his Meſſiah; which ſhows that this text was formerly underſtood of Chriſt by the Jews; Jarchi and Kimchi interpret it of a prince and governor; ſo Eliakim the governor is ſaid to be, as a nail in a ſure place, Iſ. xxii. 23. who was a type of Chriſt; and this agrees with Chriſt himſelf. The alluſion is either to a nail, by which the timber in the building is compacted together, and the whole is ſtrengthened, as the church is by Chriſt: or to a nail to which the cords of tents are faſtened, as thoſe of ſhepherds, travellers, or ſoldiers; the church is as ſuch a tent; Chriſt is the nail to which its cords are faſtened, which denotes the ſtability and ſecurity of it: or to a nail fixed in a wall, on which things are hung; on Chriſt are hung all the veſſels of mercy; the covenant of grace, and all its promiſes and bleſſings; and all the glory of his Father's houſe, of his building the temple, and of the ſalvation of his people, is to be hung on him. Out of him the battel-bow; or warrior, as Jarchi interprets it; the Lord is a man of war; Chriſt makes war in righteouſneſs; the armies of heaven follow him; he is at the head of them, and fights the battels of his people, and is victorious, and makes them more than conquerors; their ſpiritual armour is from him, and they are armed by him, Rev. xix. 11—14. Out of him every oppreſſor together; or exactor[n]; which is uſed in a good ſenſe, Iſ. lx. 17. as it muſt be here, ſince all the reſt of the epithets are; and may deſign the apoſtles of Chriſt, who preached the doctrines of grace and righteouſneſs, and required of men the obedience of faith; and theſe came out of Judah and Jeruſalem, and went into all the world, demanding faith in, and obedience to the Son of God.

℣. 5. And they ſhall be as mighty men, &c.] That is, the converted Jews ſhall be ſuch; they ſhall be ſtrong in faith, giving glory to the Meſſiah; they ſhall be ſtrong in the grace that is in him; they ſhall be ſtrong in the Lord, and in the power of his might; his ſtrength ſhall be made perfect in their weakneſs: which tread down their enemies in the mire of the ſtreets in the battel; being victorious over ſin, ſatan, and the world, through Chriſt, in whom they will believe: and they ſhall fight; againſt all their inward and outward enemies, the good fight of faith, with great valour and courage: becauſe the Lord is with them; who is the Lord of hoſts or armies; his preſence gives boldneſs and intrepidity; for if he is for them, who can be againſt them; the battel is theirs, ſucceſs is certain: and the riders on horſes ſhall be confounded; ſuch that come up againſt them on them, and truſt in them, ſhall be beaten by them, and ſo made aſhamed; and the fleſh, both of the horſes and their riders, ſhall be the food of the fowls of the air, Rev. xix. 18. perhaps the Turkiſh cavalry is meant, who may attempt to hinder the ſettlement of the Jews in their own land; the armies of the the Turks conſiſting greatly of horſemen, Rev. ix. 16.

℣. 6. And I will ſtrengthen the houſe of Judah, &c.] Both with internal and external ſtrength, ſo that they ſhall be able to ſtand their ground againſt enemies of every ſort: and I will ſave the houſe of Joſeph; the ten tribes, ſuch of them that ſhall be found, for all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved, Rom. xi. 26. not only temporally, but ſpiritually, with an everlaſting ſalvation: and I will bring them again to place them; there is but one word in the original text; it is compoſed of two words, as Kimchi obſerves, of שוב to return, and ישב to ſit or dwell[o], quietly, conſtantly, and at eaſe; and our verſion takes in both ſenſes: the meaning is, that theſe people ſhould be returned from the ſtate and condition, and from the ſeveral places they are in, and be ſettled either in their own land, or in goſpel-churches, under a goſpel-miniſtry, enjoying goſpel-ordinances, or in both: for I have mercy upon them; which is the ſpring and ſource of all the above benefits promiſed, or that are after-mentioned; even of the covenant and its bleſſings; the miſſion of Chriſt, and ſalvation by him; regeneration, pardon, and eternal life: hence they that had a Lo-ammi ammi upon them, and were not the people of God, now will be his people; and thoſe who had not obtained mercy, ſhall obtain it, even thoſe that were concluded in unbelief: and they ſhall be as though I had not caſt them off; or rejected them from being his people; which was done when the natural branches, the Jews, were broken off, and the Gentiles of the wild olive-tree were graffed in; when their civil and church-ſtate were diſſolved, and their city and temple deſtroyed: for I am the Lord their God; covenant-intereſt always remains, and is the ſource of all the bleſſings of grace, and will be of the converſion of the Jews, Rom. xi. 26, 27, 28, 29: and will hear them; when, the Spirit of grace and ſupplication being poured upon them, they ſhall cry unto the Lord, and look to him for ſalvation. The Targum is, "and I will receive their "prayer."

℣. 7. And they of Ephraim ſhall be like a mighty man, &c.] What remain, and ſhall be found of the ten tribes, ſhall be as is ſaid of Judah, or the Jews of the two tribes, ℣. 5: and their heart ſhall rejoice as thro' wine; they ſhall be filled with inward and ſpiritual joy, thro' the love of God ſhed abroad in their heart; and thro' the goſpel of Chriſt having a place there; and thro' the bleſſings of divine grace, thoſe ſtreams of love, and which flow in the goſpel, and make glad the hearts of God's people; all which are comparable to wine: yea, their children ſhall ſee it, and be glad; they ſhall ſee the ſtrength, victory, and ſalvation of their fathers, and the joy they ſhall be poſſeſſed of, and join with them in it, having a ſhare in the ſame bleſſings they are partakers of: their hearts ſhall rejoice in the Lord; in the perſon and offices of Chriſt, who will now be known by the ſpiritual ſeed and offspring of the church, and in the great ſalvation wrought out by him, and in all the bleſſings of grace that accompany it. The Targum is, "their heart ſhall rejoice in the word of the Lord;" the eſſential word, the Son of God.

℣. 8. I will hiſs for them, &c.] Or whiſtle for them[p]; the word ſignifies, as Kimchi and Ben Melech obſerve, the motion of the lips with the voice, and is a ſign of calling; and ſo the Targum renders it, I will cry or call for them; and it denotes the call of them by the goſpel, which is the voice of Chriſt, which is ſoft, ſweet, and melodious; is a ſound of love, grace, and mercy; of peace, pardon, life, and ſalvation: the alluſion ſeems to be to the ſhepherd gathering his ſheep together with his pipe or whiſtle, and which was a reed; and ſo may denote the weakneſs of the inſtrument, the miniſtry of the word in itſelf, which is made the power of God unto ſalvation: and gather them; from the places where they are ſcattered, into their land; or by effectual calling, out from the ſtate and condition in which they are, and from among the men of the world, to the Lord himſelf, as their Redeemer and Saviour; and to him for pardon and righteouſneſs; and into his churches, and communion with him there: Kimchi obſerves, that ſome interpret this verſe of future time; and Jarchi ſays it relates to it; and in the Talmud[q] it is applied to the times of the Meſſiah; where they ſpeak of a bird called Racham, which we tranſlate the Gier-eagle, Deut. xiv. 17. and they ſay it is ſo called, becauſe when that comes, mercies come into the world, which this word ſignifies. R. Bibi bar Abi ſays, when it ſits, it makes a whiſtling or hiſſing, from whence it is called Sarakrak, a word derived from what is here uſed; and when it ſits on the ground, and hiſſes or whiſtles, the Meſſiah will come, as it is ſaid, I will hiſs for them, &c. the gloſs is, when it ſtands not, but ſits and chirps, it is a ſign of good news. The deſign ſeems to be to ſhew, that the Meſſiah's coming is owing to mercy, and would be good news, which the goſpel publiſhes. For I have redeemed them; from ſin, ſatan, the law, death and hell, and every enemy, by his precious blood, and the ſacrifice of himſelf when here on earth; and this is the foundation of the effectual vocation of any and every ſinner; and will be the reaſon of the converſion and ingathering of the Jews in the latter day; they being a people redeemed and purchaſed by the blood of Chriſt, Iſ. xliii. 1: and they ſhall increaſe, as they have increaſed; either when in Egypt, or in the days of Solomon; their number ſhall be as the ſand of the ſea, Hoſ. i. 10. a nation ſhall be born at once; they ſhall be multiplied and not be few, and glorified and not be ſmall; yea, the place ſhall be too ſtrait for them to dwell in, Jer. xxxi. 18. Iſ. xlix. 18—22. and lxvi. 8.

℣. 9. And I will ſow them among the people, &c.] The people of God in the Gentile world: this is to be underſtood of the converſion of the Jews, when they will become the good ſeed that hear the word, and underſtand it, and bring forth fruit; and of their being known, acknowledged, and reckoned among the people of God, who now are not; and of their being planted in goſpel-churches, where the word is truly preached; the ordinances are faithfully adminiſtred; the Lord grants his preſence, and ſaints have communion one with another; to be in ſuch a fruitful ſoil, and in ſuch ſacred incloſures, fenced by the power and grace of God, is a great happineſs: and they ſhall remember me in far countries; they ſhall call to mind what their anceſtors did to Chriſt, and mourn on account of a pierced Saviour; they ſhall remember him in the ordinance of the ſupper, being in a goſpel-church-ſtate; they ſhall remember what he did and ſuffered for them, and his love to them in all, and that with faith, affection, and thankfulneſs: and they ſhall live with their children; a very happy, comfortable, temporal life; and they ſhall live a ſpiritual life; a life of faith on Chriſt; of communion with him, and of holineſs from him, and to his glory: and their children alſo ſhall live the ſame life, being regenerated and quickned by the ſame grace; theſe are the church's children: and turn again; that is, when they ſhall turn again, either to the Lord, ſhall be converted unto him; or return to their own land.

℣. 10. I will bring them again alſo out of the land of Egypt, &c.] The Targum paraphraſes it, "and "as I brought them out of the land of Egypt, "ſo will I gather their captivity out of Aſſyria;" ſuggeſting there would be a likeneſs between the one and the other. Egypt may denote the ſtate of diſtance and bondage, in which all men are by nature; and the Jews, at their converſion, will be brought out of it, into the glorious liberty of the children of God, by the mighty arm of the Lord, according to his purpoſes and promiſes. Moreover, as Coccelus obſerves, Egypt may ſignify Rome, or the Romiſh juriſdiction, which is ſpiritually called Egypt and Sodom, Rev. xi. 8.

for darkneſs, idolatry, tyranny, and cruelty; and out of which the Jews, as many of them as are there, will be brought at the time of their converſion: and gather them out of Aſſyria; which may deſign the Turkiſh or Perſian dominions, or both, as the above commentator ſuggeſts; from whence the Jews, as many as are in thoſe parts, will be brought into their own land, as follows; ſee Iſ. xi. 11. Rev. xvi. 12: and I will bring them into the land of Gilead and Lebanon; Gilead was a land of paſture, and ſignifies an heap of teſtimonies; and may myſtically intend the ſcriptures, which teſtify of Chriſt, and direct to green paſtures, beſides the ſtill waters: and Lebanon, that goodly mountain, and hill of frankincenſe, and where cedars grew, may deſign the church, whither the converted Jews will be brought, and worſhip before it, Rev. iii. 9. or both may literally be underſtood, which they ſhall return unto; Gilead being, as Kimchi obſerves, beyond Jordan eaſtward; and Lebanon, comprehending the whole land of Iſrael, on this ſide of it: and place ſhall not be found for them; they will be ſo numerous; ſee Iſ. xlix. 20, 21. the Targum is, "and I will bring them to the land of Gilead "and the ſanctuary, and it ſhall not be ſufficient "for them;" that is, to hold them. The Septuagint render it, and not one of them ſhall be left; all Iſrael ſhall now be converted and ſaved, tho' their number will be as the ſand of the ſea, Hoſ. i. 10.

℣. 11. And he ſhall paſs through the ſea with affliction, &c.] Either the people of the Jews, as Iſrael of old did, when they came out of Egypt, to which the alluſion is; or the wind ſhall paſs thro' the ſea, as Aben Ezra ſupplies it, and it ſhall become dry, that is, the river of Egypt: or affliction[r], as many ſupply it, ſhall paſs through the ſea; the nations, which are many as the ſea, as Kimchi interprets it; and ſo may deſign that hour of temptation that ſhall come upon all the earth, Rev. iii. 10. or with which the kingdom of the beaſt, who roſe up out of the ſea, and conſiſts of many waters, people, tongues, and nations, will be afflicted, Rev. xiii. 1. and xvii. 1, 15. and xvi. 3. and xviii. 21. which the Lord ſhall paſs thro' and ſmite; or it may in general denote the ſea of this world, and the afflictions of it, which the Lord cauſes his people to paſs through, and brings them out of them: and ſhall ſmite the waves in the ſea; that is, the Lord ſhall ſmite them; repreſs afflictions, which are like the proud waves, not ſuffering them to proceed further than is for his glory and his peoples good, and remove all obſtacles in their way; ſee Iſ. xi. 15, 16. or deſtroy their enemies, which are like the proud waters, that otherwiſe would go over their ſouls, and overwhelm them; and particularly the antichriſtian ſtates, at the pouring out of the vials, ſignified by the ſea, and by fountains and rivers, Rev. xvi. 3, 4. Kimchi explains it of the multitude of the people: and all the deeps of the river ſhall dry up; not Nile, the river of Egypt, as Jarchi and Aben Ezra[s], but the river Euphrates; ſee Rev. xvi. 12. the drying up of which ſignifies the deſtruction of the Turkiſh empire; and the Targum paraphraſes it, "all the "kings of the people ſhall be confounded:" and the pride of Aſſyria ſhall be brought down; the pride of the Ottoman empire, of which the old Aſſyria is a part, and which has been large and powerful, that ſhall be deſtroyed; this will be at the paſſing away of the ſecond wo; and then quickly comes the third, which is as follows, Rev. xi. 14: and the ſceptre of Egypt ſhall depart away; all rule and government ſhall ceaſe; ſee Gen. xlix. 10. meaning that the kingdom of the antichriſtian beaſt of Rome, called Egypt, Rev. xi. 8. ſhall be at an end; which will be at the blowing of the ſeventh trumpet, and upon and thro' the pouring out of the ſeven vials. So the Targum, the dominion of the Egyptians ſhall be taken away; or its rod, with which it has ſmote, hurt, and greatly oppreſſed and afflicted the ſaints; perſecution ſhall now ceaſe; it will not be in the power of the Romiſh antichriſt to perſecute any more.

℣. 12. And I will ſtrengthen them in the Lord, &c.] Not the Egyptians and Aſſyrians, but the Jews as in ℣. 5. the Targum is, "I will ſtrengthen "them in the word of the Lord;" in the Meſſiah, by his power, and in the grace that is in him; and their faith and hope in him, and love to him: or by[t] him; ſo that thro' him ſtrengthening them, they will be able to do all things; to exerciſe grace; perform duty; withſtand temptation; oppoſe indwelling ſin; bear the croſs of Chriſt; endure afflictions; engage with all their ſpiritual enemies, and conquer them: for the words may be rendered, I will cauſe them to prevail, or overcome in the Lord[u]; all their enemies, temporal and ſpiritual; and even to be more than conquerors thro' him that has loved them: and they ſhall walk up and down in his name, ſaith the Lord; walk in him, the way to the Father, to heaven and happineſs; walk by faith on him, in his ſtrength, and in imitation of him; walk according to his goſpel, calling on his name, profeſſing and worſhipping him; and walk in his church and ordinances, agreeable to his will; ſee Mic. iv. 5. Kimchi owns that this whole chapter belongs to the times of the Meſſiah, as well as the former. The words may be conſidered as a teſtimony to the doctrine of the Trinity; that I Jehovah the Father, will ſtrengthen them in Jehovah the Son; and they ſhall walk up and down in the name of the Son of God, ſaith Jehovah the Spirit. Moreover as a promiſe of the ſaints final perſeverance, very peremptorily expreſſed; I will ſtrengthen them, and they ſhall walk, &c.

CHAP. XI.

THIS chapter contains a prophecy of the deſtruction of the Jews, and ſhews the cauſes and reaſons of it; and is concluded with a prediction concerning antichriſt. The deſtruction of the temple and city of Jeruſalem, and the inhabitants of it, is ſignified by figurative expreſſions, ℣. 1, 2. which occaſions an howling among the ſhepherds or rulers of Iſrael, on account of whoſe cruelty and covetouſneſs the wrath of God came upon them without mercy, ℣. 3, 5, 6. but inaſmuch as there were a remnant according to the election of grace among them, named the flock of the ſlaughter, Chriſt is called upon to feed them; who undertakes it, and prepares for it, ℣. 4, 7. but being abhorred by the ſhepherds, whom he therefore loathed and cut off, he determines to leave the people to utter ruin and deſtruction, ℣. 8, 9. and as a token of it, breaks the two ſtaves aſunder he had took to feed them with, ℣. 10, 11, 14. and as an inſtance of their ingratitude to him, and which is a juſtification of his conduct towards them, notice is taken of his being valued at and ſold for thirty pieces of ſilver, ℣. 12, 13. but in the room of theſe ſhepherds cut off, it is ſuggeſted, that another ſhould ariſe, who is deſcribed by his folly, negligence, and cruelty, ℣. 15, 16. to whom a wo is denounced, ℣. 17.

℣. 1. Open thy doors, O Lebanon, &c.] By which may be meant, either the temple of Jeruſalem, which was built of the cedars of Lebanon; "the "gates of which are ſaid [w] to open of themſelves "forty years before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, "when Jochanan ben Zaccai, who lived at the "ſame time, rebuked them, ſaying, O temple, "temple, wherefore doſt thou fright thyſelf? I "know thine end is to be deſtroyed; for ſo propheſied Zechariah, the ſon of Iddo, concerning "thee, open thy doors, O Lebanon." So Lebanon, in ch. x. 10. is interpreted of the ſanctuary, both by the Targum and by Jarchi; or elſe it may be underſtood of Jeruſalem, and of the whole land of Judea, becauſe it was ſituated by it; it was the border of it on the north ſide. That the fire may devour thy cedars; of which the temple was built, and the houſes of Jeruſalem, which were conſumed by fire; unleſs the fortreſſes of the land are meant. So the Targum paraphraſes it, "and the fire ſhall "conſume your fortreſſes."

℣. 2. Howl, fir-tree, for thy cedar is fallen, &c.] By which are deſigned the princes, nobles, and magiſtrates of the land: ſo the Targum interprets them of kings and princes; ſee Nah. ii. 3. Ezek. xxxi. 3: becauſe all the mighty are ſpoiled; which is an explanation of the figurative expreſſions in the former clauſe, and in the following; and deſigns rich men, as the Targum paraphraſes it, who at this time would be ſpoiled of their wealth and ſubſtance. Howl, O ye oaks of Baſhan; which the Targum interprets of governors of provinces; and men of power and authority are doubtleſs intended; ſee Iſ. ii. 13. Amos ii. 9: for the foreſt of the vintage is come down; or rather, the fortified foreſt; meaning the city of Jeruſalem, which was a fortified place, and like a foreſt full of trees, for number of inhabitants, but now cut down and deſtroyed; ſee Iſ. x. 16, 17, 18, 19.

℣. 3. There is a voice of the howling of the ſhepherds, &c.] Which may be underſtood either of the civil rulers among the Jews, who now loſe their honour and their riches; and ſo the Targum, Jarchi, and Aben Ezra, interpret it of kings; or of the eccleſiaſtical rulers, the elders of the people, the ſcribes and phariſees: for their glory is ſpoiled; their power and authority; their riches and wealth; their places of honour and profit; their offices, poſts, and employments, whether in civil or religious matters, are taken from them, and they are deprived of them: a voice of the roaring of young lions; of princes, comparable to them for their power, tyranny, and cruelty: the Targum is, "their roar"ing is as the roaring of young lions:" for the pride of Jordan is ſpoiled; a place where lions and their young ones reſorted, as Jarchi obſerves; ſee the note on Jer. xlix. 19. Jordan is here put for the whole land of Judea now waſted, and ſo its pride and glory gone; as if the waters of Jordan were dried up, the pride and glory of that, and which it ſhowed when its waters ſwelled and overflowed; hence called by Pliny [x], ambitioſus amnis, an haughty and ambitious ſwelling river.

℣. 4. Thus ſaith the Lord my God, &c.] The Syriac verſion adds, to me; not the prophet Zechariah, but the Meſſiah, who calls the Lord his God, as he was man and Mediator, John xx. 17. for what follow are the words of God the Father to him, calling upon him, and giving him a commiſſion to feed the flock of the ſlaughter; meaning the people of the Jews in general, to whom Chriſt was ſent as a prophet, to teach and inſtruct them by the miniſtry of the word; ſo feeding is interpreted of propheſying, by the Targum and Jarchi; and theſe are called the flock of ſlaughter, becauſe of the cruel uſage they met with from their ſhepherds and owners, mentioned in the next verſe; and becauſe they were appointed and given up to ruin and deſtruction of God, on account of their ſins and tranſgreſſions; tho' there was a remnant among them, a little flock, afterwards in this chapter called the poor of the flock, who were the ſpecial care of Chriſt, and were fed by him in a ſpiritual manner; and may go by this name, becauſe expoſed to the cruelties of men, and are accounted as ſheep for the ſlaughter, Rom. viii. 36. theſe, Chriſt was called upon by his Father in the council of peace, to take care of, which he did; and in the everlaſting covenant of grace, he agreed to feed them; and in the fulneſs of time he was ſent to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael, who were as ſheep without a ſhepherd; and he fed them with knowledge and with underſtanding.

℣. 5. Whoſe poſſeſſors ſlay them, and hold themſelves not guilty, &c.] Not the Romans after Chriſt came, into whoſe hands they were delivered, and by whom they were ſlain in great numbers, not accounting it any ſin to put them to death; but the prieſts, ſcribes, phariſees, and doctors among the Jews, who ruined and deſtroyed their ſouls, by feeding them with poiſonous doctrines; teaching them the commandments of men, and to obſerve the traditions of the elders; and to ſeek for life and ſalvation by the works of the law, which was a miniſtration of condemnation and death to them; and yet thought they did God, and the ſouls of men good ſervice: and they that ſell them; as falſe teachers make merchandiſe of the ſouls of men: ſay, bleſſed be the Lord; for I am rich; having devoured widows houſes and ſubſtances, under a pretence of long prayers; and enriched themſelves thro' tithes of every thing, and by other methods; as the Scribes and Phariſees did: and their own ſhepherds pity them not; thoſe who ſhould have been concerned for the welfare of their ſouls, had no compaſſion on them. Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Ben Melech interpret this of God the ſhepherd of Iſrael; the verb being ſingular, tho' the noun is plural: ſo God is called makers, creators, Pſ. cxlix. 2. Eccl. xii. 1. and this ſenſe agrees with the following words.

℣. 6. For I will no more pity the inhabitants of the land, ſaith the Lord, &c.] Or ſpare them; but cauſe his wrath to come upon them to the uttermoſt, as it did at the time of Jeruſalem's deſtruction by the Romans: but lo, I will deliver the men every one into his neighbour's hand; this ſeems to refer to the factions and diviſions among themſelves during the ſiege of Jeruſalem, when multitudes fell into the hands of the zealots, and heads of parties, and periſhed by them: and into the hand of his king; Veſpaſian the Roman emperor; the Jews having declared long before this time, that they had no king but Cæſar, John xix. 15. and now into his hands they were delivered up: and they ſhall ſmite the land; that is, the Romans ſhall lay waſte the land of Judea: and out of their hand I will not deliver them; as formerly out of the hands of their neighbours, the Philiſtines, Ammonites, &c. and out of the captivity of Babylon. It denotes that their deſtruction would be an utter one; nor have they been delivered yet, tho' it has been near 1700 years ago.

℣. 7. And I will feed the flock of ſlaughter, &c.] According to the call and commiſſion he had from his divine Father, ℣. 4. he determines to do as it was enjoined him, and as he had undertook: even you, O poor of the flock; beſides the people of the Jews in general, to whom Chriſt was ſent, and he came to feed, there were a ſmall remnant according to the election of grace, he had a ſpecial regard for; and whom he fed by the word and ordinances with himſelf, the bread of life; and with the diſcoveries of his love, and with the covenant of grace, its bleſſings and promiſes, the ſure mercies of David. Theſe are called the poor of the flock, becauſe they were the poor of this world, as were the diſciples and followers of Chriſt; the poor have the goſpel preached unto them, Matt. xi. 5. and becauſe they were ſpiritually poor, or poor in ſpirit, Matt. v. 3. who ſaw their ſpiritual poverty, and owned it; who bewailed it, and were humbled under a ſenſe of it; and ſought after the true riches; and acknowledged that all they had were owing to the grace of God: and who, as to the frame of their mind, are the meek and humble ones; or, as to their outward ſtate and condition, afflicted ones, as the word [y] may be rendered; who were perſecuted, reviled, reproached, and accurſed by others, John vii. 49. and as to their gifts and graces the meaneſt of God's people: and I took unto me two ſtaves, the one I called beauty, and the other I called bands; Jarchi, agreeable to the Targum, interprets this of the diviſion of the kingdom of Iſrael into two parts, in the times of Rehoboam and Jeroboam. Some think perſons are meant. In the Talmud [z], it is explained of the diſciples of the wiſe men in the land of Iſrael, who make each other pleaſant by their doctrines; and of the diſciples of the wiſe men in Babylon, that corrupt one another, or object to one another: according to Aben Ezra, Zerubbabel and Nehemiah are intended: others the good king Joſiah, and the bad king Zedekiah: others the prieſt, and the king, as Abendana obſerves; and Kimchi explains it, of the different manner in which the Lord led the people, according to their behaviour to him; when they behaved well, they had good kings and governors, which led them in a right way, and they were filled with good things; but when they behaved otherwiſe, they had evil kings, and evil befel them. The firſt of theſe ſtaves, ſome render clemency [a], lenity, kindneſs, gentleneſs; and ſuppoſe it has reſpect to the kind and gentle manner in which God dealt with the Jews before the times of Chriſt, both as to civil and religious things; as to civil things, by bringing them into, and ſettling them, in a pleaſant land, a land flowing with milk and honey; by giving them wholeſome laws, by which they were governed, ſuch as no other nation had; and by ſetting over them judges, to protect, defend, and deliver them; and kings to rule over them, very wiſe and good, eſpecially ſome of them, David, Solomon, &c. and as to religious things, by giving them a revelation of his mind and will, his word, ſtatutes, and judgments, he did not give to other nations; and by ſending prophets to inſtruct them in them, and ſtir them up to the obſervance of them; and by appointing a place of worſhip, and ſettling the form of it; ſetting apart men to the office of prieſts, and ordering ſacrifices to be offered, with the whole of temple-ſervice; which were the beauty of the Lord, to be beheld in his ſanctuary: and then the latter, called bands, which ſome render deſtroyers [b], may denote either the deſtruction of this people, when they ſinned againſt God, either by the Chaldeans, or by the Romans; when ſeverity was exerciſed on them, and wrath came upon them to the uttermoſt, in the ruin of their nation, city, and temple: and others think theſe may refer to the different uſage of the Roman emperors, with reſpect to the Jews, who, for the moſt part, uſed them kindly, until the times of Nero; but afterwards by him, and other emperors they were treated very roughly, until they were utterly deſtroyed by them; but as it plainly appears from the context, that this is ſpoken of no other ſhepherd but Chriſt, and of no other feeding but his, they muſt deſign the inſtruments he makes uſe of, and ſtill continues to make uſe of, in feeding his people. Shepherds commonly have but one ſtaff, rod, or crook; but Chriſt has two: ſo the Pſalmiſt makes mention of a rod and ſtaff, when ſpeaking of Chriſt as a ſhepherd, Pſ. xxiii. 4. and theſe two ſtaves, ſome interpret of his twofold way of government, lenity to his people, and ſeverity to his enemies; but rather it denotes, the very great diligence and care Chriſt takes of his flock, both in guiding and directing them, and in protecting and defending them from from their enemies: he fed his people in his own perſon when here on earth, with his ſtaff beauty or clemency; he was ſent, and came to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael, and had great compaſſion on them, as being like ſheep without a ſhepherd; their preſent ſhepherds, or who bore that name, being ſuch as are before deſcribed: and his tenderneſs and gentleneſs towards them appeared in his calling ſinners to repentance; in his gracious invitations to come unto him; by his kind reception of them; his affable and courteous deportment towards them; the gentle reproofs, and ſuitable inſtructions he gave them, and the comfortable truths of the goſpel he delivered to them; and during his perſonal miniſtry, he ſuffered his diſciples to go no where elſe with his goſpel; and at his reſurrection from the dead, ordered them to begin preaching at Jeruſalem, and to continue preaching to the Jews firſt every where, as they did, until they rejected the goſpel; and then Chriſt broke both his ſtaves, or removed the goſpel, and the ordinances of it, which I think are meant by theſe ſtaves: for theſe ſtaves are not only enſigns of the ſhepherd, as inſtruments of guiding, directing, and protecting the flock; but emblematical, as their names ſhew; and emblems they might be of the ſtay and ſtaff of food, of the whole ſtay of bread, and the whole ſtay of water, Iſ. iii. 1. and we find that Chriſt's rod and ſtaff, in a myſtical ſenſe, are of uſe to feed, refreſh, and comfort, as well as to guide and direct, Pſ. xxiii. 4. by the ſtaff beauty, we are to underſtand the goſpel, which was preached to the Jews before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, which is beautiful and pleaſant in itſelf; the doctrines of it are ſo, ſuch as thoſe of peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation by Chriſt; and ſuch are the promiſes of it, being abſolute and unconditional, ſure and ſuitable to the caſes of God's people, and likewiſe its miniſters, Iſ. lii. 7. and the ordinances of it comely and lovely; and beſides, it ſets forth the beauty of Chriſt, and repreſents the ſaints beautifulneſs in him: and it is like the ſhepherd's ſtaff, of great uſe in feeding the flock, not only by ſupplying with food, being food itſelf, milk for babes, and meat for ſtrong men; and by directing to Chriſt, his covenant and church, where it is to be had; but by ſetting right ſuch who are going in wrong paſtures; puſhing forward ſuch as are backward to duty; fetching back ſuch as are driven away, or backſliden, and preſerving the whole from wolves and bears: and by the other ſtaff bands, the ordinances of the goſpel are deſigned, which are of uſe to keep the ſaints together, and to direct them to proper food; particularly the ordinance of the Lord's-ſupper, which, as it is a feeding ordinance, and ſets forth Chriſt, as food for faith, his fleſh which is meat indeed, and his blood which is drink indeed; ſo it is a knitting and uniting ordinance, and is fitly expreſſed by bands; is not only a means of knitting the affections to Chriſt, whoſe love is ſo fully expreſſed in it; but of uniting the hearts of believers to one another, who herein become one bread, and one body, and feed together; and have communion with each other, and maintain their church-ſtate in a comfortable manner; and keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace; and the ordinances of the goſpel, tho' they are ſuch bonds as are diſagreeable to graceleſs perſons, who are for breaking them aſunder; yet they are a yoke that is eaſy, and a burden light to the people of God, Pſ. ii. 3. Matt. xi. 30. It may be obſerved, that the word for bands is rendered pilots, Ezek. xxvii. 8, 29. and maſters or governors of ſhips, Jonah i. 6. and is ſo rendered here[c]; and as churches may be compared to ſhips, Rev. viii. 9. ſo may miniſters of the word to thoſe who have the government and direction of them; and whoſe buſineſs lies in the miniſtration of the word, and the adminiſtration of ordinances, and taking care of the diſcipline of the goſpel: this ſeems to be the evangelic ſenſe of theſe words; and they expreſs the manner in which Chriſt fed his own dear people in Judea, partly by his own miniſtry, and partly by the miniſtry of his apoſtles, whilſt he had an intereſt there, until the ſins of that nation brought utter ruin upon them. It is a moſt ridiculous application made of theſe two ſtaves by Antoninus archbiſhop of Florence[d], that Zechariah being of the Dominican order, took to him in the perſon of God two ſtaves, the one he called beauty, which is the order of the preaching Friars; and the other bands, which is the order of the Minors: and I fed the flock; with the ſaid ſtaves, as he had determined; which includes the doing of the whole office of a ſhepherd; taking an exact account of his ſheep, that none be loſt; going before them, and ſetting them an example in the exerciſe of grace, and diſcharge of duty; leading them to the ſtill waters of his Father's love; to the fountains and fulneſs of his own grace; to the rich proviſions of his houſe, and the green paſtures of goſpel-ordinances; feeding them himſelf, and with himſelf, the bread of life, the hidden and heavenly manna; appointing ſhepherds under him, whom he qualifies to be paſtors, gives them to his churches as ſuch, and who receive from him the doctrines of the goſpel to feed them with; and protecting them from all their enemies, the roaring lion, ſatan, wolves in ſheeps clothing, falſe teachers, and the world's goats, who thruſt with ſide and ſhoulder, and puſh with their horns of power; as well as by ſeeking that which is loſt; bringing back that which is driven, or drawn away; binding up that which is broken; ſtrengthening the weak; healing the ſick; and watching over the whole flock night and day, leſt any hurt them.

℣. 8. Three ſhepherds alſo I cut off in one month, &c.] Not Moſes, Aaron, and Miriam, as is ſuggeſted in the Talmud[e]; nor David, Adonijah, and Joab, who died in the ſpace of a month; nor the three kings, Jehoaſh, Jehoiakim, and Zedekiah, who died by the hand of their enemies in a very little time; which is the ſenſe of ſome, as Abendana obſerves; nor the three laſt prophets, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, according to Aben Ezra; nor the three Maccabees, Judas, Jonathan, and Simon, as Abarbinel; rather the three ſects among the Jews, the Phariſees, Sadducees, and Eſſenes, inſtead of which laſt ſome put the Herodians; and others, the Scribes; tho' ſome are of opinion, that the three Sanhedrim or courts of judicature among the Jews are deſigned; but it ſeems beſt of all to interpret them of the three orders of magiſtrates among them, princes, prophets, and prieſts; and the cutting them off, may denote the ceſſation of civil government, the ſealing up of viſion and prophecy, and the putting an end to ſacrifice; which is much better than to interpret them of the three Roman emperors, who ſucceeded Nero; that is, Galba, Galba, Otho, and Vitellius, who were put to death by their own ſubjects, within the ſpace of a year and ſome days [f]; and which is a term of time that can't well be thought to be expreſſed by a month; which either ſignifies in general a ſmall ſpace of time; or, if a certain month is meant, either it deſigns the month Niſan, in which Chriſt ſuffered, when of right ſacrifice ſhould have ceaſed, as well as then prophecy was ſealed up, and there was no more of it among the Jews, nor any civil government in their hands: or elſe the month Ab, in which the city of Jeruſalem was burnt; and ſo an end was put in fact to all the above offices there. It may be, that a month of years is intended, as in Rev. xi. 2. and xiii. 5. and ſo Abarbinel here interprets it; tho' he applies it to the times of the Maccabees; but it may reſpect the thirty years, or thereabout, which were between the death of Chriſt, and the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, within which compaſs of time the above events were actually and manifeſtly fulfilled: and my ſoul loathed them; becauſe they did not perform the duties of their office; the civil magiſtrate did not govern according to the laws of God; the prophets did not teach ſound doctrine; and the prieſts did not do their ſervice aright, nor teach the people the uſe and end of ſacrifices, and in them direct to the Meſſiah as they ſhould have done: wherefore Chriſt expreſſed his diſlike of them by words in his miniſtry, particularly in Matt. xxiii. and by deeds, cauſing vengeance to come upon them to the entire removal of them: or, my ſoul was ſhortened, or contracted in them, or towards them [g]; his affections were leſſened towards them; he loathed their ways and works, which were not good; and he rejected and caſt them off as his people, and wrote a Loammi on them; took away his goſpel from them, and aboliſhed their civil and church-ſtate: and their ſoul alſo abhorred me; which is the reaſon of the former; and ſo the Targum paraphraſes it, "and my word caſt them away, becauſe their ſoul "abhorred my worſhip;" all ranks and orders of men among the Jews had Chriſt in abhorrence; they abhorred his perſon, his name, his miracles, his doctrines, his ordinances, and his people; this they did becauſe of his mean appearance; and becauſe of his inveighing againſt their traditions, ſuperſtitions, and immoralities; and this appeared by their contemptuous rejection of him as the Meſſiah; by their crucifixion of him; and by perſecuting his diſciples and followers.

℣. 9. Then ſaid I, I will not feed you, &c.] That is, any longer; either perſonally, or by his apoſtles; he fed them himſelf, during his public miniſtry; and afterwards by his apoſtles, whom he ordered to preach the goſpel to the Jews firſt; but that being contradicted, blaſphemed, and deſpiſed by them, they were ordered to turn away from them, and go to the Gentiles: this ſhows that not the ſhepherds only, but the body of the people abhorred Chriſt, and his goſpel; and therefore it was taken away from them: that that dieth, let it die; literally, by the peſtilence, that going by the name of death in ſcripture; and ſpiritually, they that are dead in ſin, let them continue ſo; let them die thro' famine of the word they have deſpiſed; let them die in their ſins, and die the ſecond death, they juſtly deſerve: and that that is to be cut off, let it be cut off; literally, by the ſword; ſpiritually, the meaning is, that whereas ſome were in righteous judgment appointed to ruin, veſſels of wrath fitted to deſtruction; let them be left to themſelves, to a judicial blindneſs, and hardneſs of heart, and be cut off as unfruitful branches, and be no more in a church-ſtate here, and hereafter caſt into everlaſting burnings: and let the reſt eat every one the fleſh of another; thro' famine; or deſtroy each other in their inteſtine diviſions, which was the caſe of the Jews, when Jeruſalem was beſieged; ſee Gal. v. 15.

℣. 10. And I took my ſtaff, even beauty, and cut it aſunder, &c.] Signifying, that he dropped his paſtoral care of them: the goſpel indeed, which is meant by the ſtaff beauty, cannot be made void; it will have its deſigned effect; it is the everlaſting goſpel, and will endure; its bleſſings, promiſes, doctrines, ordinances, and miniſters ſhall continue, till all the elect are gathered in, even unto the ſecond coming of Chriſt: but then it may be removed from one place to another; it may be taken from one people, and given to another; and which is generally owing to contempt of it, unfruitfulneſs under it, and indifference to it; and this is the caſe here, it deſigns the taking away of the goſpel from the Jews, who deſpiſed it, and the carrying of it into the Gentile world; ſee Matt. xxi. 43. Acts xiii. 46, 47: that I might break my covenant which I had made with all the people; not the covenant of works, that was made with all mankind in Adam; that was broke, not by the Lord, but by man; and was broke before the goſpel was publiſhed; nor the covenant of grace, for this was not made with all the people, nor can it be broken; but the Moſaic œconomy, the Sinai-covenant, called the old covenant, which gradually vaniſhed away: it was of right aboliſhed at the death of Chriſt; when the goſpel was entirely removed, it more appeared to be ſo; and this was thoroughly done at the deſtruction of the city and temple. The laſt clauſe may be rendered, which covenant I have made with all the people; the Gentiles, having promiſed and given orders to ſend the goſpel unto them, which was accordingly done.

℣. 11. And it was broken in that day, &c.] In right, the day Chriſt died; apparently, when the goſpel, the ſubſtance of it, was removed; and, in fact, at the time of Jeruſalem's deſtruction: and ſo the poor of the flock; ſee the note on ℣. 7: that waited upon me; as ſervants on their maſters; as clients on their patron; as beggars at the door for alms; as attendants on the worſhip of God, for the manifeſtations of himſelf, for the performance of promiſes, and for anſwers of prayer: or, obſerved me [h]; what he ſaid and did, his word, and his ordinances; what he aboliſhed, and what he inſtituted: knew that it was the word of the Lord; either that Chriſt the ſhepherd was the eſſential word of the Lord; or that the prophecies concerning the deſtruction of the Jews, their civil and eccleſiaſtical ſtate, were the word and decree of God now fulfilled; or that the goſpel taken from them is the word of the Lord, which he is the author of; his grace is the matter and ſubſtance of; and which he ſpeaks by his miniſters; and may be known by the matter and efficacy of it; by the refreſhment and comfort it gives; by its leading ſouls to Chriſt; and by the harmony, agreement, and uniformity of its doctrines.

℣. 12. And I ſaid unto them, &c.] Not to the poor of the flock that waited on him, and knew the word of the Lord, and valued it; but to the other Jews that deſpiſed Chriſt and his goſpel: give me my price; or, give my price [i]; what I am valued at by you, to Judas the betrayer: or the price due unto him for feeding the flock, ſuch as faith in him, love to him, reverence and worſhip of him. So the Targum paraphraſes it, do my will. Kimchi ſays, the price is repentance, and good works: and if not, forbear; unleſs all is done freely, willingly, and chearfully; ſee Ezek. ii. 5, 7. or, if worth nothing, give nothing: ſo they weighed for my price thirty pieces of ſilver; the price a ſervant was valued at, Exod. xxi. 32. ſee the fulfilment of this prophecy in Matt. xxvi. 15. The Jews own [k], that this prophecy belongs to the Meſſiah; but wrongly interpret it of thirty precepts given by him: in juſt retaliation and righteous judgment, thirty Jews were ſold by the Romans for a penny, by way of contempt of them [l].

℣. 13. And the Lord ſaid unto me, &c.] The prophet Zechariah, in a viſionary way repreſenting the Sanhedrim of the Jews, the chief prieſts, ſcribes, and elders: caſt it unto the potter; for the purchaſe of his field, in order to make a burying-ground of it for ſtrangers: a goodly price, that I was valued at of them; this is ſarcaſtically ſaid; meaning that it was a very poor price; and ſhowed that they had no notion of the worth and value of Chriſt, the pearl of great price: and I took the thirty pieces of ſilver, and caſt them to the potter in the houſe of the Lord; it is a queſtion with ſome, what theſe pieces of ſilver were; they are commonly underſtood of ſilver ſhekels. So the Targum, in Gen. xx. 16. and xlv. 22. renders pieces of ſilver, by ſhekels of ſilver; and Euſebius [m] calls theſe here thirty ſtaters, the ſame with ſhekels; which, if common ſhekels, reckoned at one ſhilling and three-pence, made but thirty-ſeven ſhillings and ſix-pence; and if ſhekels of the ſanctuary, which at moſt were but two ſhillings and ſix-pence, thirty of theſe would make but three pounds, fifteen ſhillings; and therefore may be truly called, ironically ſpeaking, a goodly price; being no more than the price of a ſervant, as before obſerved: but Druſius objects to this, ſeeing a potter's field was bought with this money; and aſks, who can believe, that a field near ſo populous a city as Jeruſalem, could be bought for thirty ſhekels? and obſerves from R. Elias Levita [n], that it is a rule with their doctors, that all ſilver mentioned in the law, ſignifies ſhekels; in the prophets, pounds; and in the Hagiographa, talents: this is ſaid, but not proved: to underſtand theſe of pounds indeed, would make the price conſiderable and ſufficient for the purchaſe of a large field; for a ſilver maneh or pound with the Jews was of the value of ſixty ſhekels, Ezek. xlv. 12. and thirty of theſe make two hundred and ſeventy pounds; but then this would not in an ironical way be called a goodly price: and as to the objection about the purchaſe of a field with ſuch a ſum of money as thirty ſhekels amount to, it may be obſerved, what Grotius ſeems rightly to conjecture, that this was a field the potter had dug up, and had made the moſt of it, and ſo was good for nothing, but for ſuch an uſe, for which it was bought, to bury ſtrangers in. It is alſo a difficulty to fix it certainly to whom this money was ordered to be given, and was given. It is here ſaid to the potter; but Jarchi and Kimchi obſerve, that ſome of their interpreters render it, the treaſurer; א and י being ſometimes changed for one another; thus, the Targum paraphraſes it, "under the hand of the "treaſurer;" and ſo others [o]; and indeed the money was given to the chief prieſts and elders, ſome of whom might be in that office, Matt. xxvii. 3, 6. tho' there is no need of ſuch an alteration of the word, ſince the money Judas took for betraying Chriſt, and caſt into the temple to the prieſts, they took up, and gave it to the potter, for the field they bought of him with it; and in the evangeliſt, the phraſe by way of explanation is rendered, for the potter's field; and may be here properly enough tranſlated, for the potter; as the particle אל is ſometimes uſed [p]; that is, to be given to him for purchaſe-money [q]: and whereas the money is ſaid to be caſt, or given to him, in the houſe of the Lord, i. e. in the temple, it appears a fact in the accompliſhment of this prophecy, that it was caſt into the temple, Matt. xxvii. 5. and was took up by the prieſts; who, in all probability, ſent for the potter thither, and agreed with him for his field, and paid him his money there; for there is no reaſon to believe, that he had a work-houſe for his buſineſs in the temple; tho' it may be he had one near it; ſee Jer. xviii. 1, 2. and worked for the ſervice of it, ſince earthen veſſels were uſed in temple-ſervice [r]. The accompliſhment of all this is in Matt. xxvii. 7, 8, 9, 10.

℣. 14. Then I cut aſunder mine other ſtaff, even bands, &c.] By which is meant, either the removal of the form of civil government from the Jews; or the abrogation of the Moſaic law, and the carnal ordinances of the Jews, in which Judaizing chriſtians joined them, until the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; or rather the ordinances of the goſpel, which, upon taking that away, ceaſed: that I might break the brotherhood between Judah and Iſrael; the goſpel and goſpel-ordinances being removed from the Jews, there was no more work of converſion among them; their church-ſtate came to nothing, and an entire diſagreement between them and the Gentiles enſued: and ſo it is when God takes away his word and ordinances from a people, they are un-churched, and their brotherhood is broken, thoſe being the bands which keep them together; and therefore when looſed, their unity and ſociety ceaſe. There ſeems to be an alluſion to the caſe of the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, and of the ten tribes; the former are often ſignified by Judah only; and the latter by Iſrael or Ephraim: the diviſion between them was made in the times of Rehoboam, which continued unto their reſpective captivities; after the Jews return from the Babyloniſh captivity, there was ſome ſhew of an union between them; ſome of the ten tribes returning with the Jews, and coaleſcing in one ſtate; and moreover, at their certain ſtated feaſts they came from different parts of the world, and joined together in religious ſervice; ſee Acts ii. but upon the diſſolution of their civil and church-ſtate, this friendly correſpondence was broken off, and their communion with each other ceaſed: and as for the Jews, after the chriſtians were called out from among them at Jeruſalem, and removed to Pella, they fell into inteſtine diviſions and quarrels among themſelves, which laſted during the ſiege of that city; and when it was taken and deſtroyed, their brotherhood and union among themſelves were broken to ſuch a degree, that they were ſcattered one from another; and now know not of what kingdom and tribe they are, whether of Judah or Iſrael, or of what tribe in either.

ỷ. 15. And the Lord ſaid unto me, &c.] The prophet Zechariah: take unto thee yet the inſtruments of a fooliſh ſhepherd; the meaning is, that the prophet ſhould put on the habit of a ſhepherd, and take a ſcrip and ſtaff in his hands, and repreſent a fooliſh ſhepherd, hereafter deſcribed.

ỷ. 16. For lo, I will raiſe up a ſhepherd in the land, &c.] Not in the land of Judea, but in the Roman empire; and ſo not Herod, nor king Agrippa, as Kimchi; nor Antiochus Epiphanes, as others; nor thoſe wicked prieſts and princes, who governed after the times of Zechariah; nor the ſcribes and phariſees in Chriſt's times, tho' they are often called fools by him, and were truly fooliſh ſhepherds; nor even Titus Veſpaſian, who deſtroyed the city and temple; nor Bar Cozba, who ſet up for the Meſſiah, and was a falſe one; or any other of that ſort. Calmet[s] thinks, this deſigns the Roman emperors, ſucceſſors of Tiberius, under whom Jeſus Chriſt was crucified. Caligula ſucceeded Tiberius, Claudius Caligula, and Nero ſucceeded Claudius: every one knows (adds he) the characters of thoſe princes, that they were truly fooliſh ſhepherds, mad, wicked, and cruel: but rather it intends ſhepherd, or ſhepherds, not in a civil, but in an eccleſiaſtic ſenſe; all ſuch after Chriſt, who took upon them this office, but did not perform it aright, as hereticks, falſe teachers, with which the firſt ages abounded; and eſpecially it points at the biſhop of Rome, and all under him, when he fell off from the true doctrine and diſcipline of the goſpel, the man of ſin, or antichriſt, as Jerom rightly obſerves; who, tho' his coming is according to the working of ſatan, yet may be ſaid to be raiſed up by the Lord, becauſe he ſuffered him to riſe; and by his ſecret providence, and wiſe ordination in righteous judgment, he came to the height of his power: with him agrees the name of a ſhepherd; he calls himſelf the vicar of Chriſt, the chief ſhepherd and biſhop of ſouls; Peter's ſucceſſor, who was ordered to feed the ſheep and lambs of Chriſt; and univerſal paſtor, and a ſingle one, that will not admit of any aſſociate. The character of a fooliſh one belongs to him, tho' he would be thought to be wiſe; nor is he wanting in wicked craft and cunning, but ignorant of the paſtoral office, and how to feed the church of God; and is a wicked, or evil ſhepherd, as the word[t] uſed is pretty much the ſame in ſound with our Engliſh word evil; he governing the flock, not with, and according to the word of God, but according to his own will and laws; for his inſtruments are laws of his own making, an exerciſe of tyrannical power over kings and princes, unwritten traditions, pardons, indulgences, &c. which ſhall not viſit thoſe that be cut off; not that cut off themſelves, or are cut off by the church; but ſuch that go aſtray, wander from the fold, and are in danger of being loſt; אובדות, that are periſhing, as Jarchi explains the word; theſe he looks not after, nor has he any regard to their ſpiritual and eternal welfare: neither ſhall ſeek the young one; the Lamb, the tender of the flock; he will not do as the good ſhepherd does, carry the lambs in his arms, Iſ. xl. 11. or, that which wanders[u]; that ſtrays from the fold, and out of the paſtures, or the right way: nor heal that that is broken; that is of a broken and of a contrite ſpirit; or whoſe bones are broken, and conſciences wounded, thro' falls into ſin: nor feed that that ſtandeth ſtill; that can't move from its place to get freſh paſture, but is obliged to ſtay where it is, and needs ſupply and ſupport there: but he ſhall eat the fleſh of the fat; that is, as the Targum well explains it, "ſhall ſpoil the ſubſtance of the "rich;" ſee Rev. xviii. 3, 7: and tear their claws in pieces; take all their power and privileges from them; all which well agrees with the pope of Rome.

ỷ. 17. Wo to the idol-ſhepherd, &c.] Or, the ſhepherd of nothing[w]; that is no true ſhepherd, that is good for nothing, for an idol is nothing in the world, 1 Cor. viii. 4. and who is an idol himſelf, ſits in the temple of God, and is worſhipped as if he was God, 2 Theſſ. ii. 4. Rev. xiii. 4, 8, 15. and is an encourager and defender of idolatry: that leaveth the flock; has no regard to its ſpiritual concerns; does not feed it, but fleece it, and leaves it to the cruelty and avarice of his creatures under him: the ſword ſhall be upon his arm; with which he ſhould feed the flock: and upon his right eye; with which he ſhould watch over it: his arm ſhall be clean dried up; his power ſhall be taken away from him; the antichriſtian ſtates, which ſupported him, ſhall withdraw from him; the ten kings ſhall hate the whore, ſtrip her naked, eat her fleſh, and burn her with fire, Rev. xvii. 16: and his right eye ſhall be utterly darkened; not only given up to judicial blindneſs, which has been always his caſe; but his kingdom ſhall be full of darkneſs, Rev. xvi. 10. his hidden things of darkneſs ſhall be expoſed; all his crafty ſchemes will be confounded; and all his wit, cunning, and ſubtlety will ceaſe; and every thing deſireable to him will be taken away from him. His arm may denote his ſecular power, which ſhall be taken away from him: and his right eye, his knowledge of the ſcriptures, judgment in controverſies, and infallibility pretended to by him, which will ceaſe, even in the opinion of men. Ben Melech interprets it, the eye of his heart or mind; and ſo Aben Ezra.

CHAP.

CHAP. XII.

THIS chapter contains a prophecy of the defence, protection, and ſalvation of the church of God; and of the effuſion of the Spirit; and of the converſion of the Jews in the latter day. It begins with a title and preface, deſcribing the power of God, from the creation of the heavens and earth, and ſoul of man, ℣. 1. then follows the ſubject-matter of the prophecy, in a way of judgment, upon the enemies of the people of God, and in a way of ſalvation to them. The judgments on their enemies are ſignified by various metaphors; by Jeruſalem's being a cup of trembling, a burdenſome ſtone, and an hearth, and torch of fire to them, ℣. 2, 3, 6. The effects of which are to them aſtoniſhment, madneſs, blindneſs, and utter deſtruction; and to the people of God confidence in him, ſalvation from him, and ſtrength and protection by him, ℣. 4, 5, 7, 8. and at the ſame time, that God will deſtroy all the enemies of his people; he will pour out his Spirit upon his choſen ones among the Jews. The conſequence of which will be, their faith in Chriſt, ſignified by looking to him whom they have pierced; and their repentance towards God, expreſſed by mourning; and this illuſtrated by mourning for an only and firſt-born ſon, ℣. 9, 10. and which is further illuſtrated, by the mourning for Joſiah in the valley of Megiddon; and by an enumeration of the ſeveral families in Jeruſalem, that ſhould ſeparately mourn on this account, ℣. 11, 12, 13, 14.

℣. 1. The burden of the word of the Lord for Iſrael, &c.] And againſt their enemies; for the good of the church of God, for its joy, comfort, and ſalvation: or, concerning Iſrael [x], what ſhall befal them in the latter day, as the deſtruction of antichriſt, propheſied of in the preceding chapter; and what is hereafter ſaid, may be believed that it ſhall be accompliſhed. The Lord is deſcribed in the greatneſs of his power, ſpeaking as follows: ſaith the Lord, which ſtretcheth forth the heavens; as a curtain, Pſ. civ. 2. the expanſe or firmament of heaven, which is ſtretched out as a canopy over all the earth around: and layeth the foundation of the earth; firm and ſure, tho' upon the ſeas and floods, yea upon nothing, Pſ. xxiv. 2. Job xxvi. 7: and formeth the ſpirit of man within him; the ſoul of man, with all its powers and faculties, gifts and endowments; which is of his immediate creation, and which he continues daily to form, and infuſe into the bodies of men, and holds in life there; hence he is called the father of ſpirits, Heb. xii. 9.

℣. 2. Behold, I will make Jeruſalem a cup of trembling unto all the people round about, &c.] The Targum renders it, "a veſſel full of inebriating "liquor;" which intoxicates and makes giddy, and cauſes to tremble, ſtagger, and fall like a drunken man. The phraſe denotes the puniſhment inflicted by the Lord upon the enemies of his church and people; ſee Iſ. li. 22, 23: when they ſhall be in the ſiege, both againſt Judah, and againſt Jeruſalem; not by Antiochus Epiphanes; nor by Titus Veſpaſian; nor by Gog and Magog, as Kimchi; but by the antichriſtian powers, eſpecially the Mahometan nations, the Turks, which ſhall come againſt Jeruſalem, when the Jews are returned thither, and re-ſettled in their own land; ſee Ezek. xxxviii. 5, 6. The words ſhould be rendered, and upon Judah ſhall it be [y], i. e. the cup of trembling, in the ſiege againſt Jeruſalem; according to the Targum, and the Jewiſh commentators, the nations of the earth ſhall bring the men of Judah by force to join with them in the ſiege of Jeruſalem; as in the times of Antiochus, many of the Jews were drawn in to fight againſt their brethren; but the meaning is, that not only the wrath of God will come upon the Mahometan nations that ſhall beſiege Jeruſalem; but alſo on thoſe who bear the chriſtian name, who are Jews outwardly, but not inwardly; and ſhall join with the Turks in diſtreſſing the people of the Jews upon their return to their own land: to beſiege Judah, or a country, is not proper and pertinent: Jeruſalem, when again in the hands of the Jews, according to this prophecy, only is to be beſieged, as it will, by the Turks; and it ſhould be obſerved, that it never was beſieged by Antiochus, and therefore the prophecy can't be applied to his times, as it is by many.

℣. 3. And in that day will I make Jeruſalem a burdenſome ſtone for all people, &c.] The Targum renders it, a ſtone of offence; at which they ſhall ſtumble and fall; but it ſeems to deſign the immoveableneſs of the ſtate and condition of Jeruſalem, that thoſe who attempt to remove her out of her place, or to make any alteration in her happy circumſtances, will not be able to do it, Pſ. cxxv. 1. Jerom makes mention of a cuſtom in the cities of Paleſtine, and which continued to his times throughout all Judea, that large, huge, round ſtones uſed to be placed in the towns and villages, which the youths exerciſed themſelves with, by trying to lift them up as high as they could, by which they ſhowed their ſtrength; and the ſame ancient writer obſerves, that a like cuſtom obtained in Greece; for he ſays he himſelf ſaw in the tower at Athens, by the image of Minerva, a globe of braſs, of a very great weight, which he thro' the weakneſs of his body could not move; and aſking the meaning of it, he was told, that the ſtrength of wreſtlers was tried by it; and no man might be admitted a combatant, until it was known by the lifting up of that weight, with whom he ſhould be matched; and the throwing of the diſcus, was an ancient military exerciſe, as old as the times of Homer, who ſpeaks [z] of it; and is mentioned by Latin writers, as appears from ſome lines of Martial [a]; ſee 2 Maccab. iv. 14. and this, as it tried the ſtrength of men, ſo it was ſometimes dangerous to themſelves, or to ſtanders by, leſt it ſhould fall upon their heads: and as it was uſual to defend themſelves, and oppreſs enemies by caſting ſtones at them; ſo young men uſed to exerciſe themſelves by lifting up, and caſting large ſtones; to which Virgil [b] ſometimes refers; and it is well known, that Abimelech was killed even by a woman caſting a piece of a mill-ſtone upon his head, Judg. ix. 53. and ſuch heavy ſtones, and the lifting of them up, in order to caſt them, may be alluded to here: all that burden themſelves with it ſhall be cut in pieces; all that attempt to unſettle and remove it, ſhall be preſſed down with the weight of it, and be utterly deſtroyed: or, ſhall be torn to pieces [c]; as mens hands are cut and torn with rough and heavy ſtones. The Targum is, "all that injure her ſhall be conſumed;" which gives the ſenſe of the paſſage: tho' all the people of the earth be gathered together againſt it; ſo ſafe and ſecure will the people of God be; he being a wall of fire round about them, and the glory in the midſt of them.

℣. 4. In that day, ſaith the Lord, I will ſmite every horſe with aſtoniſhment, and his rider with madneſs, &c.] The meaning is, the enemies of God's people ſhall be aſtoniſhed at the unſucceſsfulneſs of their attempts, and be filled with fury and madneſs, becauſe they cannot accompliſh their deſigns; and ſhall be at their wits end, not knowing what courſe to take: perhaps reference is had to the Turkiſh armies, that ſhall be brought againſt Jeruſalem to recover it into their poſſeſſion, which generally conſiſt of a large cavalry; ſee Rev. ix. 16, 17: and I will open mine eyes upon the houſe of Judah; which phraſe is ſometimes uſed, as expreſſive of the wrath of God againſt his enemies, Amos ix. 4, 8. and, if the houſe of Judah ſignifies the ſame as Judah, joined with the nations of the earth in the ſiege, ℣. 2. it muſt be ſo underſtood here; but rather it ſeems to be different, and to intend thoſe who will inhabit other parts of Judea, and who will be truly the people of God, Jews not only literally, but ſpiritually; and ſo is to be interpreted in a good ſenſe, of the divine love to them, care of them, and protection over them; ſee Job xiv. 3. and ſo the Targum paraphraſes it, "and upon thoſe of the houſe of Judah, I will "reveal my power to do them good:" and will ſmite every horſe of the people with blindneſs; that is, every rider of them, either with blindneſs of mind or body, or both. It may be, as the former ſmiting, mentioned in the beginning of the verſe, reſpects the mind, this may regard the body; ſo that they ſhall not ſee their way, and their hands ſhall not perform their enterpriſe.

℣. 5. And the governors of Judah ſhall ſay in their heart, &c.] The governors of the reſt of the cities in Judea, beſides Jeruſalem, when they ſhall obſerve the armies of the people, their horſes and their riders, ſmitten by the Lord, as above, ſhall take heart, and be of good courage: and ſecretly ſay within themſelves, the inhabitants of Jeruſalem ſhall be my ſtrength in the Lord of hoſts their God; that is, they, in the ſtrength of the Lord ſhall overcome their enemies, and ſo be the means of preſerving and ſecuring the other cities of Judah from deſtruction: the governors don't place their ſtrength and confidence in the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, but as they are ſtrengthened in, and by the Lord their God, from whom all ſtrength, ſafety and ſalvation come. In this and the following verſe, by the governors of Judah, are not meant Judas Maccabæus and his brethren, as ſome think; for tho' there are ſome things in the context that ſeem to agree with them, and they may be an emblem of the governors in the times referred to, for their courage, bravery, and ſucceſs; yet the thread of hiſtory, and ſeries of prophecy, will not admit ſuch a ſenſe.

℣. 6. In that day will I make the governors of Judah like a hearth of fire among the wood, &c.] As a large hearth of fire, with wood all about it, devours and conſumes it; ſo ſhall the governors of Judah be to the nations that ſhall come up againſt Jeruſalem. The Targum renders it, "as a gar-"ment of fire among wood:" and like a torch of fire in a ſheaf; of wheat, which preſently deſtroys it; ſee Obad. ℣. 18: and they ſhall devour all the people round about on the right-hand, and on the left; on the ſouth, and on the north, as the Targum interprets it. The phraſe denotes the utter deſtruction of the people on all ſides: and Jeruſalem ſhall be inhabited again in her own place, even in Jeruſalem; upon that very ſpot of ground, which was formerly called Jeruſalem, ſhall the city be built again, and inhabited; and ſhall continue, notwithſtanding the attempts of all the nations of the earth to deſtroy it; ſee Jer. xxx. 18.

℣. 7. The Lord alſo ſhall ſave the tents of Judah firſt, &c.] That is, the Jews, who will be in other parts of the land encamped in tents, to defend themſelves againſt their enemies; theſe will be ſaved out of the hands of them, before the inhabitants of Jeruſalem will be ſaved; and in ſuch a manner, that it will evidently appear that their ſalvation is of the Lord: and his end in ſo doing will be, that the glory of the houſe of David, and the glory of the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, do not magnify themſelves againſt Judah; leſt the chief of the family of David, and the principal inhabitants of Jeruſalem, ſhould glory over their brethren in other parts of Judea; and ſay, it was owing to them, that they were ſaved and delivered out of the hands of their enemies.

℣. 8. In that day ſhall the Lord defend the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, &c.] As with a ſhield againſt their enemies; and ſuch is the Lord to all his people; he is their ſhield to protect them; he keeps and guards them by his power; he encompaſſes them about with his favour, as with a ſhield; and gives unto them the ſhield of ſalvation; all which will eminently appear to be the caſe of the Jews at this time: and he that is feeble among them at that day, ſhall be as David; they that have the moſt fearful hearts, and feeble minds, ſhall be as courageous, as valiant, and as victorious as David; and they that are the weakeſt, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, in the grace, and in the doctrine of faith, and in that part of it, reſpecting the uſe of things indifferent, who are ready to be offended, ſtumble, and fall [d]; for the ſpiritual reign, which will at this time take place, will not be a ſtate of perfection; even thoſe will be like David, beloved of the Lord, kings, as well as prieſts unto God, and as ſtrong in faith as he: and the houſe of David ſhall be as God; the ſtronger ſort of belivers among them, ſuch as are ſtrong in the Lord, in the grace of faith, and in the doctrines of the goſpel; they ſhall have much of God with them, great grace upon them, and be like unto him in goodneſs, truth, and holineſs: or they ſhall be like Elohim, the angels, as this word is rendered, Pſ. viii. 5. for knowledge, purity, and readineſs to do the will of God; and it follows: as the angel of the Lord before them; that is, as Chriſt, who is the angel of the covenant, and of the divine preſence; and in whom the name of the Lord is; who is at the head of his people, and goes before them, as their leader and commander, and the captain of ſalvation, Mic. ii. 13. whoſe image they bear, and into which they are changed from glory to glory by the Spirit of God; and which will now be very clearly diſcerned upon the ſaints in the latter day-glory. Kimchi and Ben Melech, by the houſe of David, underſtand the king Meſſiah [e], who was to be of the ſeed of David; and ſo does Cocceius, who takes the as, to be a note, not of ſimilitude, but of truth, he being truly God, and the angel of Jehovah. The Targum is, "the houſe of David "ſhall be like great men or princes that ſhall "proſper, as the angel of God before them."

℣. 9. And it ſhall come to paſs in that day, &c.] So often mentioned in this chapter; by which is meant, the latter part of the goſpel-diſpenſation, the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt: that I will ſeek to deſtroy all the nations that come againſt Jeruſalem; and ſhall deſtroy them. The whole of this paragraph ſeems to refer to the ſame as in Ezek. xxxviii. 39.

℣. 10. And I will pour out upon the houſe of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, &c.] The Jews that belong to the family of Chriſt, and to the heavenly Jeruſalem, the church of the firſtborn, whoſe names are written in heaven: the ſpirit of grace and of ſupplications; by which is meant, the holy Spirit of God, who is called the ſpirit of grace; not merely becauſe he is good and gracious, and loving to his people, and is of grace given unto them; but becauſe he is the author of all grace in them; of gracious convictions, and ſpiritual illuminations; of quickning, regenerating, converting, and ſanctifying grace; and of all particular graces, as faith, hope, love, fear, repentance, humility, joy, peace, meekneſs, patience, longſuffering, ſelf-denial, &c. as well as becauſe he is the revealer, applier, and witneſſer of all the bleſſings of grace unto them: and he is called the ſpirit of ſupplications; becauſe he endites the prayers of his people, ſhews them their wants, and ſtirs them up to pray; enlarges their hearts, ſupplies them with arguments, and puts words into their mouths; gives faith, fervency and freedom, and encourages to come to God as their Father, and makes interceſſion for them, according to the will of God: pouring it upon them, denotes the abundance and freeneſs of his grace; ſee Iſ. xliv. 3: and they ſhall look upon me, whom they have pierced; by nailing him to the tree at his crucifixion; and eſpecially by piercing his ſide with a ſpear; which, tho' not perſonally done by them, yet by their anceſtors, at leaſt thro' their inſtigation and requeſt; and beſides, as he was pierced and wounded for their ſins, ſo by them: and now being enlightened and convicted by the Spirit of God, they ſhall look to him by faith, for the pardon of their ſins, thro' his blood; for the juſtification of their perſons by his righteouſneſs, and for eternal life and ſalvation thro' him. We chriſtians can have no doubt upon us, that this paſſage belongs to Chriſt, when it is obſerved upon one of the ſoldiers piercing the ſide of Jeſus with a ſpear, it is ſaid, theſe things were done that the ſcripture ſhould be fulfilled; they ſhall look on him, whom they have pierced, and it ſeems alſo to be referred to in Rev. i. 7. yea, the Jews themſelves, ſome of them acknowledge, it is to be underſtood of the Meſſiah. In the Talmud [f], mention being made of the mourning after ſpoken of, it is aſked, what this mourning was made for? and it is replied, R. Duſa and the Rabbins are divided about it: one ſays, for Meſſiah ben Joſeph, who ſhall be ſlain; and another ſays, for the evil imagination, that ſhall be ſlain; it muſt be granted to him that ſays, for Meſſiah the ſon of Joſeph that ſhall be ſlain; as it is written, and they ſhall look upon me, whom they have pierced, and mourn, &c. for, for the other, why ſhould they mourn? hence Jarchi and Kimchi on the place ſay, our Rabbins interpret this of Meſſiah the ſon of Joſeph, who ſhall be ſlain; and the note of Aben Ezra is, all the nations ſhall look unto me, to ſee what I will do to thoſe who have pierced Meſſiah the ſon of Joſeph. Grotius obſerves, that Hadarſan on Gen. xxviii. underſtands it of Meſſiah the ſon of David. The Jews obſerving ſome prophecies ſpeaking of the Meſſiah in a ſtate of humiliation, and others of him in an exalted ſtate, have coined this notion of two Meſſiahs, which are eaſily reconciled without it. The Meſſiah here propheſied of, appears to be both God and man; a divine perſon called Jehovah, who is all along ſpeaking in the context, and in the text itſelf; for none elſe could pour out the ſpirit of grace and ſupplication; and yet he muſt be man, to be pierced; and the ſame is ſpoken of, that would do the one, and ſuffer the other; and therefore muſt be the Θεανθρωπος, or God-man in one perſon. As to what a Jewiſh writer [g] objects, that this is ſpoken of one that was pierced in war, as appears from the context; and that if the ſame perſon that is pierced is to be looked to, then it would have been ſaid, and mourn for me, and be in bitterneſs for me: it may be replied, that this prophecy does not ſpeak of the piercing this perſon at the time when the above wars ſhall be; but of the Jews mourning for him at the time of their converſion, who had been pierced by them, that is, by their anceſtors, hundreds of years ago; which now they will with contrition remember, they having aſſented to it, and commended it as a right action; and as for the change from the firſt perſon to the third, this is not at all unuſual in ſcripture: and they ſhall mourn for him as one mourneth for his only ſon; or, for this [h]; that is, piercing him; for ſin committed againſt him; becauſe of their rejection of him, their hardneſs of heart, and unbelief with reſpect to him; and on account of their many ſins, which were the occaſion of his being pierced; which mourning will ariſe from, and be increaſed by, a ſpiritual ſight of him, a ſenſe of his love to them, and a view of benefits by him. Evangelical repentance ſprings from faith, and is accompanied with it; and this godly ſorrow is like that which is expreſſed for an only ſon; ſee Amos viii. 10. Luke vii. 12. and indeed Chriſt is the only-begotten of the Father, as well as the firſt-born among many brethren, as follows: and ſhall be in bitterneſs for him, as one that is in bitterneſs for his firſt-born; ſin is a bitter thing, and makes work for bitter repentance.

℣. 11. In that day ſhall there be a great mourning in Jeruſalem, &c.] Great numbers being awakened, convinced, and converted, and brought to true repentance: as the mourning of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megiddon. Lightfoot[i] thinks the prophet alludes to the two great and general lamentations of Iſrael; the one about the rock Rimmon, where a whole tribe was come to 400 (it ſhould be 600) men, Judg. xx. 47. and may be rendered, the ſad ſhout of Rimmon; and the other in the valley of Megiddo, for the death of Joſiah. Some take Hadadrimmon to be the name of a man, as Aben Ezra; and the Targum and Jarchi ſay who he was, and alſo make two mournings to be alluded to[k]; paraphraſing the words thus, "at that time mourning " ſhall be multiplied in Jeruſalem, as the mourning of Ahab the ſon of Omri, whom Hadadrimmon the ſon of Tabrimmon ſlew in Ramoth-Gilead; " and as the mourning of Joſiah the ſon of Amon, " whom Pharaoh Necho, or the lame, ſlew in the " valley of Megiddo:" and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, "as the mourning of the ſon of Amon " in the valley of Megiddo." Of the firſt of theſe, ſee 1 Kings xxii. 31—37. and of the latter, 2 Kings xxiii. 29. according to Jerom, it was the name of a place in the valley of Megiddo near to Jezreel; and which, in his time, went by the name of Maximianopolis, called ſo in honour of the emperor Maximian; it was ſeventeen miles from Cæſarea in Paleſtine, and ten miles from Jezreel[l]: and mention is made by Jewiſh[m] writers of the valley of Rimmon, in which place the elders intercalated the year; tho' Jerom elſewhere[n] ſays, that Adadrimon was a king, the ſon of Tabrimmon, who reigned at Carchemiſh, whom Pharaoh Necho ſlew, at the ſame time he ſlew Joſiah. Both words, Hadad or Adad and Rimmon, are names of idols with the Syrians.

℣. 12. And the land ſhall mourn, &c.] That is, the inhabitants of it; not only Jeruſalem, but the land of Judea, and the people in it every where: in the Talmud[o], 'tis ſaid, this is the mourning of the Meſſiah, that is, on his account: every family apart; tho' the mourning will be general and public, yet it will be not in a body of the whole people together, but ſeparate and diſtinct: the family of the houſe of David apart, and their wives apart; the men by themſelves, and the women by themſelves, which is according to the cuſtom of the Jews in public worſhip; thoſe that belong to the family of David, ſhall mourn becauſe of the Jews long rejection of the king Meſſiah, Jeſus the Son of David, the Saviour, whom God raiſed up of his ſeed: the family of the houſe of Nathan apart, and their wives apart; not of Nathan the Son of David, the brother of Solomon, as ſome think; for as Aben Ezra obſerves, he and his family are comprehended in the family of David; but of Nathan the prophet, who will mourn becauſe the Jews have ſo much ſlighted Jeſus the great prophet, the Lord raiſed up in Iſrael, his doctrines and ordinances.

℣. 13. The family of the houſe of Levi apart, and their wives apart, &c.] Becauſe of the contempt of the prieſtly office of Chriſt, which theirs prefigured, and was aboliſhed by his; becauſe of their trampling upon his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice: the family of Shimei apart, and their wives apart; not of Shimea the ſon of David, 1 Chron. iii. 5. as Jarchi thinks, for his family is comprehended in the family of David; nor of Shimei the ſon of Merari, and grandſon of Levi, 1 Chron. vi. 16. for the ſame reaſon: ſome think, that by way of prophecy the family of Semei, mentioned among the progenitors of Chriſt, Luke iii. 26. is intended; and others have thought of Shammai, a famous Miſnic doctor in the times of Chriſt, whoſe diſciples were called the houſe or family of Shammai, of which frequent mention is made in the Miſna and Talmud: but the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic verſions read, the family of Simeon; mentioned together with Levi, as brethren in iniquity, and now mourn for the common concern they had in the crucifixion of Chriſt, and their refuſal of him.

℣. 14. All the families that remain, &c.] That will be in being in thoſe times: every family apart, and their wives apart; for the whole nation ſhall be born at once, and converted, and all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved, Iſ. lxvi. 8. Rom. xi. 26.

CHAP. XIII.

IN this chapter are prophecies concerning the purification of the penitent Jews before ſpoken of; the removal of idols, and falſe prophets, out of the earth; the death of Chriſt; the deſtruction of the greater part of men, and the ſalvation of a few of them. The cleanſing of ſuch that mourn for ſin, in a fountain opened for that purpoſe, is ſpoken of, ℣. 1. the utter abolition of idols, and falſe prophets, and unclean ſpirits, is affirmed, ℣. 2. the parents of falſe prophets will forbid them to propheſy; they themſelves will be aſhamed of their viſions; they'll throw off the rough garment, which was a token of their being prophets, and by which they deceived; they'll confeſs they are no prophets, and what they are, and own the wounds they have received from their friends on that account, ℣. 3, 4, 5, 6. and whereas the Meſſiah, as pierced and crucified, is ſpoken of in the preceding chapter, whoſe blood is the cleanſing fountain mentioned in this, an account is given of his death; who is deſcribed by his office, the ſhepherd of the Lord; and by his natures, human and divine, the man his fellow; his death is ſignified by ſmiting with the ſword, which was done by the order of the Lord; the conſequences of which were the ſcattering of the ſheep, and the turning of the hand of the Lord upon them in a way of mercy, ℣. 7. and then it is declared, that two parts in three of the land ſhould be cut off, and a third part ſaved, but yet ſo as by fire, whom the Lord would own as his people, and they ſhould acknowledge him to be their God, ℣. 8, 9.

℣. 1. In that day there ſhall be a fountain opened, &c.] Which Aben Ezra and Kimchi underſtand literally; but R. Moſes the prieſt figuratively; and ſo the Targum, which interprets it of the doctrine of the law being open as a fountain of water; and ſo Abendana, who compares it with Iſ. ii. 3. but rather it ſhould be underſtood of the preaching of the goſpel, and the adminiſtration of goſpel-ordinances; tho' better of Chriſt himſelf, the fountain of gardens, and of living waters, from whoſe pierced ſide, of whom mention is made as pierced in the preceding chapter, ſprung blood and water; blood for juſtification, remiſſion, and cleanſing, and water for ſanctification: and beſt of all of his blood particularly, called a fountain, not ſo much for the quantity of blood ſhed, as for its full virtue and efficacy to anſwer the purpoſes for which it was ſhed; it being the blood not only of man, and of an innocent man, but of the Son of God; and may be ſaid to be opened, becauſe of its continued virtue to cleanſe from ſin; it is not ſealed, but opened, and always ſtands open; there is no hindrance or obſtruction in coming to it; not the meanneſs or poverty of perſon, they that have no money may come to theſe waters; nor their ſinfulneſs, even tho' they are the chief of ſinners; nor their being of this and the other nation, it is expoſed to all; to all that the Father has given to Chriſt; to all ſenſible ſinners: tho' it follows, to the houſe of David, and to the inhabitants of Jeruſalem; for this, as it may be literally underſtood of the Jews in the latter day, including their great men and common people, high and low, rich and poor; ſo myſtically of all the family of Chriſt the Son of David, and of all that belong to the heavenly Jeruſalem, even the whole church of the firſt-born, whoſe names are written in heaven: for ſin, and for uncleanneſs; that is, for ſin, which is uncleanneſs; ſin is an unclean thing, and has defiled all human nature, and nothing can remove the pollution of it; but the blood of Chriſt can remove it, and that being ſhed makes atonement for it, procures the pardon of it, and juſtifies from it in the ſight of God; and being ſprinkled on the conſcience, removes it from that. The Targum interprets it myſtically of the forgiveneſs of ſins, paraphraſing it thus, "I will forgive their iniquities, as they are cleanſed with the water of "ſprinkling, and the aſhes of the heifer, which is "for ſin."

℣. 2. And it ſhall come to paſs in that day, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, &c.] In the latter day, at the time of the converſion of the Jews, when they ſhall turn to the Lord, and their ſins ſhall be forgiven, and waſhed away in the fountain of his blood; for this refers not to the times of the Babyloniſh captivity, and their deliverance from that, which was now over, when idolatry ceaſed among that people; nor to the times of Chriſt, when ſoon after the falſe prophets among the heathens, and their lying oracles, ceaſed, and paganiſm in the Roman empire was deſtroyed; but to the times beforementioned, of which it is predicted by the Lord, ſaying, that I will cut off the names of the idols out of the land, and they ſhall no more be remembred; meaning the idols of gold, ſilver, braſs, and wood; images of the virgin Mary, and ſaints departed, worſhipped by the papiſts, Rev. ix. 20, 21. for at this time myſtical Babylon will fall, the idolatry of the church of Rome will be at an end, and will never be revived more: and alſo I will cauſe the prophets, and the unclean ſpirit, to paſs out of the land; by the prophets are meant falſe prophets, as the Targum explains it, even all the popiſh hierarchy, pope, cardinals, archbiſhops, biſhops, prieſts, &c. all that wretched body, which goes by the name of the falſe prophet, who at the battle of Armageddon will be taken, and with the beaſt caſt alive into the lake of fire, Rev. xix. 20. and by the unclean ſpirit, or ſpirits, the ſingular for the plural, are meant the three unclean ſpirits like frogs, and which are the ſpirits of devils, that come out of the mouth of the dragon, beaſt, and falſe prophet, the jeſuits, monks, and friars; theſe ſhall be no more then on the earth, after theſe times, Rev. xvi. 13, 14. Jarchi and Kimchi interpret the unclean ſpirit of the corruption of nature; but that will not ceaſe, as long as men are in a mortal ſtate. This prophecy is, by the ancient Jews [p], applied to the times of the Meſſiah.

℣. 3. And it ſhall come to paſs, that when any ſhall yet propheſy, &c.] Or attempt to propheſy, or propagate their idolatrous religion and principles after this time, when they ſhall be abundantly detected and expoſed: then his father and his mother that begat him; of whom he is born, and who as his parents muſt be ſuppoſed to have the moſt tender regard unto him, even to theſe, the impoſture will be ſo flagrant, that they will not encourage him, but on the contrary, ſhall ſay unto him, thou ſhalt not live; but die, according to the law againſt the falſe prophet in Deut. xviii. 20: for thou ſpeakeſt lies in the name of the Lord; which is the very character of the followers of the man of ſin, who ſpeak lies in hypocriſy, pretending that they are of God, and carrying a ſhew of truth, religion, and holineſs, 1 Tim. iv. 1, 2: and his father and his mother that begat him, ſhall thruſt him through when he propheſieth; ſo great will be their love to God, and to his truth, that notwithſtanding the nearneſs of blood, their hands will be upon him firſt, and either beat him, or put him to death; a ſon, according to the law, not being to be ſpared in ſuch a caſe, Deut. xiii. 6—10.

℣. 4. And it ſhall come to paſs in that day, that the prophets ſhall be aſhamed, every one of his viſion, when he hath propheſied, &c.] He ſhall be aſhamed of the doctrines he has delivered, they will appear to all men ſo ridiculous and abſurd; as the doctrines of merit, and the works of ſupererogation; of tranſubſtantiation and purgatory; of pardons, penance, &c: neither ſhall they wear a rough garment to deceive; or a hairy garment [q]; ſuch as the firſt and ancient inhabitants of the earth wore, who uſed the ſkins of beaſts for covering, as Diodorus Siculus [r] obſerves: and Pauſanias [s] ſays of the firſt natives of Locris, not knowing how to weave and make garments, uſed to cover their bodies to preſerve them from the cold, with the undreſſed ſkins of beaſts, turning the hair outward as more becoming: and ſuch an hairy garment, or much like it, Elijah wore; hence he is called an hairy man, 2 Kings i. 8. and John the Baptiſt, who came in the power and ſpirit of that prophet, appeared in a like habit, clothed with camel's hair, Matt. iii. 4. and in like manner good men, eſpecially in times of diſtreſs and trouble, uſed to wander about in ſheep-ſkins and goat-ſkins, Heb. xi. 37. which ſeem to be the ſame ſort of raiment: and now, in imitation of ſuch like good men, and true prophets of the Lord, particularly Elijah, the falſe prophets, as Jarchi and Kimchi obſerve, in order to deceive the people, and paſs for true prophets, put on ſuch rough and hairy garments, as if they were very humble and ſelf-denying men. Braunius [t] thinks, the prophet may have reſpect to a cuſtom among the idolatrous prophets, who uſed to clothe themſelves with the ſkins of the ſacrifices, and lie on them in their temples, in order to obtain dreams, and be able to foretel future things; of which ſee the note on Amos ii. 8. but it ſeems to have reſpect to the habits of the monks and friars, and of the different orders by which they are diſtinguiſhed as religious perſons, and gain reſpect and veneration among men; and under the guiſe of ſanctity and devotion, and of an auſtere and mortified life, impoſe their lies and deceptions upon them; but now will lay their habits aſide, as being aſhamed of their profeſſion and principles.

℣. 5. But he ſhall ſay, I am no prophet, &c.] That he is not of the Romiſh clergy, or of any of their religious orders, having laid aſide his habit: I am an huſbandman; he ſhall put on the habit of a huſbandman, and work for his bread; for he'll not be able to ſupport himſelf, as before, with the ſale of pardons and indulgences, and by praying ſouls out of purgatory; for no man hereafter will buy of his merchandiſe, Rev. xviii. 11. and he'll be aſhamed of his former calling and traffic, and will not own that he was ever concerned therein; but will affirm that he was never of the Romiſh clergy, but always a layman, and employed in huſbandry: for man taught me to keep cattel from my youth; he will ſay he was brought up to huſbandry, or in ſome mechanic buſineſs from his youth, and never was in any convent or monaſtery, or of any religious order: it may be rendered, for man made me to work from my youth [u]; and is not to be reſtrained to keeping cattel, or any particular employment.

℣. 6. And one ſhall ſay unto him, what are theſe wounds in thine hands? &c.] That is, if thou art not a prophet, what's the meaning of theſe wounds in thine hands? which deſign either thoſe his father and mother had given him, when they thruſt him through for being a falſe prophet, ℣. 3. or the mark of the beaſt he received in his right-hand, which he was obliged to take, when he entred into holy orders, Rev. xiii. 9, 16, 17. or the wounds and ſtripes he gave himſelf, in the exerciſe of his ſuperſtition and will-worſhip: then he ſhall anſwer, thoſe with which I was wounded in the houſe of my friends; he will pretend that theſe were wounds he had privately in his father's family, by way of correction, for not doing his civil and ſecular buſineſs as he ought to have done; or he ſhall be obliged to confeſs the mark of the beaſt on him; or that theſe were wounds he had given himſelf in the temples and churches, dedicated to angels and ſaints, his patrons, friends, and lovers; with whom he committed ſpiritual adultery or idolatry, and before whoſe images and ſhrines he had cut and given himſelf theſe wounds and gaſhes, to the great diſhonour of Chriſt, as if his crucifixion and wounds were of no avail; wherefore his ſufferings and death are next ſpoken of: and ſome underſtand theſe words of Chriſt, introduced after this manner; the prophet having ſpoken of the falſe prophet, thruſt through by his parents, becauſe that Chriſt would be reckoned a falſe prophet and impoſtor by his countrymen the Jews, and be crucified by them as ſuch; repreſents the Jews as upbraiding him with his crucifixion, which they ſuggeſt he righteouſly ſuffered, for ſeducing their nation: to which he replies, that indeed he was crucified, and thereby wounded with the nails drove into his hands and feet; and this uſage he met with from thoſe of his own nation, and who pretended to be the friends of the Meſſiah, and to expect his coming, and this at or near Jeruſalem, where was the temple or houſe of God; but all this he endured, not for any crime he had been guilty of, but according to the counſel and will, purpoſe and decree of God; whereby he was appointed the ſhepherd of the flock; the Mediator between God and man; the Saviour of his people; and to die ſuch a death, in order to obtain ſalvation for them; which counſel and will of God are clearly and ſtrongly expreſſed in the following verſe: and to this ſenſe Capellus interprets the words.

℣. 7. Awake, O ſword, againſt my ſhepherd, &c.] Not Judas Maccabæus, ſlain in battel by Bacchis [w], as Grotius fanſies; but Chriſt, Jehovah's ſhepherd; for theſe are the words of Jehovah the Father, concerning his Son, whom he calls my ſhepherd; becauſe he has a property in him, as well as in the flock; and he was choſen, called, ſet up, and ſent as ſuch by him; on whom he laid the ſtrayings of all the ſheep; and who as ſuch died and roſe again, and is accountable to his divine Father for the flock committed to him: by the ſword awoke againſt him, are meant either the ſorrows and afflictions of Chriſt, which like a ſword pierced thro' his ſoul; or the violent death he was put to, being ſtricken and cut off for the tranſgreſſions of his people; or the Jews, who were the inſtruments of it; ſo wicked men are called, Pſ. xvii. 13. or rather the glittering ſword of juſtice, which was drawn againſt him, and ſheathed in him; which is called upon to awake, it ſeeming as tho' it was aſleep; it having been a long time ſince the firſt ſin of Adam was committed, in which all his poſterity was concerned, and for which ſatisfaction to divine juſtice muſt be made; and longer ſtill, ſince Chriſt became a ſurety, and engaged to do it; moreover, it was a great while ſince it was promiſed that he ſhould come, and be ſmitten and wounded for ſin; and after he was come into the world, it was ſome time before the orders were given to this ſword to awake againſt him: even againſt the man that is my fellow, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; the human nature of Chriſt is ſignified by the man; not that he was really man before his incarnation, only in the purpoſe and covenant of God; and he often appearing in an human form; and the ſcripture ſpeaking of things future as preſent; tho' here it regards him in the days of his fleſh, and as ſuffering: his divine nature is expreſſed by being the fellow of the Lord of hoſts; not only being near to him in place and affection, but his equal, being truly a divine perſon; of the ſame nature, glory, and majeſty with him [x], tho' diſtinct from him; and ſo fit to be the ſhepherd of the flock: ſmite the ſhepherd; the order is given to the ſword of juſtice, by the Lord of hoſts, to ſmite the Meſſiah, the ſhepherd, even unto death: this was according to his purpoſe; was his will of command; agreeable to his mind; what he took a kind of pleaſure in, and in which he had an hand himſelf; for it is rendered, I will ſmite, Matt. xxvi. 31: and the ſheep ſhall be ſcattered; particularly the apoſtles, who upon the ſeizure of Chriſt were ſcattered from him, and one another, whereby this prophecy was fulfilled, Matt. xxvi. 31, 56: and I will turn my hand upon the little ones; the ſame with the ſheep, the diſciples of Chriſt [y]; yea, all that Chriſt died for, and to whom God is gracious for his ſake; even all the little ones that believe in him; who are few in number, little in their own ſight, and contemptible in the eyes of the world; puſillanimous, fearful, and of little faith, as the apoſtles of Chriſt were at the time he died: on theſe the Lord turned his hand; not his chaſtizing hand, though that is ſometimes on the ſaints; much leſs his hand of juſtice, which was laid on Chriſt, and it would have been unjuſt to have laid it on ſinner and ſurety both; but his hand of grace and mercy, power and protection; which was upon the apoſtles in their miniſtrations, ſucceeding them to the converſion of ſinners, and preſerving them from their enemies; and all the elect are ſaved in conſequence of the death of Chriſt, and redemption by him. Aben Ezra ſays, this prophecy refers to the great wars which ſhall be in all the earth in the times of Meſſiah ben Joſeph; but they regard the times of Chriſt the Son of David, who is already come. The Targum is, "be revealed, O ſword, againſt the king, and againſt the ruler his companion, who is like unto him;" and Jarchi interprets it of the king of Moab; and Aben Ezra of every king of the nations that ſhall in the above times reign over the earth, who thinks himſelf to be as God; which ſenſe Kimchi approves of, and obſerves, that the little ones are governors and princes, who are leſs than kings: and another Jewiſh writer [z] ſays the ſenſe is, awake, O ſword, againſt the king of Iſhmael, who is called the king of the Turks (the grand Seignior) that rules over Aſia and Africa; which are more than three fourths of the world, and the greater part of the Jewiſh nation are in captivity under his hand; him God calls his ſhepherd, becauſe he hath given into his hand to feed his flock in their captivity, and this flock is the nation of Iſrael; and he is called the man his fellow, becauſe he thinks himſelf, thro' the pride and haughtineſs of his heart, to be as God; and upon the ruin of this prince, he ſuppoſes, will be the deliverance of the Jews, who being ſcattered into ſeveral parts, will in ſeparate bodies return to their own land: and by the little ones he thinks are meant, the kings of the nations of Edom, or of the Roman nations, which are the leſſer paſtors of the ſheep. Manaſſeh ben Iſrael [a] makes mention of the ſame expoſition of the paſſage, but is of opinion, that the words are rather to be underſtood of the pope of Rome, who calls himſelf a paſtor, and next to God, and his vicar on earth; and againſt him and thoſe like to him, inferior in power, God will make war. But much more agreeable, and very remarkable, are the words of R. Samuel Marochianus [b], who writing of the coming of the Meſſiah, ſays, "I fear, O my Lord, that that which Zechariah the prophet ſaid, I will ſmite the ſhepherd, and the ſheep of the flock ſhall be ſcattered, was fulfilled, when we ſmote the ſhepherd of thoſe little ones and holy apoſtles." Moreover, it may be obſerved, that the word for little ones, ſometimes ſignifies great ones, as Mr. Pocock [c] has obſerved, and particularly in this text; which, according to the ſenſe ſome give of it, mentioned by R. Tanchum, is, I will turn mine hand upon the illuſtrious and the princes, and not upon the little ones, as commonly underſtood; and which he takes to be the beſt of the expoſitions adduced: and with this agree the ſeveral Oriental verſions; ſome copies of the Septuagint read, upon the ſhepherds; and ſo the Arabic verſion; and the Syriac verſion renders it, the ſuperiors; and ſo may very well be applied to the apoſtles of Chriſt, who were in the higheſt office in the church, and ſhepherds of the flock; on whom, after the death of Chriſt, God turned his hand of power, which was upon them, and was with them in their miniſtrations, making them ſucceſsful wherever they went; and alſo his hand of providence was upon them, protecting and preſerving them, until they had done the work they were ſent about. After this prophecy concerning the Meſſiah, occaſionally inſerted here, the prophet returns to his prediction of the ſtate of the church, and what ſhall befal it in the latter day.

CHAP. XIV.

THIS chapter treats of the coming of Chriſt with all his ſaints, and his perſonal appearance among them; and of the ſigns of the times before that; and of what ſhall befal the enemies of the church, both open and ſecret; and of the happy ſtate and condition of the church itſelf. Firſt there will be a time of great affliction to the people of God, ℣. 1, 2. when the Lord will appear and fight for them, and will appear to them, and with them, ℣. 3, 4, 5. but before this time it will be an uncommon ſeaſon, neither day nor night; at the cloſe of which, light will break forth, ℣. 6, 7. the goſpel will be ſpread far and near, attended with the Spirit and grace of God in great plenty, ℣. 8. which will bring on the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt over all the earth, ℣. 9. particularly the land of Judea, and the city of Jeruſalem, ſhall be inhabited by men with ſafety, ℣. 10, 11. and all thoſe that oppoſe and fight againſt the Lord's people ſhall be deſtroyed, partly by an immediate plague from the Lord upon them, and partly by the hands of one another, and alſo by the ſaints of the Moſt High; and the plague ſhall not only be upon their perſons, but upon their cattel likewiſe, ℣. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. and as for thoſe that profeſs the chriſtian name, and yet neglect or refuſe to worſhip the Lord in a ſpiritual and evangelical manner, there ſhall be no rain upon them, ℣. 17, 18, 19. and as for the church and people of God, there ſhall be univerſal holineſs among them, and not a ſingle Canaanite to be found in the midſt of them, ℣. 20, 21.

℣. 1. Behold the day of the Lord cometh, &c.] Or the day when the Lord will come, both in his ſpiritual and perſonal reign; for this is not to be underſtood of his firſt coming in the fleſh, at which time none of the things after-mentioned happened; nor of his coming to take vengeance on the Jews; but rather of his coming to convert them: and thy ſpoil ſhall be divided in the midſt of thee; not the ſubſtance of the nations, divided by the Iſraelites in the midſt of Jeruſalem, as the Targum and Jarchi interpret it; but the ſpoil of Jeruſalem, when taken by the enemy, as is after ſaid, which ſhould be divided by them with great joy and triumph, in the midſt of it: this refers not to the ſpoil of Jeruſalem by Antiochus or the Romans, but to the ſlaying of the witneſſes, and the triumph of their enemies over them, Rev. xi. 7, 10. or elſe to the ſpoil and prey the Turks will come to Jeruſalem for, when it ſhall be in the poſſeſſion of the Jews; and who perhaps at firſt will have ſome ſucceſs; ſee Ezek. xxxviii. 12, 13.

℣. 2. For I will gather all nations againſt Jeruſalem to battel, &c.] Meaning not the Romans, in the time of Veſpaſian, for they were not all nations; nor did a part of the city only go into captivity then, but the whole; nor did any remain in it: it ſeems right to refer it to the gathering of the kings of the earth to the battel of the Lord God Almighty at Armageddon, Rev. xvi. 14—16. unleſs it may be thought better to interpret it of the vaſt numbers out of ſeveral nations, the Turk will bring againſt Jeruſalem, to diſpoſſeſs the Jews of it, by whom it will be again inhabited in the latter day; ſee Ezek. xxxviii. 4—8. and Kimchi interprets it of the Gog and Magog-army. The Jews, in their ancient Midraſhes[a], apply it to the times of the Meſſiah; which is true, if underſtood, not of the firſt times of the Meſſiah, whoſe coming they vainly expect, but of the laſt times of the Meſſiah. And the city ſhall be taken, and the houſes rifled, and the women raviſhed, and half of the city ſhall go into captivity; this will be the time when the outward court ſhall be given to the Gentiles, the papiſts; the two witneſſes ſhall be ſlain, and their enemies ſhall rejoice and ſend gifts to one another, Rev. xi. 2, 7, 10. this will be a trying ſeaſon, and ſuch a time of trouble as has not been known: and the reſidue of the people ſhall not be cut off from the city; there will be a remnant according to the election of grace; the city, the church, ſhall not be wholly extinct; Chriſt will reſerve a ſeed for himſelf in thoſe very worſt of times, as he has always done: this cannot refer to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by the Romans, for then all the inhabitants of the city were cut off, or carried captive, and none left; but, if literally to be underſtood, muſt refer to what will be, when the army of Gog ſhall come againſt it in the latter day; though theſe circumſtances are not mentioned in Ezekiel.

℣. 3. Then ſhall the Lord go forth, &c.] Out of his place in heaven, either in perſon, or by the diſplay of his power; that is, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe name is called the Word of God, and is the King of kings, and Lord of lords, deſcribed as a mighty warrior, Rev. xix. 11, &c: and fight againſt thoſe nations, as when he fought in the day of battel; the Targum adds, at the Red-ſea; when the Lord fought for Iſrael againſt the Egyptians, Exod. xiv. 25. and afterwards againſt the Canaanites, when they entred the land of Canaan under Joſhua: thus Chriſt ſhall judge, and make war in righteouſneſs, and overcome thoſe that ſhall make war with him; and with the ſharp ſword that goeth out of his mouth ſhall ſmite nations, and with a rod of iron rule them, and break them to ſhivers, Rev. xiv. 14. and xix. 11, 15. and ii. 27. ſee alſo Ezek. xxxviii. 21, 22. and xxxix. 1, 3, 4.

[a] Shir-haſhirim Rabba, fol. 22. 3. & Midraſh Ruth, fol. 33. 2.

℣. 4. And his feet ſhall ſtand in that day upon the mount of Olives, &c.] Where he often was in the days of his fleſh, and from whence he aſcended to heaven, Luke xxi. 37. and xxiii. 29. Acts ii. 12. but here he did not appear at the time of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; wherefore this muſt refer to a time to come; and ſeeing it is certain that he will ſtand in the latter day on the earth, at the time of the reſurrection, and will come down from heaven in like manner as he went up; it ſeems very probable that he will deſcend upon that very ſpot of ground from whence he aſcended, Job xix. 25, 26, 27. Acts i. 11, 12. The Jews[e] have a notion, that at the general reſurrection of the dead, the mount of Olives will cleave aſunder, and thoſe of their nation, who have been buried in other countries, will be rolled thro' the caverns of the earth, and come out from under that mountain. This is what they call Gilgul Hammetim, the rolling of the dead; and Gilgul Hammechiloth, the rolling thro' the caverns. So they ſay in the Targum of Cant. viii. 5. "when the dead ſhall live, the "mount of Olives ſhall be cleaved aſunder, and "all the dead of Iſrael ſhall come out from under it; yea, even the righteous, which die in "captivity, ſhall paſs thro' ſubterraneous caverns, "and come from under the mount of Olives." This is ſometimes[f] repreſented as very painful to the righteous; but another writer[g] removes this objection by obſerving, that at the time of the rolling thro' the caverns of the earth, we may ſay that this rolling will be of no other than of the bone Luz, out of which the whole body will ſpring; ſo that this buſineſs of rolling will be eaſy and without pain; but they are not all agreed about the thing itſelf: Kimchi ſays[h], "there is a diviſion in the words of our Rabbins, concerning "the dead without the land (i. e. of Iſrael); ſome "of them ſay, that thoſe without the land ſhall "come up out of their graves; and others ſay, "they ſhall come out of their graves to the land "of Iſrael by rolling, and by the way of the caverns; but this verſe (Ezek. xxxvii. 12.) proves, "that thoſe without the land ſhall live, as the "dead of the land of Iſrael; for it ſays, I will "open your graves, and cauſe you to come up out of "your graves; and after that, and I will bring you "into the land of Iſrael." Which is before Jeruſalem on the eaſt; a ſabbath-day's journey from it, about a mile, Acts i. 12: and the mount of Olives ſhall cleave in the midſt thereof toward the eaſt, and toward the weſt; and there ſhall be a very great valley, and half of the mountain ſhall remove toward the north, and half of it toward the ſouth; and this valley will be made by cleaving and removing the mountain in this manner, to hold the dead together when raiſed; and this is thought by ſome to be the ſame with the valley of Jehoſhaphat, called the valley of deciſion, into which, the heathen being awakened and raiſed, will be brought and judged, Joel iii. 2, 12, 14.

℣. 5. And ye ſhall flee to the valley of the mountains, &c.] To ſeek for ſhelter and ſafety in them, for fear of the Lord, and the glory of his majeſty, whom every eye ſhall ſee, Iſ. ii. 19. Rev. i. 7: for the valley of the mountains ſhall reach unto Azal; a name of a place not known; it may be thought to be at ſome conſiderable diſtance: yea, ye ſhall flee like as ye fled from before the earthquake, in the days of Uzziah king of Judah; two years before which Amos propheſied, Amos i. 1. and which, according to Joſephus[i], was at the time when king Uzziah was ſtricken with a leproſy for invading the prieſts office; when, as he ſays, at a place before the city called Eroge, half part of the mountain towards the weſt was broken, and rolled four furlongs towards the eaſtern part, and there ſtood; ſo that the ways were ſtopped up to the king's gardens: and the Lord my God ſhall come; the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is truly God, and the God of his people; and who will appear to be ſo at his ſecond coming, which is here meant, by raiſing the dead, gathering all nations before him, and ſeparating them; by bringing to light all ſecret and hidden things; judging the whole world, and executing the ſentence on them; and particularly, by taking his own people to himſelf: and all the ſaints with thee; the Targum, and the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic verſions read, with him, meaning either the holy angels; ſo Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Ben Melech; who will attend him partly for the glory of his majeſty, and partly for terror to the wicked, and alſo for ſervice; or rather glorified ſaints, the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect, whom Chriſt will bring with him to be united to their bodies, which will now be raiſed, and to be with him in the new heavens and new earth, which will now be formed, and to be preſented to him, and dwell with him, during the thouſand years.

℣. 6. And it ſhall come to paſs in that day, &c.] Which ſhall precede the coming of Chriſt, both his ſpiritual and perſonal reign; for what follows will not agree with either ſtate: that the light ſhall not be clear nor dark; before the latter day-glory it will be a darkiſh diſpenſation; not clear, as in the firſt times of the goſpel, when the ſun of righteouſneſs appeared, and the ſhadows of the ceremonial law were removed, and the goſpel ſhone out in the miniſtry of Chriſt and his apoſtles; nor as at the Reformation from popery, when the morning-ſtar was given, Rev. ii. 28. nor as it will be in the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, when Zion's light will be come, and her watchmen will ſee eye to eye; when the light of the moon ſhall be as the light of the ſun, and the light of the ſun ſevenfold as the light of ſeven days; and much leſs as it will be in the kingdom-ſtate, when there will be no need of the ſun or moon; or in the ultimate glory, when we ſhall ſee no more darkly through a glaſs, but face to face: and yet it will not be dark, as it was with the Jews under the legal diſpenſation; and much leſs as with the Gentiles before the coming of Chriſt; or as in the dark times of popery; it will be a ſort of a twilight, both with reſpect to the light of doctrine, and of ſpiritual joy, comfort, and experience; which is much our caſe now. Some read the words, there ſhall be no light, but cold and froſt[k]; it will be a time of great coldneſs and lukewarmneſs, with regard to divine and ſpiritual things; iniquity will abound, and the love of many wax cold, Matt. xxiv. 12.

℣. 7. But it ſhall be one day, &c.] A very ſingular, remarkable, and uncommon one; and it will be but one day; things won't continue long in ſuch a poſition: which ſhall be known to the Lord; all times and ſeaſons are known unto the Lord, but this will come under his ſpecial notice and obſervation, and be under the direction of his ſpecial providence; it will only be taken notice of by him, and not by others; ſcarce any will obſerve it, or know what God is doing in it, or about to do: not day nor night; not clear and full day as at noon; nor yet quite night or dark as at midnight; ſee the note on ℣. 6: but it ſhall come to paſs, that at evening-time it ſhall be light; after this day is over, which is neither clear nor dark, there will be an evening-time; things will be worſe with us than they are; the ſun will be ſet; Chriſt will be withdrawn in the miniſtry of the word; his witneſſes will be ſlain and ſilenced; great coldneſs and lukewarmneſs will ſeize upon profeſſors; great darkneſs of error will ſpread itſelf every where; great ſleepineſs and ſecurity will fall upon all the virgins, and there will be great diſtreſs of nations: and when it will be feared and expected that greater darkneſs and diſtreſs ſtill are coming on, light will break forth; deliverance and ſalvation from popiſh darkneſs and tyranny will be wrought; the light of the goſpel will break forth, and ſpread itſelf every where; the light of joy and gladneſs will ariſe to all the ſaints, and it will be a time of great ſpiritual peace, proſperity, and happineſs. Vitringa on Iſ. lx. 20. interprets it, there ſhall be no viciſſitude, or ſucceſſion of day and night, but all day; at evening it ſhall be light; no calamity nor ſorrow; Chriſt the light, and ſun of righteouſneſs, will break out in a glorious and ſpiritual manner.

℣. 8. And it ſhall be in that day, that living waters ſhall go out from Jeruſalem, &c.] When it ſhall be light; and this is one of the things which will make it ſo; for by living waters are meant the goſpel, and the doctrines of it; compared to running waters for the ſound of them, which will then go into all the earth; for the ſwiftneſs in which they ſhall proceed; for their rapidity and force in bearing all before them; for the great ſpread of them; and for their virtue and efficacy in cooling thoſe who are inflamed with the fiery law; refreſhing thirſty ſouls; purifying the hearts and lives of ſinners, and making thoſe that are barren fruitful: and to living waters, becauſe they are the means of quickening dead ſinners, and of reviving drooping ſaints; and becauſe they ſerve to ſupport and maintain a ſpiritual life, and nouriſh up unto eternal life, and direct the way to it, as well as give the beſt account of it: and theſe will come out of Jeruſalem; which may deſign Jeruſalem literally, which will be rebuilt at the time of the Jews converſion; or myſtically the church, the ſpiritual and heavenly Jeruſalem; ſee Heb. xii. 22. Ezek. xlvii. 1. Joel iii. 18. reference ſeems to be had to the firſt miniſtration of the goſpel, which, according to prophecy, came out of Jeruſalem, Iſ. ii. 3. Half of them towards the former ſea; or the eaſtern ſea, as the Targum, the Perſian ſea; and may ſignify, that the goſpel ſhall be carried into the eaſtern parts of the world, into Perſia, Tartary, and China, and other nations; and thoſe great kingdoms ſhall become the kingdoms of Chriſt: and half of them toward the hinder ſea; or the weſtern ſea, as the Targum, the Mediterranean ſea; and may denote the progreſs and ſucceſs of the goſpel in the European parts of the world: and the meaning of the whole is, that the goſpel ſhall be carried from eaſt to weſt, and preached all the world over, to the converſion of Jews and Gentiles, who, ſome think, are deſigned by the two ſeas; when the abundance of the ſea ſhall be converted by it, and the forces and fulneſs of the Gentiles brought in, and all Iſrael ſaved: in ſummer, and in winter ſhall it be; there will be no ſummer of perſecution, nor winter of coldneſs and indifference to hinder the miniſtry of the word: the phraſe denotes the conſtant miniſtry of the word, and the duration of it; it ſhall be conſtantly preached all the year long, and as long as ſummer and winter laſt.

℣. 9. And the Lord ſhall be king over all the earth, &c.] This refers to the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt in the latter day; upon the ſucceſs of the goſpel every where, there will be great converſions in all places; goſpel-churches will be ſet up, and ordinances adminiſtred every where; the earth will be filled with the knowledge of the Lord; his kingdom will be from ſea to ſea, from the eaſtern to the weſtern one, and his dominion will reach to the ends of the earth; popiſh nations, Mahometan kingdoms, pagan ones, and all the kings of the earth, will become chriſtian, and ſubmit to the ſceptre of Chriſt's kingdom: in that day ſhall there be one Lord; there is but one Lord in right now, and there is but one in fact that is owned by real chriſtians; and there will be but one in the ſpiritual reign, among all that are called chriſtians; there will be but one Lord and head to Jews and Gentiles, Hoſ. i. 11. the pope of Rome will be no more owned as head of the church, nor any other: and his name one; this refers not to any particular name by which Chriſt ſhall be called, but rather to that by which his people ſhall be called; all names of diſtinction being now laid aſide, and only that of chriſtians retained; tho' it chiefly deſigns unity of doctrine, uniformity of worſhip, one and the ſame way of adminiſtring ordinances: it ſignifies, that there will be one true, ſpiritual, uniform worſhip and religion; there will be no different ſentiments and principles in religion; nor different practices and modes of worſhip; nor different ſects; but all agreeing in the ſame faith and practice, under one Lord and king Chriſt Jeſus. So the Targum, "they ſhall ſerve before the Lord with "one ſhoulder; for his name is firm in the world, "and there is none beſides it." This paſſage is referred by the ancient Jews [1] to the times of the Meſſiah.

℣. 10. All the land ſhall be turned as a plain, &c.] That is, all the land of Iſrael round about Jeruſalem, which was encompaſſed with mountains, Pſ. cxxv. 2. but now theſe mountains ſhall become a plain, that that may be ſeen; ſince it follows, from Gebah to Rimmon, ſouth of Jeruſalem; Geba was a city in the tribe of Benjamin, on the northern border of the land, Joſh. xxi. 17. and Rimmon was in the tribe of Judah, given to Simeon, on the ſouthern part, Joſh. xv. 32. and xix. 7. ſo that from Gebah to Rimmon, was the ſame as from Geba to Beerſhebah, which was in the ſame tribe, 2 Kings xxiii. 8. and according to the Jewiſh writers, the ſouth of Jeruſalem was a plain; wherefore the meaning ſeems to be, that the whole land, from Gebah to Rimmon, ſhould be like that. Jerom makes mention of a village called Remmon in his time, fifteen miles to the north of Jeruſalem, which cannot be the place here meant, and yet ſpeaks of it as in the tribe of Simeon or Judah; and afterwards takes notice of another village called Remmus in Daroma, or the ſouth [m]: to me it ſeems that Gebah and Rimmon were places near to one another, and both in the tribe of Benjamin; ſee 1 Sam. xiv. 4. where the word rendered pomegranate is Rimmon, and is the proper name of a place, according to ſome; the ſame with that in Judg. xx. 47. where was a rock, called the rock Rimmon: and Jonathan ben Uzziel on 1 Sam. xiv. 2. renders it, the plain of the pomegranate; or rather, the plain of Rimmon: and the Jews make mention in their Talmud [n] of the valley of Rimmon, where ſeven elders met to intercalate the year; and here, they ſay, was a marble rock, in which every one faſtened a nail, and therefore it is called the rock of nails. Now the ſenſe ſeems to be, that all the land of Iſrael ſhould become a plain, like the valley that was between Gebah and Rimmon. Jarchi interprets it of the whole world. And this will be literally true of the new earth, in the thouſand years reign, which will be without hills, mountains, and ſeas, Rev. xxi. 1. It may be myſtically underſtood of the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, when the whole world will become chriſtian; when Jews and Gentiles, and even the kings of the earth, ſhall bow the knee to Chriſt, and be ſubject to him. And it ſhall be lifted up, and inhabited in her place; that is, Jeruſalem, which ſhall appear very high, all the land round about being a plain; and being rebuilt, ſhall be inhabited on the ſame ſpot of ground it formerly was: or the church may be meant, which in the latter day will be greatly exalted, and will be filled with, and inhabited by, ſome of all the nations of the world, Iſ. ii. 2, 3: from Benjamin's gate, unto the place of the firſt gate; not that called the high gate of Benjamin, and which was near the temple, Jer. xx. 2. and ſeems to be one of its gates; and ſuch an one there was, which in Arabic was called Bab Alaſbat, the gate of the tribes, where was the pool of the blood of the ſacrifices; and is ſaid to be not far from another gate, called the gate of mercy [o]; but this is that which led out of the city, and was one of its gates towards the land of Benjamin, from whence it had its name, and thro' which Jeremiah attempted to go when he was ſtopped by the captain of the ward, Jer. xxxvii. 13. this, according to Grotius, was on the north of Jeruſalem: Mr. Fuller [p] places it more rightly in the north-eaſt part of it, as does Adrichomius [q], who wrongly confounds it with the corner-gate after-mentioned, which is here manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed from it; and which miſtake alſo Schindler [r] gives into, and likewiſe Arias Montanus [s] and others. The firſt gate is the ſame with the old gate in Neh. iii. 6. and xii. 39. Unto the corner-gate; the gate of Benjamin, and the gate of Ephraim, are the ſame, as is thought by Grotius; the diſtance between that gate, and the corner-gate, was four hundred cubits, 2 Kings xiv. 13: and from the tower of Hananeel, unto the king's wine-preſſes; mention is made of the tower of Hananeel in Neh. iii. 1. and xii. 39. Jer. xxxi. 38. it was to the ſouth of Jeruſalem; and is called in the Targum the tower of Pikkus: the king's wine-preſſes doubtleſs were where his vineyards were; king Solomon had a vineyard at Baal-Hamon, Cant. viii. 11. Grotius ſays the place where theſe wine-preſſes were, was at Sion, in the inmoſt part of the city; and ſo Adrichomius [t] places them in mount Sion; tho' Kimchi ſpeaks of them as without the city; and Jarchi makes mention of an Agadah or expoſition, which interprets them of the great ocean, which reaches from Jeruſalem to the end of the world, the lakes which the King of kings has made. Very probably theſe places lay eaſt, weſt, north, and ſouth; and ſo denote the amplitude of the city, and the largeneſs and extenſiveneſs of the church of Chriſt, ſignified thereby; ſee Ezek. xlviii.

℣. 11. And men ſhall dwell in it, &c.] In great numbers, in much peace and ſafety, and from generation to generation: Aben Ezra ſays, Meſſiah the ſon of David will now come: and there ſhall be no more utter deſtruction; no wars, nor deſolations by them, in a civil ſenſe; there ſhall be no more killing, as the Targum, Iſ. ii. 4. and lx. 17, 18. no Cherem, no anathema, in a religious ſenſe; in the old tranſlation it is, and there ſhall be no more curſing; there will be no curſe in the Jeruſalem-ſtate, Rev. xxii. 3. which words ſeem to be taken from hence; no curſed thing, nor curſed perſon, or any curſe or anathema denounced againſt any; no popiſh bulls and anathemas, nor any other: but Jeruſalem ſhall be ſafely inhabited; the inhabitants of it ſhall dwell ſecurely, without any apprehenſion of danger, and having no enemies to fear; tho' before this ſafe and happy ſtate, there will be many enemies; and what will become of them, is ſhown in the following verſes.

mult from the Lord ſhall be among them; the Targum renders it, a great tumult, or noiſe of killing; and the Septuagint, an exſtacy: it refers to the earthquake, and the ſlaughter of ſeven thouſand men of name, and the fright upon that, Rev. xi. 13: and they ſhall lay hold every one on the hand of his neighbour, and ſhall riſe up againſt the hand of his neighbour; there will be a revolution upon this tumult in ſeveral of the antichriſtian ſtates; and the kings of them ſhall hate the whore, make her deſolate, eat her fleſh, and burn her with fire, Rev. xvii. 16. or, his hand ſhall be cut off by the hand of his neighbour[u]; ſee Zech. xi. 17. the power of antichriſt ſhall be deſtroyed by neighbouring chriſtian princes.

ỳ. 14. And Judah alſo ſhall fight at Jeruſalem, &c.] Theſe are the profeſſing people of Chriſt, the armies in heaven, the choſen, called, and faithful, who will follow the Lamb, and attend him when he goes forth to make war with the antichriſtian princes, and ſhall overcome them, Rev. xvii. 14. and xix. 14: and the wealth of all the heathen round about ſhall be gathered together, gold and ſilver, and apparel in great abundance; by which are meant the riches of the papiſts, called Gentiles or heathens, Rev. xi. 2, 18. which will fall into the hands of the followers of Chriſt, at the time of Rome's deſtruction; and which are ſignified by the fleſh of the whore, and by the fleſh of kings, captains, and mighty men, which will then be eaten; they will be ſtripped and ſpoiled of all their ſubſtance, Rev. xvii. 16. and xix. 18.

ỳ. 15. And ſo ſhall be the plague of the horſe, of the mule, of the camel, and of the aſs, &c.] The fleſh of the horſe is ſaid to be eaten, Rev. xix. 18: and of all the beaſts that ſhall be in theſe tents, as this plague; their beaſts ſhall periſh in like manner as themſelves.

ỳ. 16. And it ſhall come to paſs, &c.] After the plague on man and beaſt is over: that every one that is left of all the nations which come againſt Jeruſalem; theſe are the remnant according to the election of grace, who will have been among the enemies of Chriſt and his people, but preſerved, when others will be deſtroyed; and they will not only be affrighted at the general deſtruction, but will be truly converted, and give glory to the God of heaven, Rev. xi. 13. and xix. 21: theſe ſhall even go up from year to year to worſhip the king, the Lord of hoſts; the king Meſſiah, as Aben Ezra and Abendana on the place obſerve; the ſame with the king over all the earth, ỳ. 9. who is Lord of hoſts, of all the armies in heaven, that will have followed him at this time, and is to be worſhipped by angels and men; he is equal with God, the creator of both, the Redeemer of men, and king of ſaints; and to worſhip him, ſhall the above perſons preſerved and called, go up to Jeruſalem, the church of God, year by year, that is, conſtantly: and to keep the feaſt of tabernacles; not literally, but ſpiritually; for as all the Jewiſh feaſts have been long ſince aboliſhed, having had their accompliſhment in Chriſt, not one of them will ever be revived in the latter day. This feaſt was originally kept in commemoration of the Iſraelites dwelling in tents in the wilderneſs, and was typical of Chriſt's incarnation, who was made fleſh, and tabernacled among us; ſo that to keep this feaſt, is no other than to believe in Chriſt as come in the fleſh, and in the faith of this to attend to the goſpel-feaſt of the word and ordinances; and whereas this feaſt was obſerved by drawing water with expreſſions of joy, this may reſpect the pouring forth of the Spirit in the laſt day, and that ſpiritual joy ſaints will then be filled with; to which may be added, that palm-tree branches uſed to be carried in their hands at the time of that feaſt; and ſo the keeping of it now, may denote the victory that will be obtained over the beaſt and his image, which palm-tree branches are a token of; and this will iſſue in the perpetual reign of Chriſt, when the tabernacle of God ſhall be with men.

ỳ. 17. And it ſhall be, that whoſoever will not come up, &c.] This, tho' it follows upon the former account, muſt be underſtood of times preceding the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt; for the rain of the goſpel will be upon all the earth in the latter day-glory, and all nations will then ſerve and worſhip the king, the Lord of hoſts, even thoſe that remain after the general deſtruction of the antichriſtian ſtates; beſides, expreſs mention is hereafter made of Egypt, which deſigns Rome, Rev. xi. 8. and the whole manifeſtly refers to the time of the witneſſes propheſying in ſackcloth, who had power to ſhut the heaven that it rain not, Rev. xi. 6: of all the families of the earth unto Jeruſalem, to worſhip the king, the Lord of hoſts; all of the antichriſtian party, that refuſe to worſhip the Lord with his true church, according to his revealed will: even upon them ſhall be no rain; not literally, but ſpiritually; and is to be underſtood either of the love and favour of God, comparable to rain in its original, it being owing to the will of God, and not to the merits of men, and therefore is diſtinguiſhing and ſovereign; in its objects, perſons very undeſerving; in the manner of its communication, it tarries not for the will and works of men, and comes in great abundance; and in its effects, it ſoftens, cools, refreſhes, and makes fruitful; and not to have this, is to be hated of God: or of the bleſſings of divine grace; theſe are from above like rain, depend on the will of God, are free gifts, and given in abundance, and make fruitful; the contrary to theſe is curſing: or of the goſpel, which is of God, and from heaven, falls according to divine direction, and ſoftens, refreſhes, and revives; and not to have this is the foreſt of judgments, Amos viii. 11. Iſ. v. 6.

ỳ. 18. And if the family of Egypt go not up, and come not, &c.] To Jeruſalem, the church of God; don't go thither to worſhip the Lord, attend his ordinances, and keep them in their purity; nor walk as becomes the people of God: by the family of Egypt, are meant the papiſts, ſo called for their tyranny, cruelty, and idolatry, Rev. xi. 8: that have no rain; have not the pure word of God, and the ordinances thereof, only the traditions of men; yea, the doctrines of devils, and lies in hypocriſy: the alluſion is to the land of Egypt, which was watered, not ſo much by rain, as by the overflowing of the river Nile: or it may be rendered, and upon them there ſhall be no rain[w]; or that which is equivalent to it. So the Targum paraphraſes it, "the Nile ſhall not aſcend unto them." The ſenſe is, as they are without the pure goſpel of Chriſt, they ſhall continue ſo, and be puniſhed with that ſore judgment of a famine, of hearing the word of the Lord. There ſhall be the plague, wherewith the Lord will ſmite the heathen that come not up to keep the feaſt of tabernacles; they ſhall have the ſame plague of want of water, a famine; for it is a vulgar miſtake, that there is no rain in Egypt; it rains indeed but ſeldom, and only in ſome places, but it does rain. Monſieur Thevenot [x] ſays, "it "rains much at Alexandria, and Roſetta alſo, but "at Cairo, which ſtands higher, it rains leſs; and "yet, ſays he, I have ſeen it rain very hard every "year, for two days together, in the month of "December." And Mr. Fuller [y] ſays, that Sir William Paſton, a patron of his, and a well accompliſhed traveller, was "an eye-witneſs of much "and violent rain at Grand Cairo, but ſuch as "preſaged a great mortality, which enſued not "long after." But it ſhould be obſerved, that this is only true of the lower part of Egypt, for in the upper parts it rains not, at leaſt not very commonly: for Herodotus [z] reports, that "in the times "of Pſammenitus, the ſon of Amaſis, king of Egypt, "a very wonderful thing happened to the Egyptians; it rained at Thebes in Egypt, which it "never had before, nor has ever ſince, as the "Thebans ſay; for it never rains in the upper part "of Egypt; but then it rained at Thebes in drops." Yet Mr. Norden [a], a late traveller in thoſe parts, ſays, that he "experienced at Meſchie (a city in his "travels to upper Egypt) a very violent rain, accompanied with thunder, for the ſpace of a "whole hour;" tho' in the ſame place he ſays, at Feſchna, and beyond, in the upper Egypt, the ſky is always ſerene and clear. And in his travels from Cairo to Girge, capital of the upper Egypt, he relates, that at a certain place, as he went thither, they had little wind, and a great deal of rain [b]. And in another place [c] he obſerves, at Menie (a place in upper Egypt) there was ſo thick a fog, that we could perceive nothing at thirty paces diſtant: wherefore, ſince it does rain at times in ſome places, the ſame plague as before may be here meant; or want of proviſions, as others, thro' a defect of rain; or the Nile not overflowing and watering the land, as Jarchi interprets it: but Kimchi gives another ſenſe, and ſo Aben Ezra, which is, that inſtead of having no rain, which they need not, and do not deſire; they ſhall be ſmitten with the plague, that the Lord will ſmite all the nations with, that fight againſt Jeruſalem, namely, their fleſh ſhall conſume away, &c. ℣. 12.

℣. 19. This ſhall be the puniſhment of Egypt, &c.] Or ſin [d], as in the original text: rightly is the word rendered puniſhment, as it is by the Targum: and the puniſhment of all nations that come not up to keep the feaſt of tabernacles; which will be one and the ſame; they ſhall have no rain, or what anſwers to it; they ſhall all have a famine; or it will be different, Egypt ſhall be puniſhed with a conſumption of their fleſh, and the other nations with want of rain: the former ſenſe ſeems beſt.

℣. 20. In that day, &c.] After the deſtruction of antichriſt, and all the antichriſtian party; and a new ſtate of things will take place, either the ſpiritual or perſonal reign of Chriſt: ſhall there be upon the bells of the horſes, holineſs unto the Lord; as was upon the mitre of the high prieſt, Exod. xxviii. 36. to which there ſeems to be an alluſion here: or, upon the trappings of the horſes [e], as the Targum renders it; and this intends either the horſes ſlain in war, whoſe bells or trappings ſhould be devoted and applied to holy uſes; or the horſes that carried the people up to Jeruſalem to worſhip there, or horſes in common. The Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions render it, on the bridle of the horſe ſhall be holineſs to the Lord; that is, they ſhould be devoted to his ſervice, which ſometimes were very richly adorned; yea, were of gold, as thoſe deſcribed by Virgil [f]; nay, they were adorned with precious ſtones, with pearls, emeralds, and jacinths, inſomuch that the Romans were obliged to reſtrain this luxury by a law [g]. The conceit of ſome of the Fathers, that this refers to one of the nails in the croſs of Chriſt, which Conſtantine put into his horſe's bridle, is juſtly ridiculed and exploded by moſt commentators. It ſeems beſt to render the word as we do, bells, as Kimchi and Jarchi interpret it; ſince it is uſed of cymbals made of braſs, which were to make a ſound to be heard, 1 Chron. xv. 19. Neh. xii. 27. and of the ſame metal were the horſes bells made; tho' thoſe which the mules, at the funeral of Alexander, had at each jaw, were made of gold [h]; as were thoſe Aaron had at the hem of his robe. The uſe of theſe bells on horſes, according to Guſſetius [i], in the eaſtern countries, where they travelled through deſerts, and had no beaten track, was to keep them together, and that they might be known where they were when parted; and of like uſe are they now to horſes of burden, or pack-horſes, with us; tho' in common uſe they ſeem to ſerve to give horſes a pleaſure, and quicken them in their work: but the original of them ſeems to be, for the training of horſes for war, and therefore they hung bells to their bridles, to uſe them to a noiſe, and to try if they could bear a noiſe, and the tumult of war, ſo as not to throw their riders, or expoſe them to danger [k]; hence one that has not been tried or trained up to any thing, is called by the Greeks ακωδωνιστος, one not uſed to the noiſe of a bell, by a metaphor taken from horſes, that have never been tried by the ſound of bells, whether they can bear the noiſe of war without fear [l]: and ſo it may ſignify that theſe, and all the apparatus of war, all kind of armour, ſhould no more be made uſe for ſuch purpoſes, there being now univerſal peace in the kingdom of Chriſt; wherefore theſe, and the like, ſhould be converted to ſacred uſes, juſt as ſwords, at the ſame time, ſhall be beat into plow-ſhares, and ſpears into pruning-hooks, for civil uſes, Iſ. ii. 4. or ſince holineſs to the Lord is ſaid to be upon them, the ſenſe may be, that holineſs will be very general among all men; all profeſſing people will be righteous; it will appear in all their actions, civil as well as religious; it will be as viſible as the bells upon the horſes, by their frequent going to the houſe of God; their conſtant attendance on public worſhip; their walking in the ways of the Lord, and their love to one another. And the pots in the Lord's houſe ſhall be like the bowls before the altar; the pots in which they boiled the ſacrifices, ſhall be like the bowls before the altar, which held the blood of the ſacrifices to be ſprinkled; either like them for number; they ſhall be many like them, as the Targum paraphraſes it; or for goodneſs, being made of the ſame metal: and the whole denotes the number, holineſs, and excellency of the ſaints in the latter day, who will direct all their actions to the glory of God, whether in eating or drinking, or in whatever they do.

℣. 21. Yea, every pot in Jeruſalem, and in Judah, ſhall be holineſs unto the Lord of hoſts, &c.] Such will be the number of ſacrifices and ſacrificers, that the pots in the Lord's houſe will not be ſufficient; wherefore every pot, in city or country, ſhall be ſanctified and devoted to holy uſes: and all they that ſacrifice ſhall come and take of them, and ſeeth therein; this denotes, as before, the general holineſs of the profeſſors of religion in thoſe times; and that there will be no difference in the veſſels of the Lord's houſe, or any diſtinction of Jew and Gentile; but they will be all ſpiritual worſhippers, and offer up the ſpiritual ſacrifices of prayer and praiſe to the Lord: and in that day there ſhall be no more the Canaanite in the houſe of the Lord of hoſts; the Targum paraphraſes it, "there ſhall be no more a merchant in the houſe "of the ſanctuary of the Lord;" in the temple, where were buyers and ſellers of ſheep, oxen, and doves, for ſacrifice, ſuch as our Lord drove out; but now there ſhall be no more of them, all legal ſacrifices being at an end. The word here uſed does ſignify a merchant, and is ſo rendered in Hoſ. xii. 9. Iſ. xxiii. 8. and by ſome here[m]: and the Jews[n] have a ſaying, that "there are no Canaanites but merchants;" or the word always ſo ſignifies, referring to the above places, and having quoted Job xli. 6. but it is to be applied to another ſort of merchants; to falſe teachers, that make merchandiſe of the ſouls of men; to all meritmongers and papiſts; and particularly to the great merchant of all, the pope of Rome, and to all inferior merchants under him, who ſell pardons, indulgences, &c. and are called the merchants of the earth, Rev. xviii. 3, 11, 12, 13. theſe are the heathen that ſhall periſh out of the land, and the ſinners that ſhall be no more; antichriſt ſhall no longer ſit in the temple of God, ſhewing himſelf to be God; nor will there be any in the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, that will buy Rome's merchandiſe any more. Moreover, a Canaanite may deſign an impure perſon, an hypocrite; and tho' there have been many ſuch in the church of God in all ages, yet at this time there will be few or none comparatively ſpeaking; and in the perſonal reign of Chriſt there will be no wicked men at all: in the new heavens and new earth will dwell righteouſneſs, or only righteous perſons; all the wicked of the earth will be deſtroyed before this ſtate takes place; only raiſed ones, the ſaints that partake of the firſt reſurrection, will be there; they will be all holy and righteous perſons; nothing ſhall enter into it that defiles or makes an abomination or a lie, only thoſe that do the commandments of God; nor will there be any manner of ſin or wickedneſs there: ſin, like the Canaanites of old, continues in the ſaints as long as they are in the preſent ſtate; and tho' it has not the dominion over them, yet is as grievous pricks and thorns unto them, and is left in them to prove them; but in this happy ſtate there will be no more ſin, no more this pricking briar and grieving thorn. That the word Canaanite is here to be taken in a figurative ſenſe is certain; for literally underſtood there is no ſuch perſon in the world now, nor has been for many hundreds of years, even an inhabitant of Canaan, or one ſo called.

MALACHI.

THIS book in the Hebrew copies is called Sepher Malachi, the book of Malachi; in the Vulgate Latin verſion, the prophecy of Malachi; in the Syriac and Arabic verſions, the prophecy of the prophet Malachi. According to Lactantius [a], Zechariah was the laſt of the prophets; but the more commonly received opinion, and the trueſt is, that Malachi was the laſt; hence Aben Ezra calls him סוף הנביאים the end of the prophets; and by Kimchi he is ſaid to be אחרון שבכם the laſt of them; and ſometimes by the Rabbins, חותם הנביאים the ſeal of the prophets [b]; by whom they are all ſealed up, concluded and finiſhed. His name ſignifies my angel, as is commonly ſaid; tho' Hillerus [c] makes it to ſignify the angel of the Lord; hence ſome have thought that he was not a man, but an angel; and ſo the Septuagint render ביד מלאכי in the firſt verſe, by the hand of his angel; and others have thought, that the book takes its name, not from the author of it, but from the mention that is made of the meſſenger or angel of the Lord, John the Baptiſt, in ch. iii. 1. but the more prevailing opinion is, that Malachi is the name of a man, the writer of the book, about whom the Jews have been divided. Rab Nachman ſays, Malachi was Mordecai; and that he was ſo called, becauſe he was ſecond to the king. R. Joſhua ben Korcha contradicts him, and affirms Malachi is Ezra; and to him agrees the Chaldee paraphraſe on ℣. 1. which ſays, that Malachi, his name is called Ezra the ſcribe; but, as Kimchi obſerves, Ezra is never called a prophet, as Malachi is, only a ſcribe; wherefore in the Talmud [d], where this matter is debated, it is concluded thus; but the wiſe men ſay, Malachi is his name; that is, it is the proper name of a man; there was a man of this name, that wrote this prophecy; not Mordecai, nor Ezra, nor Zorobabel, nor Nehemiah, as ſome have thought; but Malachi: and if the accounts of Epiphanius [e] and Iſidore [f] are to be credited, this prophet was born at Sapho, in the tribe of Zebulon; and had his name from his beautiful form, and unblemiſhed life; and that he died very young, and was buried in his own field. The time of his propheſying is not agreed on: the Jews commonly make him cotemporary with Haggai and Zechariah; they ſay [g], that Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, all of them propheſied in the ſecond year of Darius; and Ganz their chronologer [h], places the death of theſe prophets together in one year; but he ſeems to be later than they: Haggai propheſied before the building of the temple; Zechariah about the time of it; and Malachi after it, when the temple was rebuilt, and the worſhip of God reſtored and ſettled; and when both prieſts and people were become very corrupt and degenerate, of which he complains; ſo that it is poſſible that he might live a century after the other prophets, and about four centuries before the coming of Chriſt, during which time prophecy ceaſed; tho' ſome think he lived not long before the times of Chriſt, which is not probable. Biſhop Uſher [i] makes him cotemporary with Nehemiah, and places him in the year before the chriſtian æra 416; and Mr. Whiſton [k] in the year 400; Mr. Bedford [l] in the year 424: however, this book has been always accounted authentic, and a part of the canon of the ſcripture; and is confirmed by the paſſages cited out of it, and the references made unto it, in the New Teſtament, Matt. xi. 10. Mark i. 2. Rom. ix. 13. Matt. xvii. 12. Mark ix. 11, 12. Luke i. 17. The general deſign of it is to reprove the Jews for their ingratitude to the Lord, their neglect and contempt of his worſhip, and breach of his laws; and to raiſe in the minds of the truly godly an expectation of the Meſſiah, and his fore-runner John the Baptiſt.

CHAP. I.

IN this chapter the Lord declares his love to the people of Iſrael, and proves it, and complains, that the honour due unto him, was not given him; which he demonſtrates by various inſtances. The inſcription is in ℣. 1. ſhewing the name and nature of the prophecy; the author of it; the people to whom it was ſent; and the name of the perſon by whom. In ℣. 2. the Lord affirms his love to the people of Iſrael, which they called in queſtion; and proves it to be real, ſpecial, and diſtinguiſhing, by the inſtance of Jacob and Eſau, two brothers; yet one, their anceſtor, was loved, and the other hated; which latter is proved by the deſolations made in his country, and by the fruitleſs attempts made to repair and rebuild; which was ſo clear a proof of the Lord's indignation againſt him, that the Iſraelites could not but ſee it, and would be obliged to confeſs it, to the glory of God, ℣. 3, 4, 5. hence he paſſes on to obſerve the honour and fear that were due to him as a Father and maſter, which were not ſhewn him; but inſtead thereof, he was deſpiſed, and even by the prieſts themſelves, with which they are charged, ℣. 6. and which being objected to by them, is proved by offering polluted bread on his altar; and by polluting him, in ſaying his table was contemptible; and by ſacrificing the blind, the lame, and the ſick unto him; things which would be juſtly reſented, if offered to a temporal prince and governor, ℣. 7, 8. wherefore they are called upon by the prophet to pray to the Lord for grace and mercy for the people, ſeeing it was by their means (the prieſts) that theſe things were done; tho' it was queſtionable whether the Lord would have any regard to them, ℣. 9. their ſins being ſo dreadfully aggravated; and particularly, inaſmuch as they did not ſerve in the temple, not ſo much as ſhut a door, or kindle a fire on the altar, for nothing, without being paid for it; hence the Lord declares he had no pleaſure in them, nor would he accept their offerings; but would call the Gentiles by his grace, among whom his name would be great from one end of the earth to the other; and incenſe and pure offerings would be offered by them to him, ℣. 10, 11. and then he renews the charge againſt them, that they had profaned his name, by ſaying that his table, and the fruit thereof, were polluted, and his meat contemptible; by expreſſing a wearineſs in his worſhip, and a contempt of it; and by bringing the torn, the lame, and ſick, as an offering to him, ℣. 12, 13. upon which ſuch ſacrificers are declared deceivers, and pronounced accurſed, which they might aſſure themſelves was, and would be their caſe; ſince he was a great king, and his name dreadful among the heathen, ℣. 14.

℣. 1. The burden of the word of the Lord, &c.] By which is meant, the prophecy of this book, ſo called, not becauſe heavy, burdenſome, and diſtreſſing, either for the prophet to carry, or the people to bear; for ſome part of it, which reſpects Chriſt, and his fore-runner, was matter of joy to the people of God; but becauſe it was a meſſage ſent by the Lord, and carried by the prophet to the people; ſee the notes on Zech. ix. 1. and xii. 1. and this was not the word of man, but of God, a part of ſcripture, by divine inſpiration. The Syriac verſion is, the viſion of the words of the Lord; and the Arabic verſion, the revelation of the word of the Lord; and the Septuagint verſion, the aſſumption of the word of the Lord; it was what was revealed, made known, and delivered by the Lord to the prophet, and taken up by him, and carried to Iſrael, which was the general name of all the twelve tribes, when under one prince; but when the kingdom was divided in Rehoboam's time, it was peculiar to the ten tribes, as Judah was to the two tribes of Benjamin and Judah; but after the return of theſe two from the Babyloniſh captivity, in which they were joined by ſome of the other tribes, it was given unto them as here: by Malachi; or, by the hand of Malachi[m]; he was the inſtrument the Lord made uſe of; the perſon whom he ſent, and by whom he delivered the following prophecy.

℣. 2. I have loved you, ſaith the Lord, &c.] Which appeared of old, by chuſing them above all people upon the face of the earth, to be his ſpecial and peculiar people; by beſtowing peculiar favours and bleſſings upon them, both temporal and ſpiritual; by continuing them a people, thro' a variety of changes and revolutions; and by lately bringing them out of the Babyloniſh captivity, reſtoring their land unto them, and the pure worſhip of God among them: yet ye ſay, wherein haſt thou loved us? the Targum renders it, and if ye ſhould ſay; and ſo Kimchi and Ben Melech; which intimates, that tho' they might not have expreſſed themſelves in ſo many words, yet they ſeemed diſpoſed to ſay ſo; they thought it, if they ſaid it not; and therefore to prevent ſuch an objection, as well as to ſhew their ingratitude, it is put in this form; and an inſtance of his love is demanded, which is very ſurprizing, when they had ſo many; and ſhews great ſtupidity and unthankfulneſs. Abarbinel renders the words, wherefore haſt thou loved us? that is, is there not a reaſon to be given for loving us? which he ſuppoſes was the love of Abraham to God; and therefore his love to them was not free, but by way of reward to Abraham's love; and conſequently they were not ſo much obliged to him for it: to which is replied, was not Eſau Jacob's brother, ſaith the Lord? Jacob and Eſau were brethren; they had one and the ſame father and mother, Iſaac and Rebekah, and equally deſcended from Abraham; ſo that if one was loved for the ſake of Abraham, as ſuggeſted, according to Abarbinel's ſenſe; the other had an equal claim to it; they lay in the ſame womb together; they were twins; and if any could be thought to have the advantage by birth, Eſau had it, being born firſt; but before they were born, and before they had done good or evil, what is afterwards ſaid of them was in the heart of God towards them; which ſhows that the love of God to his people is free, ſovereign, and diſtinguiſhing, Gen. xxv. 2. Rom. ix. 11, 12, 13: yet I loved Jacob; perſonally conſidered; not only by giving him the temporal birth-right and bleſſing, and the advantages ariſing from thence; but by chuſing him to everlaſting life, beſtowing his grace upon him, revealing Chriſt unto him, and making him a partaker of eternal happineſs; and alſo his poſterity, as appears by the above inſtances mentioned; and likewiſe myſtically conſidered, for all the elect, redeemed, and called, go by the name of Jacob and Iſrael in ſcripture frequently; for what is here ſaid of Jacob, is true of all the individuals of God's people; for which purpoſe the apoſtle refers to this paſſage in Rom. ix. 13. to prove the ſovereignity and diſtinction of the love of God in their election, and ſalvation: and this is indeed a clear proof that the love of God to his people is entirely free from all motives and conditions in them, being before they had done either good or evil; and therefore did not ariſe from any goodneſs in them, nor from their love to him, nor from any good works done by them: the choice of perſons to everlaſting life, the fruit of this love, is denied to be of works, and is aſcribed to grace; it paſſed before any were wrought; and what are done by the beſt of men, are the effects of it; and the perſons choſen or paſſed by, were in an equal ſtate, when both were done; which appears by this inſtance: and by which alſo it is manifeſt, that the love of God to men is diſtinguiſhing; it is not alike to all men; there is a peculiar favour he bears to his own people; which is evident by the choice of ſome, and not others; by the redemption of them out of every kindred, tongue, people, and nation; by the effectual vocation of them out of the world; by the application of the bleſſings of grace unto them; and by beſtowing eternal life on them: and it may be further obſerved, that the objects of God's love have not always the knowledge of it; indeed they have no knowledge of it before converſion, which is the open time of love; and after converſion they have not always diſtinct and appropriating views of it; only when God is pleaſed to come and manifeſt it unto them.

[m] ביד in manu, V. L. Cocceius; per manum, Pagninus, Montanus, Piſcator.

℣. 3. And I hated Eſau, &c.] Or, rejected him, as the Targum; did not love him as Jacob: this was a negative, not poſitive hatred; it is true of him, perſonally conſidered; not only by taking away the birth-right and bleſſing from him, which he deſpiſed; but by denying him his ſpecial grace, leaving him in his ſins, and to his luſts, ſo that he became a profane perſon; ſhared not in the grace of God here, and had no part in the eternal inheritance, with the ſaints in light; and likewiſe it is true of his poſterity, as the following inſtances ſhow: and laid his mountains and his heritage waſte; which, according to Grotius, was done by Nebuchadnezzar, five years after the captivity of the Jews, in fulfilment of the prophecy of Jeremiah, ch. xlix. 7—22. but this was done by the Nabatheans [n]: mount Seir was the famous mountain that Eſau dwelt in, Gen. xxxvi. 8. there might be more in his country; or this might have many tops, and therefore called mountains; and to this account of the waſte and deſolate ſtate of this country, agrees what is at preſent related of it, by a late traveller [o] in thoſe parts: "if (ſays he) we leave Paleſtine and Egypt behind us, and purſue our phyſical obſervations into the land of Edom, we ſhall be preſented with a variety of proſpects, quite different from thoſe we have lately met with in the land of Canaan, or in the field of Zoan; for we cannot here be entertained with paſtures clothed with flocks, or with vallies ſtanding thick with corn, or with brooks of water, or fountains, or depths that ſpring out of vallies and hills, Deut. viii. 7. here is no place of ſeed, or of figs, or of vines, or pomegranates, Numb. xx. 5. but the whole is an evil place, a loneſome, deſolate wilderneſs; no otherwiſe diverſified than by plains covered with ſand, and by mountains made up of naked rocks and precipices, Mal. i. 3. neither is this country ever (unleſs ſometimes at the equinoxes) refreſhed with rain; but the few hardy vegetables it produces, are ſtunted by a perpetual drought; and the nouriſhment which the dews contribute to them in the night, is ſufficiently impaired by the powerful heat of the ſun in the day:" tho' this country ſeems to have been originally more fruitful, and better cultivated, as may be concluded from Gen. xxvii. 39. Numb. xx. 17. but is become ſo thro' the judgments of God upon it: for the dragons of the wilderneſs; ſo called to diſtinguiſh them from ſea-dragons, or the dragon-fiſh; ſuch as whales and crocodiles, which are ſometimes expreſſed by the ſame word here uſed, Gen. i. 21. Ezek. xxix. 3. and theſe land-dragons are no other than ſerpents of an enormous ſize. In the Indies they uſed to be diſtinguiſhed into three ſorts; ſuch as were found in the mountains; ſuch as were bred in caves, or in the flat country; and ſuch as were found in fens and marſhes. The firſt is the largeſt of all, and are covered with ſcales as reſplendent as poliſhed gold; theſe have a kind of beard hanging from their lower jaw; their eye-brows large, and very exactly arched; their aſpect the moſt frightful that can be imagined; and their cry loud and ſhrill; their creſt of a bright yellow; and a protuberance on their heads of the colour of a burning coal. Thoſe of the flat country differ from the former in nothing but having their ſcales of a ſilver colour, and in their frequenting rivers, to which the former never come. Thoſe that live in marſhes and fens are of a dark colour, approaching to a black, move ſlowly, have no creſt, or any riſing on their heads [p]: theſe creatures commonly inhabit deſert places. So Diodorus Siculus [q] ſpeaking of Ethiopia, ſays, it is reported, that divers kinds of ſerpents, and of an incredible bigneſs, are ſeen near the deſert, and in places inhabited by wild beaſts; and Ælianus [r] deſcribes the dragon as dwelling in woods, and living on poiſonous herbs; and preferring a deſolate place to cities, and the habitations of men; and when in ſcripture it is predicted of countries and cities that they ſhall become deſolate, it is uſually obſerved, that they ſhall be the dwelling places of dragons, as in Iſ. xiii. 22. and xxxiv. 13. Jer. x. 22. and xlix. 33. and li. 37. ſo here it is foretold, that it ſhould be the caſe of Edom, as it has been, and ſtill continues to be, as appears from the above traveller [s]; who, paſſing thro' ſome part of this country, ſays of it, "vipers, eſpecially in the wilderneſs of Sin, which might be very properly called the inheritance of dragons, were very dangerous and troubleſome; not only our camels, but the Arabs who attended them, running every moment the riſque of being bitten;" ſo that, according to the prediction, it is now a place for ſuch creatures. A learned Jew [t] is of opinion, that not ſerpents, but jackalls are here meant, which are a ſort of wild howling beaſts, that live abroad in deſolate places; ſee the note on Mic. i. 8. but whether they be the one, or the other, it makes for the ſame purpoſe, to denote what a deſert place Edom would become; ſince it ſhould be inhabited by ſuch creatures to dwell in, which denotes the utter deſolation made. So the Targum renders it, into the waſteneſs of the deſert; or into a waſte deſert, where none but ſuch ſort of animals inhabit. The Septuagint and Syriac verſions render it, into the houſes, or cottages of the deſert: and now, tho' this was the caſe of Judea, that it was left deſolate, yet it was but for a while; at the end of ſeventy years the Jews returned to their own land, and dwelt in it; but ſo did not the Edomites, as appears by the following words; which ſhows the regard God had to the poſterity of Jacob, and not to the poſterity of Eſau.

℣. 4. Whereas Edom ſaith, we are impoveriſhed, &c.] Or the Idumeans, as the Targum; the poſterity of Eſau, who acknowledge themſelves greatly reduced by the deſolations made in their country, cities, towns, and houſes, being plundered of all their valuable things. Kimchi interprets it, if the congregation of Edom ſhould ſay, tho' we are become poor and low, and our land is laid waſte: but we will return; being now become rich, as the Targum adds; that is, as Jarchi explains it, with the ſpoils of Jeruſalem: and build the deſolate places; as Iſrael did, as Kimchi obſerves, when they returned from their captivity; and ſo the Edomites hoped to do the ſame: thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, they ſhall build, but I will throw down; they attempted to build again their cities and towns, but could not ſucceed, God was againſt them: and they ſhall call them; or, they ſhall be called [u]; this ſhall be the name they ſhall go by among men, by way of proverb and reproach: the border of wickedneſs; a wicked kingdom and nation, from one end to the other; this ſhall be ſaid of them, as the reaſon of their utter and perpetual deſolation: and the people againſt whom the Lord hath indignation for ever; not for ſeventy years only, as againſt the Jews, Zech. i. 12, but for ever; and theſe are now no more a people; they are utterly extinct; their name and nation are loſt; there is not the leaſt appearance of them; when the Jews, tho' they are ſcattered about in the world, yet they are ſtill a people, and diſtinct from all others.

℣. 5. And your eyes ſhall ſee, &c.] The deſtruction of the Edomites, and their fruitleſs attempts to rebuild their deſolate places; and the difference between them and the Iſraelites, who were returned to their own land, and inherited it, when they could not; and the love of God to the one, and his hatred of the other: and ye ſhall ſay, the Lord will be magnified from the border of Iſrael; Aben Ezra interprets it, ye that dwell in the border of Iſrael ſhall ſay, the Lord ſhall be magnified, or let him be magnified; let greatneſs and glory be aſcribed to him for what he has done: or, as Kimchi, give him praiſe and greatneſs, becauſe you are dwelling in your border, and their border is deſolate; and your border is called the border of Iſrael, but their's the border of wickedneſs; and ſo the Targum, "let the glory of the Lord be multiplied, becauſe he hath enlarged the border of Iſrael;" and according to Jarchi, the ſenſe is, he ſhall ſhew his greatneſs from our border, to make it known that we are his people: all ſhew and own that God had loved them more than others, and therefore they ought to have honoured and obeyed him, in which they were deficient, and ſo ungrateful.

℣. 6. A ſon honoureth his father, and a ſervant his maſter, &c.] Or, will honour, or ſhould honour; it is their duty to do ſo, both according to the laws of God and man; and ſo the Targum, "lo, concerning a ſon it is ſaid (or commanded) that he ſhould honour his father; and of a ſervant, that he ſhould fear (or ſhew reverence) before his maſter;" ſee Exod. xx. 12. Eph. vi. 5: if then I be a father; as he was the father of his divine and eternal ſon; the father of ſpirits, angels, and the ſouls of men; the father of all men by creation; and the father of all mercies to them in providence, as he was to Iſrael; and beſides, was their father by national adoption, as he was not to other people; and to many of them ſtood in this relation by ſpecial, adopting grace: where is mine honour? there is an honour due to God on account of this relation; which ſhould be ſhown by loving him, truſting in him, calling upon him, imitating and obeying him, and by making uſe of what he has given for his glory; he is to be honoured in heart and life, by words and actions, and with our ſubſtance. This queſtion ſuggeſts, that he had not the honour given him, which belonged unto him: and if I be a maſter; the word is in the plural number, and may be underſtood of Jehovah, Father, Son, and Spirit; tho' the firſt perſon ſeems rather deſigned, who ſtands in this relation to Chriſt, as Mediator; to the angels, his miniſtring ſpirits; to the miniſters of the goſpel, and to all the ſaints; and indeed to all men, and particularly to the Iſraelites; as appeared by the ſpecial laws and commands he enjoined them, and by his ſpecial government, protection, and care of them: where is my fear? fear and reverence are due to the Lord from his people, conſidered in ſuch a relation to them; not a ſlaviſh fear of wrath and puniſhment; but a godly, filial fear, which is influenced by the goodneſs of God, and appears in a carefulneſs not to offend him, and by the performance of all religious worſhip, both private and public; and in this, not only natural men, but profeſſors of religion, and even God's own people, are wanting; yea, thoſe that ſhould ſet examples to others, as men in public office, and of a public character, as follows: ſaith the Lord of hoſts unto you, O prieſts that deſpiſe my name? for what is before ſaid, is not only ſaid to the people in general; but to the prieſts in particular, who ought to have honoured and feared the Lord; and yet they deſpiſed his name, or made it contemptible; by not paying that regard to his authority, as a Father and maſter they ought; by neglecting his worſhip, and not taking that care of offerings and ſacrifices as became them: and ye ſay, wherein have we deſpiſed thy name? as if they were entirely innocent and guiltleſs.

℣. 7. Ye offer polluted bread upon mine altar, &c.] Which ſome underſtand of the ſhew-bread, mention being afterwards made of a table, as Jerom; who obſerves that that was made of wheat, which the prieſts themſelves ſowed, reaped, ground, and baked, and ſo could take what they would out of it: as for their ſowing it, it does not ſeem likely that they ſhould be employed in ſuch ſervice, whatever may be ſaid for their reaping; ſince the ſheaf of the firſt-fruits was reaped by perſons deputed from the Sanhedrim [w]; tho' of the reaping of that for the ſhew-bread, I find no mention made; but as for grinding, ſifting, kneading, and making it into loaves, and baking it, and taking it out of the oven, and putting it upon the table of ſhew-bread, all this was the work of the prieſts [x]; and thoſe of the houſe of Garmu [y] were appointed over that work: now, this bread might be ſaid to be polluted, when they ſet upon the table, ſuch as was not made of fine wheat-flour, and had not pure frankincenſe put upon, or by each row, as the law required, Lev. xxiv. 5, 7. nor is it any material objection to this ſenſe, that it is an altar, and not a table, on which this bread was offered; ſince, as the altar is called a table, Ezek. xli. 22. as this is in a following clauſe, the table may be called an altar; though it may be obſerved, that the ſhew-bread is never ſaid to be offered, but to be ſet, or put upon the table: indeed the burning of the frankincenſe ſet by it, is called an offering made by fire unto the Lord, Lev. xxiv. 7. wherefore others interpret this of the daily meat-offering, which went along with the daily ſacrifice of the lambs, and part of which was burnt on the altar, Exod. xxix. 40, 41, 42. or rather this deſigns ſacrifice in general, ſometimes called bread, Lev. iii. 11, 16. and xxi. 6. and ſo the Targum here, "ye offer upon my altar an abominable offering;" ſuch as had blemiſhes in them, were blind or lame, as after-mentioned; and had not the requiſites of a ſacrifice in them; or were offered not in a right manner, or by bad men, and with a wicked mind: and ye ſay, wherein have we polluted thee? thy bread-offering or altar; as if their offerings were pure, and they themſelves, and their conſciences pure from ſin. The anſwer is, in that ye ſay, the table of the Lord is contemptible; either the ſhew-bread-table, which yet was covered with gold, and all the veſſels of it made of gold; or the altar, as in Ezek. xli. 22. their actions ſpoke ſo loud, and declared that the table or altar of the Lord was a contemptible thing, ſince they cared not what was offered upon it: or the reaſon why it was had in contempt, as ſome think, was becauſe there was not that holineſs in the ſecond temple, as in the firſt: or, as Abarbinel and Kimchi ſay, becauſe of the fat and the blood which were offered on the altar, which they eſteemed contemptible things; not obſerving the end for which the Lord commanded them to be offered.

℣. 8. And if ye offer the blind for ſacrifice, is it not evil? &c.] Certainly it is, according to the law in Lev. xxii. 22. or, as Kimchi interprets it, when they bring to you a lamb that is blind for ſacrifice to offer it up, ye ſay, this is not evil; but it is good to offer it up, becauſe the table is contemptible. The ſenſe is, that however evil this may be in itſelf, according to them it was good enough to be offered up upon the altar; which proves that they deſpiſed the name of the Lord, offered polluted bread or ſacrifice on his altar, and had his table in contempt: and if ye offer the lame and ſick, is it not evil? verily it is by the law of God, which forbids the offering of ſuch things, Lev. xxii. 21, 22. Deut. xv. 21. this was always obſerved, in all ſacrifices under the law, that they were perfect, and without any blemiſh, whether of the flock, or of the herd; and this was ſtrictly obſerved, even by the heathens themſelves: ſo Achilles in Homer[a], ſpeaks of the perfect lambs and goats they offered in ſacrifice; and particularly they were not to be lame, or to halt; ſuch were reckoned choice and excellent ſacrifices, which were larger and better fed than others; and which were not lame, nor diſeaſed, nor ſickly; for things future could not be known, they ſay, but from a ſound victim[b]; for they pretended to have knowledge of them by the entrails of the ſacrifices. So Pliny[c] obſerves, that this is to be remarked, that calves brought to the altar on mens ſhoulders are not to be ſacrificed; nor are the gods appeaſed by one that halts; in ſhort, it is ſaid[d], whatever is not perfect and ſound, is not to be offered to them; and beſides theſe here mentioned in the text, there were many others, which the Jews eſpecially obſerved, which rendered creatures unfit for ſacrifice. Maimonides[e] reckons up no leſs than fifty blemiſhes, by reaſon of which the prieſts under the law might not offer a creature for ſacrifice: no doubt but the laws of Moſes concerning this matter had a reſpect to the pure, perfect, and ſpotleſs ſacrifice of Chriſt, which the legal ones were typical of; and teach us this leſſon, that without a complete ſacrifice, no atonement or ſatisfaction for ſin could be made: or, it is not evil in your eyes, as Aben Ezra gloſſes it; which is the ſame as before: offer it now unto thy governor; to Zerubbabel, who was governor of Judea at this time, Hagg. i. 1. for they had no king. The meaning is, offer a lamb, or any other creature that is blind, ſick, and lame; make a preſent of it to him that had the government of them; make trial this way, and ſee how acceptable it would be to him: will he be pleaſed with thee, or accept thy perſon, ſaith the Lord of hoſts? will he thank thee for it, or have any reſpect to thee on account of it? but, on the contrary, will he not reſent it as an affront to him? and if ſo it would be with an earthly prince, how can it be thought, that to offer the blind, lame, and ſick, ſhould be acceptable to the King of kings, and Lord of lords?

℣. 9. And now I pray you, beſeech God, that he will be gracious unto us, &c.] Theſe are the words of the prophet to the prieſts; and are ſpoken either ſeriouſly, exhorting them to that part of their office, which lay in interceding for the people; that God would be gracious to them, and forgive their ſins; and the rather, inaſmuch as they had been the means of their ſin, and acceſſary to it, who ought to have reproved them for bringing ſuch offerings, and ſhould have refuſed to offer them for them; or otherwiſe if they did not do this, they could not expect that God would accept their perſons, and their offerings: or elſe ironically, now you have offered ſuch ſacrifices to the Lord, as the blind, the lame, and ſick, go and intercede for the people; pray that their ſins may be forgiven them, and that the curſe may be removed from them, and ſee how you will ſucceed: this hath been by your means; that ſuch ſacrifices were offered up; they indulged the people in ſuch practices, and encouraged them; the fault was theirs; or this curſe, as Kimchi explains it, from ℣. 14: will he regard your perſons, ſaith the Lord of hoſts? can you ever imagine that God will have any reſpect to your perſons or prayers, when you have acted ſo vile a part, and been the cauſe of ſo much ſin and evil? no, he will not, as is aſſerted in the following verſe.

℣. 10. Who is there even among you, that would ſhut the doors for nought, &c.] Either of the temple, as the Targum and Jarchi; for at the ſeveral gates of the temple there were porters appointed in David's time, 1 Chron. xxvi. 1—19. and who were paid for their ſervice: or, of the court, as Kimchi; the court of the prieſts where the offerings were brought. The words for nought, are not in the original text, at the end of this clauſe, but at the end of the next; and are by ſome referred to both; and by others reſtrained to the latter; and who give this as the ſenſe of the words, who is there, or would there were any among you[f]? any good man, that would ſhut the doors of the temple, that ſo a man might not bring an abominable offering; intimating, that the prieſts or Levites however, who were porters, ought to ſhut the doors againſt ſuch perſons; and this way go Jarchi, Kimchi, and Abarbinel; to which the Chaldee paraphraſe inclines; which is, "who is "there among you that will ſhut the door of the "houſe of my ſanctuary, that ye may not offer "on mine altar an abominable ſacrifice;" but the ſame writers, out of an ancient book called Torath Cohanim, obſerve a ſenſe that agrees with ours, "a "man ſays to his friend, ſhut this door for me, "he deſires nothing for it; light me this candle, "he aſks no reward for it; but as for you, who

“ is there among you that will ſhut my doors for “ nought? or kindle a fire on mine altar for “ nought? and how much leſs will you do freely “ thoſe things which uſed to be done for reward? “ therefore I have no pleaſure in you.” There were four and twenty porters to open and ſhut the doors of the mountain of the houſe, or the temple, and the court of women in the day-time; ſix on the eaſt-ſide; four on the north; four on the ſouth; at Aſuppim two and two, four in all; four on the weſt, and two at Parbar [g]: here they attended in the day-time, to keep the place pure and peaceable; and there ſeems to have been one over all the reſt, whoſe buſineſs was to ſee that the doors at evening were ſhut by them: in the Miſna [h] we are told, that Ben Geber was appointed over the ſhutting of the gates, i. e. of the temple; and at night there were four and twenty guards alſo that kept watch; the prieſts kept guard in three places; in the room Abtines, in the room Nitſots, and in the fire-room; and one and twenty Levites; five at the five gates of the mountain of the houſe, or the compaſs of the temple; four at the four corners within; five at the five gates of the court; and four at its four corners without; one at the chamber Corban; one at the chamber over againſt the vail; and another behind the moſt holy place; and there was one that was called the man of the mountain of the houſe, who every night went thro' every ward with torches burning before him; and he had power to beat thoſe he found aſleep in their watch, and to burn their garments [i], to which the alluſion is, Rev. xvi. 15. and theſe guards, as Bartenora [k] obſerves, were not on account of thieves and robbers, but for the honour of the houſe; and theſe, neither the one by day, nor the other by night, did their work for nought, but had a maintenance allowed them for it: neither do ye kindle fire upon mine altar for nought; and this was done every morning; for tho', as one of the Jewiſh writers ſays [l], fire came down from heaven, it was ordered that they ſhould bring of common fire; and there were three piles or rows of fire made every day upon the altar; the firſt was a large one, on which they offered the daily ſacrifice, with the reſt of the offerings; the ſecond was on the ſide of it, a little one, from whence they took fire in the cenſer to burn incenſe every day; the third had no other uſe for it, but to confirm the command concerning fire; as it is ſaid, the fire ſhall ever be burning, Lev. vi. 13 [m]. and this fire was kindled to burn the ſacrifices, the daily ſacrifice, and other burnt-offerings, for which they were paid out of the tithes, and other oblations; ſee 1 Cor. ix. 13. this was an aggravation of their negligence and careleſſneſs, about what offerings were brought and ſacrificed; ſeeing they were ſo well taken care of, and ſuch a ſufficient maintenance provided for them; ſo that they did not the leaſt piece of ſervice in the temple, but they were fully rewarded for it; even not ſo much as to ſhut a door, or kindle a fire; and therefore it is no wonder their conduct ſhould be reſented, as follows, I have no pleaſure in you, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; neither in your perſons, nor in your offerings: neither will I accept an offering at your hand; the Minchah or meat-offering, any meat-offering, particularly that which was offered morning and evening with the daily ſacrifice, Exod. xxix. 40, 41. and it is ſometimes uſed particularly for the evening meat-offering, 2 Kings xvi. 15. or rather, a wheat, or bread-offering; ſince this offering was made of fine flour, with oil poured upon it, and frankincenſe put upon that, Lev. ii. 1. hence mention is made of incenſe in the next verſe; and it was either baked in an oven, or fried in a pan; and either way, when it was brought to the prieſt, it was burnt on the altar, and was an offering by fire to the Lord, and of a ſweet ſavour to him, when rightly performed; and was a figure of the ſacrifice of Chriſt, which is of a ſweet ſmelling ſavour to God; and this paſſage reſpects goſpel-times, as appears from the following verſe, when Chriſt's ſacrifice would be offered up, and ſo the oblation or meat-offering made to ceaſe, Dan. ix. 27. hence God would not accept of it any more; or elſe becauſe not rightly offered, as it was not when any leaven was mixed with it, or that and honey were burnt with it; ſignifying it ſhould be offered with ſincerity, and without hypocriſy, and other carnal luſts; and indeed, no legal ſacrifices were acceptable to God, but ſuch as were offered up in the faith of Chriſt, and with a view to his ſacrifice, without truſting to, and depending upon, the outward offering, as hypocrites and carnal perſons did: wherefore to this is oppoſed a pure Minchah or meat-offering in the next verſe; which deſigns ſpiritual ſacrifices, ſuch as are now offered up under the goſpel-diſpenſation; when offering and ſacrifice of a ceremonial kind God deſires not; he will have no more offered up; he takes no pleaſure in them; they are not acceptable to him, being ſuperſeded by the ſacrifice of his Son, they were types of; ſee Pſ. xl. 6. Heb. x. 5, 6. and agreeable to which paſſages the words may be underſtood, as expreſſing the Lord's rejection of legal ſacrifices in general among the Jews, which he would have no longer continued than till the Meſſiah came; by whoſe ſufferings and death the daily ſacrifice was cauſed to ceaſe, Dan. ix. 27. Hoſ. iii. 4. when ſacrifices of another kind ſhould be offered up in the Gentile world, thro' every part of it, as in the following verſe.

℣. 11. For from the riſing of the ſun, even unto the going down of the ſame, &c.] From eaſt to weſt, which is all habitable; not ſo north and ſouth, as Kimchi obſerves, the extremes of which are not habitable. Abarbinel thinks that מ in ממזרח is cauſal; and that the ſenſe is, becauſe of the motion of the ſun in riſing and ſetting, the Gentiles acknowledge God to be the firſt mover and cauſe of all things; and who, tho' they worſhip the hoſt of heaven, yet ultimately direct their worſhip to the ſupreme being, the cauſe of cauſes; and ſuppoſes this to be a reproof of the prieſts, who might have learnt better, even of the very heathens: but the former is the true ſenſe, which declares the large extent of true ſpiritual worſhip in the Gentile world: my name ſhall be great among the Gentiles; thro' the preaching of the goſpel, attended with the Spirit and power of God to the converſion of many; whereby he himſelf is made known, and the perfections of his nature, and his ſeveral names, and particularly that of the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus; who, as ſuch, is invocated, and greatneſs and glory are aſcribed unto him for the gift of his Son, and the miſſion of him into the world, to be the Saviour of Gentiles, as well as of Jews: and in every place incenſe ſhall be offered unto my name; ſome Jewiſh writers underſtand this of Iſraelites, the diſciples of the wiſe men, ſtudying in the law, and putting up their evening prayers to God, in every place where they live among the Gentiles; which are as acceptable to God as if they offered incenſe, and a pure offering; this way goes Jarchi, to which agrees the Targum; and this ſenſe is given in the Talmud[n], and other writings of theirs; but Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Abarbinel interpret it of the Gentiles, tho' in different ways, and foreign from the ſenſe of the text; which is, that not in Jeruſalem the worſhip of God ſhould be as formerly, but in all places in the Gentile world, and where particularly prayer ſhould be made to God; ſee John iv. 20, 21, 23. 1 Tim. ii. 8. comparable to incenſe for its fervency, fragrancy, and gratefulneſs, Pſ. cxli. 2. Rev. viii. 3, 4: and a pure offering; meaning either the Gentiles themſelves, their ſouls and bodies, Iſ. lxvi. 20. Pſ. li. 17. Rom. xii. 1. or their ſacrifices of praiſe, good works, and alms-deeds, Heb. xiii. 15, 16. which, tho' imperfect, and not free from ſin, may be ſaid to be pure, proceeding from a pure heart, ſprinkled by the blood of Chriſt, and offered in a pure and ſpiritual manner, and thro' the pure incenſe of Chriſt's mediation: for my name ſhall be great among the heathen, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; which is repeated for the certainty of it.

℣. 12. But ye have profaned it, &c.] That is, the name of the Lord, which they are ſaid to deſpiſe, ℣. 6. and pollute, ℣. 7. and is a reaſon why they and their offerings were rejected: and that they profaned the name of the Lord appears by this, in that ye ſay, the table of the Lord is polluted; the ſame with contemptible, ℣. 7. as Kimchi obſerves; ſee the note there: and the fruit thereof, even his meat is contemptible; the word for fruit[o] ſometimes is uſed for ſpeech, the fruit of the lips, Iſ. lvii. 19. and taken in this ſenſe here, as it is by ſome, may be underſtood either of the word of God, which commanded ſuch and ſuch ſacrifices to be offered up upon the altar, and was deſpiſed, ſo Abarbinel: or the word of the prieſts, who were continually ſaying, that what was offered up on the altar was contemptible, even the food which they ate of; ſo Jarchi and Kimchi. Fruit and meat ſeem to ſignify one and the ſame thing, and deſign the fruit and meat of the altar; either that which belonged to the Lord, the fat and the blood, which were offered to him, and were reckoned contemptible; or that which fell to the ſhare of the prieſts, which they thought mean and worthleſs. Cocceius interprets this of Chriſt the branch of the Lord, and fruit of the earth, Iſ. iv. 2. whoſe meat it was to do the will of him that ſent him, and was deſpiſed and rejected by the Jews; and which was the reaſon of God's caſting them off, and taking in the Gentiles.

℣. 13. Ye ſaid alſo, behold, what a wearineſs is it? &c.] Theſe are either the words of the prieſts, ſaying what a weariſome and fatiguing buſineſs the temple-ſervice was to them, for which they thought they were poorly paid; ſuch as ſlaying the ſacrifices; removing the aſhes from the altar; putting the wood in order; kindling the fire, and laying the ſacrifice on it: or of the people that brought the ſacrifice, who, when they brought a lamb upon their ſhoulders, and laid it down, ſaid, how weary are we with bringing it, ſuggeſting it was ſo fat and fleſhy; ſo Kimchi and Abarbinel, to which ſenſe the Targum ſeems to agree; which paraphraſes it, "but if ye ſay, lo, what we have brought is from "our labour;" and ſo the Syriac verſion, and ye ſay this is from our labour; and the Vulgate Latin verſion, and ye ſay, lo, from labour; and the Septuagint verſion, and ye ſay, theſe are from affliction; meaning that what they brought was with great toil and labour, out of great poverty, miſery, and affliction: and ye have ſnuffed at it, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; or blown it[p]; filled it with wind, that it might ſeem fat and fleſhy, when it was poor and lean; ſo Abarbinel and Abendana: or ye have puffed, and panted, and blown as perſons weary with bringing ſuch a heavy lamb, when it was ſo poor and light, that if it was blown at, it would fall to the ground; ſo R. Joſeph Kimchi: or ye have puffed at it, thrown it upon the ground by way of contempt; ſo David Kimchi: or, ye have grieved him[q]; the owner of the lamb, from whom they ſtole it; which ſenſe is mentioned by Kimchi and Ben Melech; taking the word rendered torn, in the next clauſe, for that which was ſtolen. Jarchi ſays, this is one of the eighteen words corrected by the ſcribes; and that inſtead of אותו it, it ſhould be read אותי me; and the whole rendered, and ye have grieved me; the Lord, by bringing ſuch ſacrifices, and complaining of wearineſs, and by their hypocriſy and deceitfulneſs. Cocceius renders the words, ye have made him to expire; meaning the Meſſiah, whom the Jews put to death: and ye have brought that which was torn, and the lame, and the ſick; ſee the note on ℣. 8. and if the firſt word is rendered ſtolen, as it may, this offering was an abomination to the Lord, Iſ. lxi. 8: thus ye brought an offering; ſuch an one as it was: or a Minchah, a meat-offering along with theſe abominable ones: ſhould I accept this of your hands, ſaith the Lord? which, when offered to a civil governor, would not be acceptable, ℣. 8. and when contrary to the expreſs law of God.

℣. 14. But curſed be the deceiver, &c.] A cunning, crafty, ſubtle man, who thinks, and contrives, ſpeaks, and acts in a very artful and deceiving manner; tho' ſome derive the word from יכל to be able; and ſo the Septuagint and Arabic verſions render it, who is able; to bring a proper offering, a perfect lamb, as it follows: which hath in his flock a male; without ſpot and blemiſh, as the law requires: and voweth, and ſacrificeth to the Lord a corrupt thing; that was a female, or had blemiſhes in it; for the law required what was perfect and without a blemiſh for a vow; what was ſuperfluous or deficient in its parts, might do for a free-will offering, but not for a vow, Lev. xxii. 18, 19, 20, 23. wherefore ſuch a man muſt be accurſed, and ſuch conduct muſt be highly reſented by the Lord; had he it not in his power to do better, it might be excuſable; but then it would be better not to have vowed at all; but to vow a ſacrifice to the Lord, and deal deceitfully with him, when he could have brought an offering agreeable to his vow, and to the law, this is aggravated wickedneſs: for I am a great king, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; the king of the whole world, the King of kings, and Lord of lords; and therefore to be honoured and reverenced ſuitable to his dignity and greatneſs: and my name is dreadful among the heathen; becauſe of his judgments executed among them; or rather, becauſe of his goſpel preached unto them; for this may be conſidered as a prophecy of what would be when the goſpel ſhould be ſpread in the Gentile world; and therefore if they, when he was made known to them, would fear and reverence him; then the Iſraelites, to whom he had given ſuch inſtances and proofs of his love, ought to have ſhown a greater regard unto him.

CHAP. II.

THIS chapter contains a reproof both of prieſts and people for their ſins. It begins with the prieſts, ℣. 1. and threatens in caſe they attend not to glorify the name of the Lord, they and their bleſſings ſhould be curſed, their ſeed corrupted, dung ſpread upon them, and they took away with it, ℣. 2, 3. and the end of this commandment being ſent them, of giving glory to the name of God, was that the covenant might appear to be with Levi, or him that was typified by him, ℣. 4. of which covenant ſome account is given, with the reaſon why the bleſſings of it were given to him, with whom it was, ℣. 5. who is deſcribed by the true doctrine he preached; by the purity of his lips; by the peaceableneſs and righteouſneſs of his walk and converſation; and by his uſefulneſs and ſucceſs in turning many from ſin, ℣. 6. and it being part of the prieſt's office to preſerve true knowledge, and communicate it, it is the duty of the people to ſeek to him for it; ſince he is the meſſenger of the Lord, ℣. 7. but as for the prieſts of thoſe times the prophet reſpects, they were apoſtates from the way of the Lord; made others to ſtumble at the law, and corrupted the covenant; and therefore became contemptible, baſe, and mean in the ſight of the people, ℣. 8, 9. who are next reproved for their marrying with thoſe of other nations, idolatrous perſons; and uſing polygamy and divorces, which were a profanation of the covenant of their fathers; a piece of perfidy and treachery among themſelves; an abomination to the Lord; a profanation of his holineſs; and led to idolatry, ℣. 10, 11. wherefore they are threatened to be cut off from the tabernacles of Jacob, and their ſacrifices to be rejected; inſomuch that the altar is repreſented as covered with weeping and tears, becauſe diſregarded, ℣. 12, 13. The reaſon of which was, becauſe marrying more wives than one, and theſe ſtrange women, was dealing treacherouſly with their lawful wives; was contrary to the firſt creation of man, and the end of it; and therefore ſuch practices ought to be avoided; and the rather, ſince putting away was hateful to the Lord, ℣. 14, 15, 16. and the chapter is concluded with a charge againſt them, that they wearied the Lord with their wicked words; affirming that the Lord took delight in men that did evil; and that there were no judgment, truth, nor righteouſneſs in him, ℣. 17.

℣. 1. And now, O ye prieſts, &c.] That deſpiſed and profaned the name of the Lord; that ſuffered ſuch corrupt and illegal ſacrifices to be brought, and offered up: this commandment is for you; of giving glory to the name of God; of taking care of his worſhip; of teaching the people knowledge, and directing them in the way in which they ſhould walk; as follows:

℣. 2. If ye will not hear, &c.] The commandment enjoined them; or the goſpel preached to them by Chriſt, and his apoſtles: and if ye will not lay it to heart, to give glory to my name, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; which they had deſpiſed and profaned before; if they did not take care of his worſhip and ſervice, and honour the Meſſiah ſent unto them, in whom the name of the Lord was: I will even ſend a curſe upon you; both upon prieſts and people; thoſe that bring the bad offerings, and thoſe that receive them, as Kimchi; tho' Abarbinel reſtrains it to the prieſts: and I will curſe your bleſſings; either with which the prieſts bleſſed the people; or with which both they and the people were bleſſed; namely, their temporal bleſſings, ſuch as their corn, and wine, and oil: and what wicked men have of this world, they have it with a curſe, and not a bleſſing, as the righteous have; and therefore a little which they have, is better than much enjoyed by the wicked, Pſ. xxxvii. 16: yea, I have curſed them already; that is, from the time they began to deſpiſe his name, and not give him the glory due unto him, as Kimchi and Abarbinel explain it: becauſe ye do not lay it to heart; to glorify God.

℣. 3. Behold, I will corrupt your ſeed, &c.] Or, the ſeed for you [r]; that is, for your ſake, as Kimchi and Ben Melech explain it; meaning the ſeed they caſt into the earth, which the Lord threatens to corrupt and deſtroy; ſo that it ſhould not ſpring up again, and bring forth any increaſe: or, rebuke [s] it, as the word ſometimes ſignifies; and ſo the Targum, "behold, I will rebuke you in the "increaſe, the fruit (ſon) of the ſeed." The ſenſe is the ſame; corrupting the ſeed being a rebuke to them; and rebuking the ſeed being a corruption of that, or hindring it from growing up. It is a threatning of a ſore famine that ſhould be in the Jewiſh nation; and which Cocceius thinks was that which happened in the days of Claudius Cæſar, Acts xi. 28, 29. The Septuagint verſion renders it, behold, I ſeparate to you the ſhoulder; the Arabic verſion, the right-hand, or arm; and the Vulgate Latin is, behold, I will caſt forth to you the arm; the right-ſhoulder of the ſacrifice, which was given to the prieſts, and here threatened to be caſt to them with indignation, Lev. vii. 32, 34. Deut. xviii. 3. but the former ſenſe is beſt: and ſpread dung upon your faces, even the dung of your ſolemn feaſts; that is, the dung of their beaſts which were ſlain for ſacrifice at their ſolemn feaſts: ſo this word חג is uſed for a beaſt offered for ſacrifice at a feſtival, Pſ. cxviii. 27. The ſenſe is, that their ſacrifices and ſolemn feaſts were ſo far from being acceptable to God, that he would reject both them and their perſons, and would caſt the very dung of the creatures brought for ſacrifice into their faces, and ſpread it over them: a phraſe expreſſive of the utmoſt contempt of them, and of expoſing them to the greateſt ſhame and confuſion for their ſins. So the Targum, “I will make manifeſt the ſhame “of your ſins upon your faces; and will cauſe to “ceaſe the magnificence of your feaſts.” The Septuagint render it, the ventricle, or maw; which was given to the prieſts, Deut. xviii. 3. and in which the dung was contained: and one ſhall take you away with it; with the dung ſpread upon them; they looking like an heap of dung, being covered with it, and had in no more account than that: or, to it [t]; that is, as Jarchi explains it, to the dung of the beaſts of your ſacrifices, they ſhall carry you; or you ſhall be carried to it, that ye may be rejected and deſpiſed as that. Kimchi's note is, “the iniquity (you are guilty of) ſhall carry “you to this contempt; meaſure for meaſure; “you have deſpiſed me, and ye ſhall be deſpiſed:” or with him, or to himſelf [u]; meaning he, or it that ſhall take them away; either the wind or dung; or the enemy, as Aben Ezra interprets it; by whom the Romans may be deſigned, who took them away out of their own land, and carried them captive. According to the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic verſions, this is to be underſtood of God, who render the words, I will take you together, or with it.

℣. 4. And ye ſhall know that I have ſent this commandment unto you, &c.] See the note on ℣. 1: that my covenant might be with Levi, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; not that the ceremonial law might be confirmed and eſtabliſhed, on which the Levitical prieſthood was founded; for it was the will of God that that ſhould be aboliſhed, becauſe of the weakneſs and unprofitableneſs of it; but that the covenant of grace made with Chriſt, the antitype of Levi, with whom the true Urim and Thummim are, Deut. xxxiii. 8. who has a more excellent miniſtry and prieſthood than his, might take place, be made manifeſt, and be exhibited under the goſpel-diſpenſation; of which, and of the perſon with whom it is, an account is given in the following verſes.

℣. 5. My covenant was with him of life and peace, &c.] Not with Aaron, nor with Phinehas; nor is it to be underſtood of a covenant, promiſing temporal life and outward proſperity to either of them; Aaron living an hundred and thirty-three years, Numb. xxxiii. 39. and Phinehas, according to ſome Jewiſh writers, above three hundred years, which they gather from Judg. xx. 28. but of the covenant made with Chriſt from everlaſting, called a covenant of life, becauſe it was made with Chriſt the word of life, who was with the Father from all eternity, and in time was made manifeſt in the fleſh; and was made in behalf of perſons ordained to eternal life, and in which that was promiſed and given to them in him; and in which it was agreed, that he ſhould become man, and lay down his life as ſuch, that they might enjoy it: and it is called a covenant of peace, becauſe the ſcheme of peace and reconciliation was drawn in it, and agreed unto; Chriſt was appointed in it to be the peacemaker; and in conſequence of which he was ſent to procure peace, and he has made it by the blood of his croſs: and this covenant may be ſaid to have been, and to be with him; becauſe it was made with him from all eternity, as the head and repreſentative of his people, and he had all the bleſſings and promiſes of it put into his hands; and it ſtands faſt with him, and will do ſo for evermore. And I gave them to him; namely, the bleſſings of life and peace; eternal life is the gift of God; and not only the promiſe of it, but that itſelf was given to Chriſt in covenant for his people, and a power to give it to as many as the Father gave to him, Pſ. xxi. 4. 2 Tim. i. 1. 1 John v. 12. John xvii. 2. he gave him alſo peace to make, put this work of peace-making into his hand; and he allows it to be made by him, and that it is rightly effected; and from his blood and righteouſneſs peace ſprings to his people; and they enjoy peace in him and thro' him, yea, all proſperity and happineſs: for the fear wherewith he feared me; becauſe of his obedience to the precept and penalty of the law; becauſe of his righteouſneſs, and ſufferings, and death, by means of which life and peace came to his people, and in which he ſhewed great fear and reverence of God, Heb. v. 7. the word for is not in the original text, and may be left out in a verſion, or ſupplied with and; and the ſenſe be, beſides the bleſſings of life and peace, I alſo gave him the fear with which he feared me; which muſt be underſtood of the grace of fear beſtowed on him as man: ſo the Septuagint verſion, I gave unto him in fear to fear me; and the Vulgate Latin verſion, and I gave him fear, and he feared me; and the Arabic verſion, I gave him fear, that he might fear me: the Targum is, “I gave him the perfect “doctrine of the law, or the doctrine of the perfect law (ſee Jam. i. 25.) that he might fear “before me.” And he was afraid before my name; affrighted, and put into conſternation, as he was when in the garden, and he began to be heavy and ſore amazed, Mark xiv. 33. or he was broken and bruiſed, as Kimchi interprets the word here uſed, becauſe of the name of the Lord, to ſatisfy his juſtice, fulfil his law, and glorify all his perfections.

℣. 6. The law of truth was in his mouth, &c.] The goſpel, the word and doctrine of truth; which comes from the God of truth; is concerning Chriſt the truth; and men are guided into it by the Spirit of truth; it contains moſt glorious truths, and nothing but truth: and this was in the mouth of Chriſt, being put there by his Father, who gave him what he ſhould ſay, and what he ſhould ſpeak; and which was preached by him in the moſt faithful manner, and ſo as it never was by any other, for which he was abundantly qualified: and iniquity was not found in his lips; there was none in his nature; nor in his heart; nor in his life; nor in his lips; none could be found there by men or devils: there was no falſhood in his doctrines; no deceit in his promiſes; no diſſimulation in his expreſſions of love to men; nothing vain, light, frothy, and unprofitable, dropped from him in common converſation; no reviling in return to his enemies; nor any impatient expreſſions or murmurings at the time of his ſufferings and death, 1 Pet. ii. 22, 23: he walked with me in peace and equity; he walked with God, he had communion with him; tho' he was ſometimes left alone, he was not alone, God was with him; he was conformable to his will, and walked according to it, in obedience to his law, moral and ceremonial, and in the diſcharge of all religious duties: he walked with God in peace, without quarrelling with any of his diſpenſations towards him; he did nothing to break the peace that ſubſiſted between them, but always did the things which pleaſed his Father, and had peace in what he did; and he walked with him in equity or righteouſneſs, fulfilling his righteous law, and bringing in an everlaſting righteouſneſs: and did turn many away from iniquity; doctrinal and practical; which is to be underſtood, not of a bare reformation only in principle and practice, but of true, real converſion; of which there were many inſtances under the miniſtry of his forerunner John the Baptiſt, and under his own miniſtry when in perſon on earth; and under the miniſtry of his apoſtles, attended with his Spirit and power, both in Judea, and in the Gentile world.

[u] Ad ſe, Pagninus, Montanus, Munſter,

℣. 7. For the prieſts lips ſhould keep knowledge, &c.] Or ſhall keep knowledge, as the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions; or do keep knowledge, as the Arabic verſion; and ſo the Syriac verſion, for the lips of the prieſt drop knowledge; all this is true of Chriſt our great high-prieſt; for as it was predicted of him, that his lips ſhould keep knowledge, ſo they have kept it, and do keep it; not concealing it, but preſerving it, and communicating it freely and openly; as he did to his diſciples and followers when here on earth, and by them to others; and ſtill does by his Spirit, giving to men the knowledge of themſelves and ſtate; the knowledge of himſelf, and the way of ſalvation by him, and of the truths of the goſpel: and they ſhould ſeek the law at his mouth; not the law of Moſes, but the doctrine of grace, and any wholeſome inſtruction and advice; which he is greatly qualified to give, being the wonderful counſellor: it may be rendered, they ſhall ſeek, or do ſeek; and which has been fulfilled, eſpecially in the Gentiles, and in the iſles that waited for his law or doctrine, Iſ. xi. 10. and xlii. 4: for he is the meſſenger of the Lord of hoſts; or angel [w]; he is the angel of God's preſence, and of the covenant, Iſ. lxiii. 9. Mal. iii. 1. which name he has from being ſent, for he came not of himſelf, but his Father ſent him; he was ſent as a prieſt to atone for the ſins of his people, and to be their Saviour; and as a prophet, to inſtruct and teach them; and therefore they ſhould ſeek to him for knowledge, and attend his will and ordinances, and implore his Spirit and grace.

℣. 8. But ye are departed out of the way, &c.] Of truth and righteouſneſs, of life and peace, of eternal ſalvation and happineſs, pointed to by Chriſt and his forerunner, and by his apoſtles and miniſters that followed him, and which was clearly ſhewed in the preaching of the goſpel: this was the character of the chief prieſts, ſcribes and phariſees in Chriſt's time, to which the prophet ſeems to have reſpect; who not only failed in their obſervance of legal ſacrifices, complained of in the former chapter, but left that way of atonement and ſalvation they directed to, and led others out of the way with them: ye have cauſed many to ſtumble at the law; at the doctrine of juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; which was the ſtumbling-ſtone they fell at, ſeeking for righteouſneſs, and directing others to ſeek for it, not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law, Rom. ix. 32, 33: ye have corrupted the covenant of Levi, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; that which was ſhadowed out by the Levitical prieſthood and covenant, namely, the covenant of grace, diſpenſed under the goſpel-diſpenſation by the miniſtry of the word and ordinances; which they rejected, deſpiſed, and ſet at nought, and as much as in them lay endeavoured to make void, by not attending to theſe things, nor ſuffering others, but doing all they could to bring them into diſuſe, contempt, and diſgrace.

℣. 9. Therefore have I alſo made you contemptible and baſe, &c.] When their city and temple were deſtroyed by the Romans, and they were carried captive by them, and became a taunt and a proverb in all places where they came: before all the people; the nations of the world, among whom they were ſcattered: according as ye have not kept my ways; neither thoſe which the law directed to, either moral or ceremonial; nor what the goſpel directed to, the ordinances and inſtitutions of Chriſt, particularly baptiſm, which the Jews rejected againſt themſelves, Luke vii. 30: but have been partial in the law; in the obſervance of it, attending to the leſſer, and taking no notice of the weightier matters of it, as the Jews are charged by Chriſt, Matt. xxiii. 23. and in the interpretation of it, reſtraining its ſenſe only to outward actions, for which they are reproved, Matt. v. or received faces, or accepted perſons in the law [x]; in matters of the law they were concerned in, they had reſpect to the perſons of men, by giving the ſenſe of it, and pronouncing judgment, in favour of ſome, to the prejudice of others, wrongly.

℣. 10. Have ye not all one father? &c.] Whether this is underſtood of Adam the firſt man, of whoſe blood all nations of the earth are made, and who in the ſame ſenſe is the father of all living, as Eve was the mother of all living; or of Abraham the father of the Jewiſh people, of whom, as their father, they uſed to glory; or of Jacob, as Kimchi and Aben Ezra interpret it, whom the Jews uſed to call our father Jacob; or of God, who is the Father of all men by creation, and of the Jews by national adoption of them; and who may the rather be thought to be meant, ſince it follows, hath not one God created us? either as men, or formed us as a body politick; which may ſerve to explain what is meant by their having one father: which ever is the ſenſe of theſe words, the argument from hence is ſtrong; that there ought to be no partiality uſed in the law, or any reſpect had to perſons, in that the rich and the poor have all one father and one creator; ſee Jam. ii. 1—8: why do we deal treacherouſly every man againſt his brother; by perverting juſtice, having reſpect to perſons, favouring one to the prejudice of another, as it follows: by prophaning the covenant of your fathers? the covenant made with them at Sinai, as Jarchi explains it; the law that was then enjoined them, particularly ſuch as forbid reſpect of perſons, Lev. xix. 15. Deut. xvi. 19. ſome think, as Aben Ezra, that a new ſection here begins, and that the prophet proceeds to a new reproof, and for another ſin theſe people were guilty of, in marrying wives of another nation, contrary to the law in Exod. xxxiv. 15. which was dealing treacherouſly with one another, and profaning the covenant of their fathers.

℣. 11. Judah hath dealt treacherouſly, &c.] Not only every man againſt his brother, by being partial in the law; or againſt the women of their nation, by marrying others; or againſt their wives, by putting them away; but againſt Chriſt the Son of God, by betraying and delivering him up into the hands of the Gentiles, to be mocked, and ſcourged, and crucified: and an abomination is committed in Iſrael, and in Jeruſalem; which was the taking of the true Meſſiah with wicked hands, condemning him and putting him to death, even the ſhameful and accurſed death of the croſs; which was done in the land of Iſrael, and in and near the city of Jeruſalem: for Judah hath profaned the holineſs of the Lord, which he loved; Chriſt, who is the Lord's holy one, holineſs itſelf, the moſt holy, and holineſs to the Lord for his people; and who is his dear Son, the Son of his love, whom he loved from everlaſting, continued to love in time amidſt all his meanneſs, ſorrows, and ſufferings, and will love for evermore; him the Jews profaned by blaſpheming him, falſely accuſing him, and condemning him; by ſpitting upon him, buffetting, ſcourging, and crucifying him: ſome interpret this holineſs of the ſoul of Judah, which was holy before the Lord, and loved, as the Targum; ſo Jarchi of Judah himſelf, or Iſrael, who was holineſs to the Lord; and others of the holy place, the ſanctuary, and all holy things belonging thereto; and others of the holy ſtate of marriage, ſince it follows: and hath married the daughter of a ſtrange god; which the Targum paraphraſes thus, "and they were pleaſed to take to them "wives, the daughters of the people;" the Gentiles, ſuch as Moabites, Ammonites, and the like: and this ſenſe is followed by moſt interpreters, tho' the phraſe ſeems rather to be expreſſive of idolatry; and ſo the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic verſions interpret it of their being intent upon, and ſerving ſtrange gods; and as the Jews rejected the Son of God, and his word, ordinances, and worſhip, they had not the true God, nor did they worſhip him, but became guilty of idolatry; and beſides, as they rejected the king Meſſiah from being their king, ſo they declared they had no king but Cæſar, an idolatrous emperor, and joined with the idolatrous Gentiles in putting Chriſt to death, John xix. 12, 15. Acts iv. 27.

℣. 12. The Lord will cut off the man that doth this, &c.] That is guilty of ſuch treachery, wickedneſs, and idolatry: or to the man that doth this[y]; all that belong to him, his children and ſubſtance: it denotes the utter deſtruction, not of a ſingle man and his family only, but of the whole Jewiſh nation and its polity, civil and eccleſiaſtical, as follows: the maſter and the ſcholar out of the tabernacles of Jacob; the Targum paraphraſes it, "the ſon, and ſon's ſon, out of the cities of "Jacob;" agreeable to which is Kimchi's note, "it "is as if it was ſaid, there ſhall not be left in "his houſe one alive; that there ſhall not be in "his houſe one that anſwers him, that calls by "name." In the Hebrew text it is, him that is awake, and him that anſwers[z]; which the Talmudiſts[a] explain, the former of the wiſe men or maſters, and the latter of the diſciples of the wiſe men; to which ſenſe our verſion agrees: but by him that waketh or watcheth, according to Cocceius, is meant the civil magiſtrate, who watches for the good of the commonwealth, and ſo may deſign the elders and rulers of the people; and by him that anſwereth, the prophet, who returns anſwers when he is conſulted in things belonging to the law of God, and ſuch were the ſcribes and lawyers. And him that offereth an offering unto the Lord of hoſts; the prieſt, that offered ſacrifice for the people; ſo that hereby is threatened an entire deſtruction, both of the civil and eccleſiaſtical polity of the Jews, that there ſhould be no prince, prophet, and prieſt among them; all ſhould be removed out of the tents of Jacob, or cities of Iſrael; ſee Hoſ. iii. 4.

℣. 13. And this have ye done again, &c.] Or in the ſecond[b] place; to their rejection and ill-treatment of Chriſt, they added their hypocritical prayers and tears, as follows: covering the altar of the Lord with tears and weeping, and with crying out; for the Meſſiah they vainly expect, pretending great humiliation for their ſins: tho' ſome, as Kimchi and Aben Ezra, make the firſt evil to be their offering illegal ſacrifices on the altar, complained of in the former chapter; and this ſecond, their marrying ſtrange wives, on account of which their lawful wives came into the houſe of God, and wept over the altar before the Lord, complaining of the injury that was done them: inſomuch that he regardeth not the offering any more, or receiveth it with good will at your hand; which expreſſes an utter rejection and abrogation of legal ſacrifices; and which ſome make to be the reaſon of their covering the altar with tears and weeping: or the altar is repreſented as weeping, becauſe ſacrifice is no more offered upon it; ſee Dan. ix. 27. Hoſ. iii. 4.

℣. 14. Yet ye ſay, wherefore? &c.] What's the meaning of the women covering the altar with tears? as if they knew not what was the reaſon of it, when they were ſo notoriouſly guilty of breach of covenant with them; which is an inſtance of their impudence, as Abarbinel obſerves: or, if ye ſay, wherefore? as the Targum and Kimchi interpret the words; ſhould you ſay, what's the reaſon why the Lord will not regard nor receive our offerings? the anſwer is ready, becauſe the Lord hath been witneſs between thee and the wife of thy youth; when eſpouſed together in their youthful days, the Lord was preſent at that ſolemn contract, and ſaw the obligations they were laid under to each other, and he was called upon by both parties to be a witneſs of the ſame; and at the preſent time he was a witneſs, how agreeably the wives of the Iſraelites had behaved towards their huſbands, and how treacherouſly they had acted towards them; he ſaw and knew, that whatever pretenſions they made, they did not love them, nor behave as they ſhould towards them; and therefore had juſt cauſe of complaint againſt them, and muſt be a witneſs for the one, and againſt the other: this ſin of hating and divorcing their wives, or of marrying others beſides them, which prevailed much in our Lord's time, is particularly mentioned, tho' they were guilty of many other ſins, as a reaſon of the Lord's not accepting their offerings: the aggravations of it are, that they had broken a contract God was witneſs to, and dealt injuriouſly with wives they had eſpouſed in the days of their youth; ſee Prov. ii. 17. and v. 18: againſt whom thou haſt dealt treacherouſly; by divorce or polygamy: the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, whom thou haſt deſpiſed: and the Septuagint and Arabic verſions, whom whom thou haſt left; divorced and took others, which aroſe from hatred and contempt of their former: other aggravations follow: yet is ſhe thy companion; or and ſhe is, or tho' ſhe is thy companion [c]; has been ſo in time paſt, and ought to be ſo ſtill, and ſo accounted: the wife is a part of a man's ſelf, is one fleſh with him; a partaker of what he has; a partner with him in proſperity and adverſity; a companion in life, civil and religious, and ought to remain ſo till death part them; for whom God has put together, let no man put aſunder: and the wife of thy covenant; wherefore either to divorce her, or marry another, was a breach of covenant; for by covenant is not meant the covenant of God made with the people of Iſrael, in which they both were; but the covenant of marriage made between them, and which was broken by ſuch practices.

℣. 15. And did not he make one? &c.] That is, did not God make one man, and out of his rib one woman? did he not make man, male and female? did he not make one pair, one couple, only Adam and Eve, whom he joined together in marriage? or rather, did he not make one woman only, and brought her to Adam to be his wife? which ſhows that his intention and will were, that one man ſhould have but one wife at a time; the contrary to which was the then preſent practice of the Jews: yet had he the reſidue of the Spirit; it was not for want of power that he made but one woman of Adam's rib, and breathed into her the breath of life, or infuſed into her a human ſoul or ſpirit; he could have made many women at the ſame time; and as the Father of ſpirits, having the reſidue of them with him, or a power left to make as many as he pleaſed, he could have imparted ſpirits unto them, and given Adam more wives than one: and wherefore one? what is the reaſon why he made but one woman, when he could have made ten thouſand, or as many as he pleaſed? the anſwer is, that he might ſeek a godly ſeed; or a ſeed of God [d]; a noble, excellent ſeed; a legitimate offſpring, born in true and lawful wedlock; ſee 1 Cor. vii. 14. a ſeed ſuitable to the dignity of human nature, made after the image of God, and not like that of brute beaſts, promiſcuous and uncertain: therefore take heed to your ſpirit; to your affections, that they don't go after other women, and be led thereby to take them in marriage, and to deſpiſe and divorce the lawful wife, as it follows: and let none deal treacherouſly with the wife of his youth; by marrying another, or divorcing her: theſe words are differently rendered and interpreted by ſome; but the ſenſe given ſeems to be the true one, and moſt agreeable to the ſcope of the place. Some render the firſt clauſe, hath not one made [e]? that is, did not the one God, who is the only living and true God, make one man or one woman? and then the ſenſe is the ſame as before; or did not that one God make, conſtitute, and appoint, that the woman ſhould be the man's companion, and the wife of his covenant, as in the latter part of the preceding verſe? or, did not one do [f]? that is, ſo as we have done, take another wife beſides the wife of his youth? and ſo they are the words of the people to the prophet, juſtifying their practice by example; by the example of Abraham, whom ſome of the Jewiſh writers think is intended by the one, as in Iſ. li. 2. Ezek. xxxiii. 24. The Targum is, "was not one Abraham alone, from "whom the world was created," or propagated? Kimchi gives it as his own ſenſe, in theſe words; "Abraham, who was one, and the father of all "that follow him in his faith, did not do as ye "have done; for he did not follow his luſt, nor "even marry Sarah, but ſo that he might cauſe "the ſeed of God to remain;" yet he mentions it as his father's ſenſe, that they are the words of the people to the prophet, expreſſed in a way of interrogation, ſaying, did not our father Abraham, who was one, do as we have done? who left his wife, and married Hagar his maid, tho' he had the reſidue or excellency of the Spirit, and was a prophet; to whom the prophet replies, and what did that one ſeek? a godly ſeed; which is as if it was ſaid, when he married Hagar, it was to ſeek a ſeed, becauſe he had no ſeed of Sarah his wife. A ſeed was promiſed him, in which all nations of the earth were to be bleſſed; he ſought not to gratify his luſt, but to obtain this ſeed, the Meſſiah, to whom the promiſes were made, as the apoſtle argues, Gal. iii. 16. he ſaith not, and to ſeeds as of many, but as of one, and to thy ſeed which is Chriſt; called here the godly ſeed, or the ſeed God [g], as ſome chuſe to render the words; that is, that ſeed which is God, who is a divine perſon, God and man in one perſon; or which is of God, of his immediate production, without the help of a man; which the Jews call the ſeed that comes from another place, and which they uſe as a periphraſis of the Meſſiah. So on thoſe words in Gen. iv. 25. ſhe called his name Seth, for God hath appointed me another ſeed, "ſays R. Tanchuma, in the name of R. Samuel, ſhe has reſpect to that ſeed which comes "from another place, and what is this? this is "the king Meſſiah [h]." And the ſame Rabbi elſewhere [i] obſerves, on thoſe words in Gen. xix. 32. that we may preſerve ſeed of our father; "it is not "written, that we may preſerve a ſon of our father, but that we may preſerve ſeed of our father; that ſeed which is he that comes from another place, and what is this? this is the king "Meſſiah." Now as Abraham had the promiſe of a ſon, and his wife was barren, he took the method he did that he might have one, the ſon of the promiſe, a type of the Meſſiah, and from whom he ſhould ſpring; and this is ſufficient to juſtify him in it: beſides, he did not deal treacherouſly with Sarah his wife, for it was with her good will, and by her authority he did this thing; but do you take heed to your ſpirit, that no one of you deal treacherouſly with the wife of his youth, to leave her, and marry the daughter of a ſtrange God: and much the ſame ſenſe Jarchi takes notice of, as the Agadah, or the interpretation of their ancient Rabbins. Some render the words, and not one does this; that is, deals treacherouſly with the wife of his youth, that has the reſidue of the Spirit, rit, or the leaſt ſpark of the Spirit of God in him; and how ſhould any one do it, ſeeking a godly ſeed? therefore take heed to your ſpirit, &c. ſo De Dieu. But according to others the ſenſe is, "there is not one of you that does according to "the law, whoſe ſpirit remains with him that is "not mixed with the daughter of a ſtrange god;" which is Aben Ezra's note. But according to Abarbinel the ſenſe is, not one only has done this, committed this evil, in marrying more and ſtrange women; not ſome only, and the reſt have the Spirit with them, and keep it pure from this ſin; ſo that a godly ſeed cannot be procreated from you; therefore take heed to your ſpirit.

ỳ. 16. For the Lord the God of Iſrael ſaith, that he hateth putting away, &c.] The divorcing of wives; for tho' this was ſuffered becauſe of the hardneſs of their hearts, it was not approved of by the Lord; nor was it from the beginning; and it was diſagreeable, and even hateful to him, Matt. xix. 8. in the margin of ſome bibles the words are rendered, if he hate her, put her away; and ſo the Targum, "but if thou hateſt her, put her away;" to which agree the Vulgate Latin, Septuagint, and Arabic verſions; and this ſenſe is made mention of in both Talmuds, and is thought to be agreeable to the law in Deut. xxiv. 3. tho' the law there ſpeaks of a fact that might be, and not of what ought to be; wherefore the former ſenſe is beſt; and this other ſeems to have been at firſt calculated to favour the practice of the Jews, who put away their wives thro' hatred to them. The Jews were very much inclined to divorce their wives upon very trivial occaſions; if they did not dreſs their food well, were not of good behaviour, or not ſo modeſt as became the daughters of Iſrael; if they did not find favour with their huſbands; and eſpecially, if they had entertained an hatred of them: ſo ſays R. Judah [k], "if he hate her, let "him put her away:" but this is by ſome of them reſtrained to a ſecond wife; for of the firſt they ſay, "it is not proper to be haſty to put "away a firſt wife; but a ſecond, if he hates her, "let him put her away [l]:" and R. Eleazer ſays [m], whoever divorces his firſt wife, even the altar ſheds tears for him, referring to the words in ỳ. 13. and divorces of this kind they only reckon lawful among the Iſraelites, and found it upon this paſſage; for ſo they make God to ſpeak after this manner [n], "in Iſrael I have granted divorces; "among the nations of the world I have not "granted divorces. R. Chananiah, in the name "of R. Phinehas, obſerves, that in every other "ſection it is written, the Lord of hoſts; but here "it is written, the God of Iſrael, to teach thee "that the holy bleſſed God does not put his name "to divorces (or allow them) but in Iſrael only. "R. Chayah Rabba ſays, the Gentiles have no di"vorces." But ſome of them have better underſtanding of theſe words, and more truly give the ſenſe of them thus, as R. Jochanan does, who interprets them, "the putting away of the wife is "hateful [o];" it is ſo to God, and ought not to be done by men, but in caſe of adultery, as our Lord has taught, Matt. v. 32. and xix. 9. and which was the doctrine of the ſchool of Shammai in Chriſt's time, who taught, "that no man "ſhould divorce his wife, unleſs he found in her "filthineſs;" i. e. that ſhe was guilty of adultery; tho' this Maimonides reſtrains to the firſt wife, as before: but the houſe of Hillell, who lived in the ſame time, was of a different mind, and taught that "if ſhe burnt his food;" either over dreſſed, or over ſalted it, according to Deut. xxiv. 1. R. Akiba ſays, if he found another more beautiful than her, according to Deut. xxiv. 1. he might divorce her [p]: of the form of a divorce, ſee the note on Matt. v. 31. Thoſe interpreters among chriſtians that go this way, don't look upon this as an approbation of divorce, on account of hatred; but that ſo to do is better than to retain them with hatred of them, ſeeing it was connived at, or than to take other wives with them. For one covereth violence with his garment, or on his garment, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; as he that puts away his wife does her an open injury, which tho' he may cover, pretending the law, which connives at divorces; yet the violence done to his wife is as manifeſt as the garment upon his back: tho' thoſe who think the former words are an inſtruction to put away wives when hated, conſider this as a reaſon why they ſhould do ſo; becauſe by retaining them, and yet hating them, and taking other wives to them, is doing them a real injury, whatever cover or pretence may be uſed; becauſe, if diſmiſſed, they might be loved by, and married to, other men. Aben Ezra ſeems to have hit the ſenſe of theſe words, when he makes this to be the object of God's hatred, as well as the former; his note is, "the Lord hateth him that putteth away "his wife that is pure, and he hates him that co"vereth; or God ſees his violence which is done "in ſecret." Mr. Pocock propoſes a conjecture, which is very ingenious and probable, that as the words will bear the conſtruction Aben Ezra gives, that God hates putting away, and hates that one ſhould put violence upon or over his garment; by garment he thinks may be meant a man's lawful wife, which is as a garment to him; and by violence a ſecond wife, or other wives, taken to the injury, hurt, and vexation of the former; and the covering, or ſuperinducing violence over the garment, is marrying an unlawful wife, over or with, or above his lawful one: and the ſenſe is, that as God hates divorce, ſo he hates polygamy: therefore take heed to your ſpirit, that you deal not treacherouſly; ſee the note on the preceding verſe.

ỳ. 17. Ye have wearied the Lord with your words, &c.] As well as with their actions; ſee Iſ. xliii. 24. this is ſaid after the manner of men, they ſaying thoſe things which were diſpleaſing and provoking to him, and which he could not bear to hear; or otherwiſe wearineſs, properly cannot be attributed to God: yet ye ſay, wherein have we wearied him? as if they were clear and innocent; or as the Targum, if ye ſhould ſay; though they might not expreſs themſelves in words in ſuch an impudent manner; yet ſhould they ſay ſo in their hearts, or ſuppoſing they ſhould utter ſuch words with their lips, out of the abundance of their evil hearts, the anſwer is ready: when ye ſay, every one that doth evil, is good in the ſight of the Lord, and he delighteth in them; which they concluded from the proſperity of the wicked, and the afflictions of the righteous; ſo murmuring at, and complaining of, the providence of God; he acting as if he delighted in wicked men, and as if they that did evil were the moſt grateful and acceptable to him: or, if this was not the caſe, where is the God of judgment? why does he not ariſe and ſhew himſelf to be a God that judgeth the earth, by taking vengeance on the wicked, and granting proſperity to his people? De Dieu takes theſe laſt words to be the words of the prophet, and thinks that אי is a particle of exclamation, and ſhould be rendered O; and that the prophet expreſſes his wonder at the patience and long-ſuffering of God, in bearing ſuch impiety and blaſphemy as before delivered. The Septuagint and Arabic verſions are, where is the God of righteouſneſs? either God the Father, who is righteous in all his ways, and faithful in the fulfilment of all his promiſes; or Chriſt, the Lord our righteouſneſs, who was to come, and is come into this world for judgment, as well as to bring in an everlaſting righteouſneſs. This may be conſidered as a ſcoff of wicked men, at the long delay of the Meſſiah's coming, when they expected outward proſperity and happineſs; juſt as the ſcoffers in the laſt day will mock at the promiſe of his ſecond coming, 2 Pet. iii. 3, 4. and ſo the words, with which the next chapter begins, are an anſwer to theſe.

CHAP. III.

THIS chapter begins with a prophecy of John the Baptiſt, the forerunner of Chriſt; and of the coming of Chriſt, and the effects and conſequences of it, with reſpect both to the righteous and the wicked; and it contains accuſations and charges of ſin againſt the Jews, intermixed with exhortations to repentance. John the Baptiſt is promiſed to be ſent, and is deſcribed by his office as a meſſenger, and by his work, to prepare the way of the Lord; and the Meſſiah is propheſied of, who is deſcribed by his characters; with reſpect to himſelf, the Lord and meſſenger of the covenant; with reſpect to the truly godly among the Jews, as the object of their deſire and delight; whoſe coming is ſpoken of as a certain thing, and which would be ſudden; and the place is mentioned he ſhould come into, ℣. 1. and this his coming is repreſented as terrible to the wicked, and as trying and purifying to the righteous, expreſſed by the various ſimilies of a refiner's fire, and fuller's ſoap; and the end anſwered by it, their offering a righteous offering to the Lord, ℣. 2, 3, 4. but with reſpect to the wicked he declares, he ſhould be a ſwift witneſs againſt them, whoſe characters are particularly given, and this aſſured from his immutability; the conſequence of which to the ſaints is good, being their ſecurity from deſtruction, ℣. 5, 6. and next a charge is commenced againſt the wicked Jews, as that in general they had for a long time revolted from the Lord, and were guilty of ſins of omiſſion and commiſſion, and are therefore exhorted to return to the Lord, with a promiſe that he'll return to them, and yet they refuſe, ℣. 7. and in particular, that they were guilty of ſacrilege, and ſo accounted, even the whole nation, in withholding tithes and ſacrifices, which they are exhorted to bring in; to which they are encouraged with promiſes of bleſſings of proſperity and protection, ℣. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. and that they had ſpoken impudent and blaſphemous words againſt the Lord; which tho' excepted to, is proved, by producing their own words, ℣. 13, 14, 15. and by the contrary behaviour of thoſe that feared the Lord, who were taken notice of by him, and were dear unto him, ℣. 16, 17. wherefore it is ſuggeſted, that the time would come, when there would be a manifeſt difference made between the one and the other, ℣. 18.

℣. 1. Behold, I will ſend my meſſenger, &c.] Theſe are the words of Chriſt, in anſwer to the queſtion put in the laſt verſe of the preceding chapter, where is the God of judgment? intimating that he would quickly appear, and previous to his coming ſend his meſſenger or angel; not the angel of death to deſtroy the wicked, as Jarchi thinks; nor an angel from heaven, as Kimchi; nor Meſſiah the ſon of Joſeph, as Aben Ezra; nor the prophet Malachi himſelf, as Abarbinel; but the ſame that is called Elijah the prophet, ch. iv. 5. and is no other than John the Baptiſt, as is clear from Matt. xi. 10. Mark i. 2. called a meſſenger or angel, not by nature, but by office; and Chriſt's meſſenger, becauſe ſent by him, and on his errand; and which ſhows the power and authority of Chriſt, in ſending forth miniſters; his ſuperior excellency to John, and his exiſtence before him, or he could not be ſent by him, and ſo before his incarnation; for John was ſent by him, before he was in the fleſh, and conſequently this is a proof of the proper deity of Chriſt: and the word behold is prefixed to this, in order to raiſe the attention of thoſe that put the above queſtion, and all others; as well as to ſhow that the meſſage John was ſent upon was of the greateſt moment and importance; as that the Meſſiah was juſt ready to appear, his kingdom was at hand, and the Jews ought to believe in him; tho' it alſo reſpects the coming of the Meſſiah, ſpoken of in the latter part of the text: and he ſhall prepare the way before me; by declaring to the Jews that he was born, and was in the midſt of them; by pointing him out unto them; by preaching the doctrine of repentance, and exhorting them to believe in him; and by adminiſtring the ordinance of baptiſm in general to all proper ſubjects, and in particular to Chriſt, by which he was made manifeſt to Iſrael; ſee the note on Mark i. 2. the alluſion is to kings and great men ſending perſons before them, when on a journey, to give notice of their coming, and provide for them: and the Lord whom ye ſeek; this is the perſon himſelf ſpeaking, the Son of God, and promiſed Meſſiah, the Lord of all men, and particularly of his church and people, in right of marriage, by virtue of redemption, and by being their head and king; ſo Kimchi and Ben Melech interpret it of him, and even Abarbinel[q] himſelf; the Meſſiah that had been ſo long ſpoken of, and ſo much expected, and whom the Jews ſought after, either in a ſcoffing manner, expreſſed in the above queſtion, or rather ſeriouſly; ſome as a temporal deliverer, to free them from the Roman yoke, and bring them into a ſtate of liberty, proſperity and grandeur; and others as a ſpiritual Saviour, to deliver from ſin, law, hell, and death, and ſave them with an everlaſting ſalvation: ſhall ſuddenly come to his temple; meaning not his human nature, nor his church, ſometimes ſo called; but the material temple at Jeruſalem, the ſecond temple, called his, becauſe devoted to his ſervice and worſhip, which proves him to be God, and becauſe of his frequency in it; here he was brought and preſented by his parents at the proper time, for the purification of his mother; here he was at twelve years of age diſputing with the doctors; and here Simeon, Anna, and others, were waiting for him, Luke ii. 22, 25, 27, 38, 46. and we often read of his being here, and of his uſing his authority in it, as the Lord and proprietor of it; and of the Hoſannahs given him here, Matt. xxi. 12—15, 23. the manner in which he ſhould come, ſuddenly, may refer to the manifeſtation of it, quickly after John the Baptiſt had prepared his way by his doctrine and baptiſm: even the meſſenger of the covenant; not of the covenant of works with Adam, of which there was no mediator and meſſenger; nor of the covenant of circumciſion, at which, according to the Jews, Elias preſides; nor of the covenant at Sinai, of which Moſes was the mediator; but of the covenant of grace, of which Chriſt is not only the ſurety and Mediator, but as here, the meſſenger; becauſe it is revealed, made known, and exhibited in a more glorious manner by him under the goſpel-diſpenſation, thro' the miniſtration of the word and ordinances: De Dieu obſerves, that the word in the Ethiopic language ſignifies a prince, as well as a meſſenger, and ſo may be rendered, the prince of the covenant, which is a way of ſpeaking uſed in Dan. xi. 22: whom ye delight in; either carnally, as they pleaſed themſelves with the thoughts of a temporal prince, and of great honour and grandeur under him; and as they would have done, had he ſubmitted to have been made a king by them in this ſenſe: or rather ſpiritually, and ſo is to be underſtood of ſuch who had a ſpiritual knowledge of him, and joy in him: who rejoiced and delighted in the contemplation of his perſon, offices, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation: he ſhall come, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; this expreſſes the certainty of his coming, being ſaid by himſelf, who is the Lord of hoſts, the Lord of armies in heaven and in earth, the King of kings, and Lord of lords. This paſſage is, in ſome Jewiſh writers [r], interpreted of the world to come, or times of the Meſſiah.

℣. 2. But who may abide the day of his coming? &c.] When he ſhould be manifeſt in Iſrael, and come preaching the goſpel of the kingdom; who could bear the doctrines delivered by him, concerning his deity, and equality with God the Father; concerning his character and miſſion as the Meſſiah, and his kingdom not being a temporal, but a ſpiritual one; concerning his giving his fleſh for the life of the world, and eating that by faith; concerning diſtinguiſhing and efficacious grace; and all ſuch that ſo ſeverely ſtruck at the wickedneſs of the ſcribes and phariſees, and their ſelf-righteous principles; and eſpecially ſince for judgment he came, that they might not ſee; nor could they bear the light of this glorious ſun of righteouſneſs; and he came not to ſend peace and outward proſperity to the Jews, but a ſword and diviſion, John ix. 39. Matt. x. 34. Luke xii. 51. very few indeed could bear his miniſtry, or the light of that day, it being ſo directly contrary to their principles and practices: and who ſhall ſtand when he appeareth? in his kingdom and glory, to take vengeance on the Jews for their rejection of him and his goſpel; for this coming and appearance of his include all the time between his manifeſtation in the fleſh, and the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; and ſo all thoſe ſorrows and diſtreſſes, which went before it, or attended it, and were ſuch as had never been from the creation of the world; and unleſs thoſe times had been ſhortened, no fleſh could have been ſaved; ſee Matt. xxiv. 3—22. Luke xxi. 36: for he is like a refiner's fire; partly by the miniſtry of the word, compared to fire, Jer. xxiii. 29. ſeparating pure doctrines from droſſy ones; and partly by his fiery diſpenſations and judgments on the wicked Jews, when he diſtinguiſhed and ſaved his own people from that untoward generation, and deſtroyed them: and like fuller's ſoap; or fuller's herb, as the Septuagint and Vulgate Latin verſions render it, and Jarchi interprets it; and ſo R. Jonah [s] interprets it of an herb which fullers uſe: and in the Miſna [t], this is one of the ſeven things uſed to take out ſpots, namely, Borith, the word here uſed; and which Maimonides [u] ſays, is a plant known by the name of Algaſul and Gazul in the Arabic language: it ſignifies ſomething, by which filth is waſhed away; and ſo Bartenora [w] ſays, it is a plant which purifies and cleanſes; and Jerom [x] relates, that this herb grows in Paleſtine, in moiſt and green places, and has the ſame virtue as nitre, to take away filth; agreeable to which ſome other verſions render it fuller's weed, or ſoap-weed [y]. The Syriac verſion is, "as "ſulphur that makes white;" and fullers, with the Romans, were wont to make uſe of that along with chalk, to take out ſpots; and ſo Pliny [z] ſpeaks of a kind of ſulphur, which fullers make uſe of. A metaphor, ſignifying the ſame thing as before, the removing of ſpotted doctrines, or ſpotted perſons, the one by the preaching of the goſpel, the other by awful judgments, as ſpots in garments are removed by the fuller's herb or ſoap.

℣. 3. And he ſhall ſit as a refiner and purifier of ſilver, &c.] Kimchi interprets this, as he does the latter part of the preceding verſe, of the day, and not of the Lord, which he compares to a judge that ſits and ſeparates the guilty from the innocent; ſee 1 Cor. iii. 13. but it is to be underſtood of the Lord himſelf, and expreſſes his diligence in ſitting and ſeparating good men and principles from bad ones, juſt as ſilver is purified and refined from droſs. Maimonides [a] underſtands the paſſage of the Meſſiah; for he ſays, "in the days of the "king Meſſiah, when his kingdom is reſtored, "and all Iſrael ſhall be gathered to him, all will "have their genealogies ſet right by his mouth, "thro' the Holy Spirit that reſts upon him, as it is "ſaid, he ſhall ſit a refiner and purifier:" as a refiner ſits and obſerves his metal while it is melting, and waits the proper time to pour it out, and ſeparate the droſs from it; ſo Chriſt is here repreſented as ſitting, while his people are purifying and refining, by the various ways and means he makes uſe of: it denotes the continued care of Chriſt over them; his eye is upon them that nothing be loſt but their droſs and corruption; and his patience in waiting to be gracious to them, and do them good; and his diligent attention to the proper ſeaſon of doing it; deſigning by all that he does, not their hurt and damage, but their real good, for he ſaves them, tho' it be by fire; and indeed every trial and affliction is for the purifying of their ſouls, and the brightening of their graces, and increaſing their ſpiritual experience, light, and knowledge. And he ſhall purify the ſons of Levi; the prieſts, either literally underſtood, ſome of theſe were converted from their evil principles and practices, and became obedient to the doctrines of the goſpel, Acts vi. 7. or figuratively, the apoſtles of Chriſt and miniſters of the goſpel, who were made clean by him; or rather all the people of God, who are made prieſts as well as kings, and are a royal prieſthood, and are purified by Chriſt, both by his blood, and the imputation of his righteouſneſs, by which they become without ſpot and blemiſh, and as white as ſnow; and by the Spirit in ſanctification, he ſprinkling clean water upon them, and purifying their hearts by faith in the blood of Jeſus; and alſo by afflictive diſpenſations of providence ſanctified unto them. Mention is made of the prieſts and Levites, becauſe theſe were ſo very corrupt in the times of Chriſt, and as appears from the preceding chapters. And purge them as gold and ſilver; are purged in the fire from their droſs: this ſhows of what worth and value, and in what eſteem the Lord's people are to him; he reckons of them as gold and ſilver, and as his peculiar treaſure: and it ſuggeſts, that before converſion they are joined unto and mixed with wicked men, comparable to droſs; and that they have in them the droſs, corruption, and impurity of ſin; which is original and natural to them, and inherent in them, and which can only be removed by the grace of God and blood of Chriſt. That they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteouſneſs; themſelves, their bodies and ſouls; the ſacrifices of prayer, praiſe, and alms-deeds; to the offering up of which in righteouſneſs, in ſincerity and truth, in an upright way, it is neceſſary that a perſon ſhould be purified by the blood of Chriſt, and ſanctified by the grace of his Spirit.

℣. 4. Then ſhall the offering of Judah and Jeruſalem be pleaſant unto the Lord, &c.] Or ſweet[b]; grateful and well pleaſing to him, as all ſpiritual ſacrifices are acceptable to God thro' Chriſt, being offered up in the faith of his atoning ſacrifice and righteouſneſs, without which it is impoſſible to pleaſe God: as in the days of old, and as in former years; under the firſt temple, and when the tabernacle was ſet up by Moſes, and in the times of the patriarchs; and even before the flood, and as early as Abel, who by faith offered a more excellent ſacrifice than Cain, Heb. xi. 4. 5, 6.

℣. 5. And I will come near to you to judgment, &c.] And ſo will manifeſtly appear to be the God of judgment they aſked after, ch. ii. 17. this is not to be underſtood of Chriſt's coming to judgment at the laſt day, but of his coming to judge and puniſh the wicked Jews at the time of Jeruſalem's deſtruction; for the ſame is here meant, who is ſpoken of in the third perſon before, and who will not be afar off; there will be no need to enquire after him, when he will come, he will be near enough, and too near for them: and I will be a ſwift witneſs againſt the ſorcerers; not only a judge, but a witneſs; ſo that there will be no delay of judgment, or protracting or evading it, for want of witneſſes of facts alledged; for the judge himſelf, who is Chriſt, will be witneſs of them, he being the omniſcient God, before whom all things are manifeſt. The Targum is, "my word "ſhall be among you for a ſwift witneſs." Mention is made of ſorcerers, becauſe there were many that uſed the magic art, enchantments, and ſorceries, in the age of Chriſt and his apoſtles, and before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, even many of their doctors and members of the Sanhedrim; ſee the note on Iſ. viii. 19: and againſt the adulterers; with whom that age alſo abounded; hence our Lord calls it an adulterous generation, Matt. xii. 39. ſee John viii. 3—9. Rom. ii. 22: and againſt falſe ſwearers; who were guilty of perjury, and of vain oaths; who ſwore by the creatures, and not by the Lord, and to things not true; ſee Matt. v. 33—37: and againſt thoſe that oppreſs the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherleſs; defrauding of ſervants of their wages, devouring widows houſes, and diſtreſſing the fatherleſs, were ſins the Jews were addicted to in thoſe times, as appears from James i. 27. and v. 4. who wrote to the twelve tribes; and from what our Lord charges them with, Matt. xxiii. 14: and that turn aſide the ſtranger from his right; and ſo Kimchi ſupplies it, "that turn aſide the judgment of the "ſtranger;" that don't do him juſtice in civil things; yea, perſecuted thoſe that became proſelytes to the chriſtian religion: and fear not me, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; which was the root and cauſe of all their ſins; irreverence of Chriſt, diſbelief of him, and contempt of his goſpel.

℣. 6. For I am the Lord, &c.] Or Jehovah; a name peculiar to the Moſt High, and ſo a proof of the deity of Chriſt, who here ſpeaks; and is expreſſive of his being; of his ſelf-exiſtence; of his purity and ſimplicity; of his immenſity and infinity, and of his eternity and ſovereignty. I change not; being the ſame to-day, yeſterday, and for ever; he changed not in his divine nature and perſonality, by becoming man; he took that into union with him he had not before, but remained the ſame he ever was; nor did he change in his threatnings of deſtruction to the Jews, which came upon them according to his word; nor in his promiſes of his Spirit, and preſence and protection to his people; nor will he ever change in his love and affections to them; nor in the efficacy of his blood, ſacrifice, and righteouſneſs; wherefore as this is introduced to aſſure the truth and certainty of what is ſaid before, concerning his being a ſwift witneſs againſt the wicked, ſo alſo for the comfort of the ſaints, as follows. The Targum is, "for "I the Lord have not changed my covenant." Therefore ye ſons of Jacob are not conſumed; ſuch who were Iſraelites indeed, true believers in Chriſt; theſe were not conſumed when the wicked Jews were, but were directed to leave the city before its deſtruction, and go to another place, as they did, whereby they were preſerved; and ſo it was, that not one chriſtian periſhed in it; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 13. and ſo it is owing to the unchangeable love, grace, and power of Chriſt, that none of his periſh internally or eternally, but have everlaſting life.

℣. 7. Even from the days of your fathers ye are gone away from mine ordinances, &c.] Here begins an enumeration of the ſins of the Jews, which were the cauſe of their ruin; and here is firſt a general charge of apoſtacy from the ſtatutes and ordinances of the law, which they made void by the traditions of the fathers; and therefore this word is uſed as referring to this evil, as well as to expreſs their early, long, and continued departure from the ways of God; which as it was an aggravation of their ſin, that they ſhould have ſo long ago forſook the ordinances of God, and have not kept them, but tranſgreſſed them by obſerving the traditions of men, Matt. xv. 3. ſo it is an inſtance of the patience and forbearance of God, that they were not as yet conſumed; and of his grace and goodneſs, that he ſhould addreſs them as follows: return unto me, and I will return unto you, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; this meſſage was carried to them by John the Baptiſt, the forerunner of Chriſt, and by Chriſt himſelf, who both preached the doctrine of repentance to this people, Matt. iii. 2. and iv. 17. The Targum is, "return to my worſhip, "and I will look in my word to do well unto "you, ſaith the Lord of hoſts;" and ſuch who returned, and believed in Chriſt, and ſubmitted to his ordinances, it was well with them. But ye ſaid, wherein ſhall we return? what have we to turn from, or repent of? what evils have we done, or can be charged on us? what need have we of repentance or converſion, or of ſuch an exhortation to it? don't we keep the law, and all the rituals of it? this is the true language of the phariſees in Chriſt's time, who touching the righteouſneſs of the law were blameleſs in their own eſteem, and were the ninety and nine juſt perſons that needed not repentance, Luke xv. 7.

℣. 8. Will a man rob God? &c.] Or the gods; the falſe gods, the idols of the Gentiles; the heathens will not do that, accounting ſacrilege a great ſin, and yet this the Jews were guilty of: or the judges [c], as the Targum; civil magiſtrates, will any dare to defraud them of their due? ſee ch. i. 8: yet ye have robbed me; keeping back from the prieſts and Levites, his miniſters, what was due to them; and which being no other than a ſpoiling or robbing of them, might be interpreted a robbing of God: but ye ſay, wherein have we robbed thee? as not being conſcious of any ſuch evil; or however, impudently ſtanding in it, that they were not guilty: to which is returned for anſwer, in tithes and offerings; that is, they robbed God in not giving the tithes, and not offering ſacrifices, according as the law required: but it may be objected, that the Jews in Chriſt's time did pay tithes, even of all things; yea, of more than the law required, Matt. xxiii. 23. Luke xviii. 12. to which it may be replied, that tho' they gave tithes, yet it was בעין רעה with an evil eye, as Aben Ezra ſays; grudgingly, and not chearfully, and with an evil intention; not to ſhow their gratitude to God, and their acknowledgment of him as their Lord, from whom they had their all, but in order to merit at his hands; beſides, our Lord ſuggeſts, that they did not give to God the things that were God's, Matt. xxii. 21. and the apoſtle charges them with being guilty of ſacrilege, Rom. ii. 22. and moreover, the prieſts might not give it to the Levites, as they ought; and which is what they are charged with in Neh. xiii. 10. and Grotius ſays, that they were guilty of this before the deſtruction by Veſpaſian, as appears by Joſephus.

℣. 9. Ye are curſed with a curſe, &c.] Or with penury, as the Vulgate Latin verſion; which tho' not a proper rendring of the word, is the meaning of the curſe they were curſed with; rain was withheld from them for their ſins, and the earth did not bring forth its uſual increaſe; wherefore there was want of food in all their land; their bleſſings were curſed, as in ch. ii. 2. for the following reaſon, for ye have robbed me; becauſe of this their iniquity, in not bringing their offerings to the Lord, and the tithes to the prieſts and Levites, their land was ſtricken with barrenneſs, and God gave them cleanneſs of teeth, and want of bread in all places: or, but ye have robbed me [d]; notwithſtanding they were thus chaſtized of the Lord, yet were not reformed, but went on in withholding from God and the prieſts, what belonged to them: even this whole nation; the ſin was become general, and therefore a general judgment was inflicted on them: Grotius thinks, that the people ſeeing the prieſts withhold the tithes from the Levites, they refuſed to pay them to them, and ſo the ſin became univerſal, Kimchi obſerves, that in other ſins charged upon the nation, the people were not all alike guilty, but in this which reſpected the tithes and offerings they were.

℣. 10. Bring ye all the tithes into the ſtore-houſe, &c.] Or treaſury [e]; for there were places in the temple where the tithe was put, and from thence diſtributed to the prieſts and Levites, for the ſupport of their families, as they wanted. There were the tithe or tenth part of all eatable things paid to the Levites, and out of this another tithe was paid by the Levites to the prieſts; and there was another tithe, which ſome years the owners eat themſelves at Jeruſalem, and in others gave them to the poor; and theſe were called the firſt tithe, the tithe out of the tithe, the ſecond tithe, and the poors tithe; though they are commonly reduced to three, and are called firſt, and ſecond, and third, as they are by Maimonides; who ſays [f], "after "they have ſeparated the firſt tithe every year, "they ſeparate the ſecond tithe, as it is ſaid, thou "ſhalt truly tithe all the increaſe of thy ſeed, &c. "Deut. xiv. 22, 23. and in the third year, and in "the ſixth, they ſeparate the poors tithe, inſtead "of the ſecond tithe." So Tobit ſays, ch. i. 7. "the firſt tithe I gave to the Levites, who ſtand "before the Lord to miniſter to him, and to bleſs "in his name the inhabitants of Jeruſalem; the "ſecond tithe I ſold (as he might, according to "the law in Deut. xiv. 24, 25, 26.) and took the "money, and went up to Jeruſalem, and bought "with it what I pleaſed; and the third tithe I "gave to the repair of the temple;" ſo Fagius reads: but according to Munſter's edition it is, the ſecond and third tithes I gave to the ſtranger, the fatherleſs, and the widow; ſee Deut. xxvi. 12, 13. It appears from hence, that the ſin of the people was, that they did not bring in all their tithes; they kept back a part of them; wherefore they are called upon to bring in the whole, and which they did in Nehemiah's time; ſee Neh. x. 38. and xiii. 11, 13. where mention is made of the treaſuries for the tithe, which were certain chambers adjoining to the temple; and beſides thoſe that were built by Solomon, there were other chambers prepared by Hezekiah in his times, when the tithes were brought in in ſuch plenty, that there was not room enough for them, 2 Chron. xxxi. 11, 12. and beſides thoſe in the ſecond temple, that were in the court of the prieſts, there were others in the court of the people, as L'Empereur thinks [g], where what the others could not contain might be put, and into which court the prieſts might come; and there were alſo receptacles under ground, as well as upper rooms, where much might be laid up; add to all this, that Dr. Lightfoot [h] ſuggeſts, that theſe tithes were treaſured up in the chambers by the gates of the temple, and were at leaſt a part of the treaſuries of the houſe of God, which the porters at the gates had the care of, 1 Chron. ix. 26. and xxvi. 20. and particularly that the houſe of Aſuppim, at which were four porters, was a large piece of building, containing divers rooms for the treaſuring up things for the uſe of the temple; ſee Judith xi. 13. That there may be meat in my houſe; in the temple, for the ſuſtenance of the prieſts and Levites: ſo the Targum, "the prophet ſaid, bring "all the tithes into the treaſury, that there may "be food for them that miniſter in the houſe of "my ſanctuary:" and prove me now herewith, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; by bringing in all their tithes; when they would find by making this experiment or trial, that the curſe would be removed from them, and bleſſings be largely and liberally beſtowed upon them by him, who is the Lord of hoſts, and ſo able to perform any promiſe he makes; and here one is implied, and is as follows: if I will not open you the windows of heaven; which had been ſhut and ſtop'd up, and let down no rain upon their land, which brought a ſcarcity of proviſions among them; but now, upon a change in their conduct, it is ſuggeſted, that theſe windows or flood-gates ſhould be opened, and rain let down plentifully upon them, which only could be done by the Lord himſelf; for the key of rain, is one of the three keys, the Jews ſay [i], which God has reſerved for himſelf, and never puts into the hands of a miniſter: and pour you out a bleſſing; give abundance of rain to make the earth fruitful, and bring forth its increaſe in great plenty, which is a bleſſing; and not deſtroy the earth, and the fruits of it, as in the times of Noah, when the windows of heaven were opened, and a curſe was poured out upon the earth: that there ſhall not be room enough to receive it; and ſo Kimchi ſays his father interpreted this clauſe, that there would not be a ſufficiency of veſſels [k] and ſtore-houſes. Some render the words, as Junius, ſo that ye ſhall not be ſufficient; either to gather in the increaſe, or to conſume it. The Targum is, "until ye ſay it is "enough;" and ſo the Syriac verſion. The phraſe, which is very conciſe in the original text, and may be literally rendered, unto not enough [l], denotes great abundance and fulneſs of good things, ſo that there ſhould be enough and to ſpare; and yet, as Guſſetius obſerves, not enough to anſwer and expreſs the abundance of mercy and goodneſs in the heart of God.

℣. 11. And I will rebuke the devourer for your ſakes, &c.] Or eater [m]; the locuſt or caterpillar, or any ſuch devouring creature, that eats up the herbage, corn, and fruits of trees; every ſuch creature is under the reſtraint of providence, and by a nod, a rebuke, they are eaſily prevented doing the miſchief they otherwiſe would; theſe are the Lord's great army, which he can ſend and call off as he pleaſes, Joel i. 4. and ii. 25: and he ſhall not deſtroy the fruits of your ground; as he has done, by eating all green things, as the locuſt, caterpillar, and canker-worm do, graſs, corn, and trees: neither ſhall your vine caſt her fruit before the time in the field; which ſome underſtand of the devourer or locuſt, that that ſhould not cauſe the vine to be abortive, or caſt its fruit before its time, or bereave it of it; but it ſeems beſt to interpret it of the vine itſelf not caſting its fruit, as an untimely birth, by blighting and blaſting winds: ſaith the Lord of hoſts; who holds the winds in his fiſts, and will not ſuffer them when he pleaſes, any more than the locuſts, to hurt the trees of the earth; Rev. vii. 1, 3. and ix. 4.

℣. 12. And all nations ſhall call you bleſſed, &c.] When they ſhall ſee the land freed from the devouring locuſt, and other hurtful creatures; the former and the latter rains given in their ſeaſon; and the earth yielding a large increaſe: for ye ſhall be a delightſom land, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; or a deſireable [n] one; not only pleaſant to themſelves, being fruitful, but wiſhed for by others, by their neighbouring nations, who ſeeing their proſperity, could not but deſire to dwell with them; or delightſome to the Lord of hoſts: thus Jarchi interprets it, the land that I delight in; and ſo Aben Ezra; to which agrees the Targum, "and all nations ſhall praiſe you, becauſe you dwell in the "land of the houſe of my Shekinah or majeſty, "and do my will in it;" and the Syriac verſion renders it, the land of my delight;" ſee Iſ. lxii. 4.

℣. 13. Your words have been ſtout againſt me, ſaith the Lord, &c.] Hard and ſtrong; they bore very hardly upon him, were exceeding impudent and inſolent; murmuring at his providence; arraigning his juſtice and goodneſs; and deſpiſing his word, worſhip, and ordinances. Aben Ezra ſays, this is a prophecy concerning the time to come, that is, the times of the Meſſiah; and ſo it deſcribes the Jews in his times. Yet ye ſay, what have we ſpoken ſo much againſt thee? or what have we ſpoken againſt thee? as if they were not guilty in any reſpect, and as if nothing could be proved againſt them; and as tho' the Lord did not know what they had ſaid in their hearts, ſeeing they had not ſpoken it with their mouths: tho' the ſupplement of our tranſlators, ſo much, is confirmed by the Targum, which is, "and if ye ſay, how (or in "what) have we multiplied ſpeech before thee?" and ſo Kimchi obſerves, that the form in which the Hebrew word is, denotes much and frequent ſpeaking: and Abarbinel agrees with him, tho' he rather thinks it has this ſenſe, what are we ſpoken of to thee? what calumny is this? what accuſation do they bring againſt us to thee? what is it that is reported we ſay againſt thee? thus wiping their mouths, as if they were innocent and harmleſs.

℣. 14. Ye have ſaid, it is vain to ſerve God, &c.] This they ſaid in their hearts, if not with their lips, that it was a vain thing for a man to ſerve God; he got nothing by it; he had no reward for it; it fared no better with him than the wicked; nay, the wicked fared better than he; and therefore who would be a worſhipper of God? ſee Job xxi. 15. Abarbinel underſtands this alſo with reſpect to God, who is worſhipped; to whom worſhip, ſay theſe men, is no ways profitable, nor does he regard it; ſee Job xxxv. 7. and therefore it is in vain to ſerve him, ſince neither he, nor we, are the better for it: and what profit is it, that we have kept his ordinance; or his obſervation [n]; that is, have obſerved that which he commanded to be obſerved; this reſpects not any ſingle and particular ordinance, but every ordinance of God: the Sadduces of thoſe times ſeem deſigned, who denied the reſurrection of the dead, and a future ſtate of rewards and puniſhments, and ſo might well conclude it in vain to ſerve God: and that we have walked mournfully before the Lord of hoſts? or in black [o]; which is the habit of mourners; ſee Pſ. xxxviii. 6. with an humble ſpirit, as Jarchi interprets it; or with humiliation (or contrition) of ſpirit, as the Targum, which paraphraſes the whole verſe thus, "ye have ſaid, he gains nothing who worſhips before the Lord; and what mammon (or riches) do we gain, becauſe we have kept the obſervation of his word, and becauſe we have walked in contrition of ſpirit before the Lord of hoſts?" Aben Ezra and Abarbinel ſeem to underſtand this laſt clauſe of their being afflicted and ſuffering for the ſake of religion, and which they endured in vain, ſeeing they were not reſpected and rewarded for it; but the other ſenſe is beſt, which repreſents them as ſincere penitents, and humble worſhippers of God in their own account, and yet were not taken notice of by him: it ſeems to deſcribe the phariſees, who disfigured their faces, and affected down looks and ſorrowful countenances [p].

℣. 15. And now we call the proud happy, &c.] Or therefore now [q]; ſince this is the caſe, that the worſhippers of God are not regarded, and there is nothing got by ſerving him; they that are proud and haughty, that neither fear God, nor regard men, are the happy perſons; even preſumptuous ſinners, as the word [r] ſignifies, that ſtretch out their hands againſt God, and ſtrengthen themſelves againſt the Almighty; theſe enjoy all worldly happineſs, while they that ſerve the Lord are mourning in ſackcloth, and are in the utmoſt diſtreſs. The Targum explains it of the ungodly, and as it is explained in the following clauſe: yea, they that work wickedneſs are ſet up; or built up [s]; or ſeeing, becauſe, or for they that work [t], &c. they are increaſed with children, by which their houſes or families are built up; they are in a well ſettled and eſtabliſhed condition; they abound in riches and honours; they are ſet in high places, and are in great eſteem among men, even ſuch who make it their conſtant buſineſs to commit ſin: yea, they that tempt God; or, yea, they tempt God [u]; by their wicked words and actions, and try whether he will cauſe his judgments to fall upon them, which he has threatened to ſuch ſinners; ſee Iſ. v. 18, 19: are even delivered; or, and are delivered [w]; from the puniſhment threatened; they eſcape it, and go on with impunity: from which obſervations theſe perſons reaſoned, that there was no God of judgment, or that judged in the earth; that there was no providence concerned about human affairs; and that there was nothing in religion; and theſe were the hard and ſtout words which they ſpoke againſt the Lord.

℣. 16. Then they that feared the Lord ſpake often one to another, &c.] Abarbinel thinks this is a continuation of the ſpeech of the wicked; obſerving, that whilſt they that work wickedneſs were ſet up, and they that tempted God eſcaped puniſhment, they that were religious, and feared God, were deſtroyed one with another, particularly by the plague; ſo he would have the word נדברו rendred, which we tranſlate, ſpake often one to another; in which ſenſe he obſerves that root is uſed in Hoſ. xiii. 14. Pſ. xlvii. 3. 2 Kings xi. 1. but rather this is oppoſed unto what they ſaid, by ſuch, who at the time referred to (which ſeems to be between the time of Chriſt's coming, ſpoken of in the beginning of the chapter, and the deſtruction of Jeruſalem after-mentioned) feared the Lord, and ſerved him; embraced the Meſſiah, and profeſſed his name; for the fear of God takes in the whole of religious worſhip, both internal and external; and deſcribes ſuch, not that have a dread of the majeſty of God, and of his judgments and wrath, or diſtruſt his power, providence, grace, and goodneſs; but who have a filial and holy fear of God, a fiducial and fearleſs one, a reverential affection for him, and are true and ſincere worſhippers of him: theſe ſpake often one to another, of the unbelief, impiety, and profaneſs of men, with great concern and lamentation; and of the great and good things they were led into the knowledge of; the everlaſting love of the Father in the choice of them, and covenant with them in Chriſt; of redemption by the Son; of the glories of his perſon, and the fulneſs of his grace; of the work of the Spirit of God upon their ſouls; and of the various truths of the everlaſting goſpel; and of the gracious experiences they were indulged with; and all this they ſaid for the glory of God's grace, and for the comforting and ſtrengthening, and edifying of each other's ſouls: it follows, and the Lord hearkened, and heard it; what they ſaid one to another: this is ſpoken after the manner of men, and does not ſo much regard the omniſcience of God, who hearkens and hears every thing that is ſaid by wicked men, as by good men; as his ſpecial regard unto, peculiar notice he takes of, and the approbation he has of his people, and of their words and actions, and even of their thoughts, as is afterwards intimated: and a book of remembrance was written before him; in alluſion to kings that keep regiſters, records, annals, and chronicles, as memorials of matters of moment and importance; ſee Ezra iv. 15. Eſth. ii, 23. and vi. 1. otherwiſe there is no forgetfulneſs in God; he bears in his own eternal mind a remembrance of the perſons, thoughts, words, and actions of his people, and which he'll diſcloſe and make mention of another day; even our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is God over all, and who will let the churches and world know, that he is the ſearcher of hearts, and trier of the reins of the children of men: for them that feared the Lord, as before, and that thought upon his name; either the name of the Father; not any particular name of his, by which he is known, but him himſelf; for as Kimchi obſerves, his name is himſelf, and he himſelf is his name; and eſpecially as he is in Chriſt, and proclaimed in him; and this is expreſſive of faith in him, love to him, and reverence of him: or the name of Chriſt; and not any particular name of his, unleſs it be Jeſus the Saviour: but rather his perſon as the Son of God; his office as Mediator; and his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice: and it is not a bare thinking of him that is here intended, but ſuch a thought of him as is accompanied with eſteem and value for him, becauſe of the dignity of his perſon, and the riches of his grace. The Septuagint and Arabic verſions render it, and that reverence his name; and the Syriac verſion, that praiſe his name; and the Targum is, that think of the glory of his name.

℣. 17. And they ſhall be mine, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, &c.] That is, ſuch as fear the Lord, and think of him, hereby they are known to be his; and hereafter, in the time referred to, it will be manifeſt that they are his: they are Chriſt's already by his Father's gift of them to him; by his own purchaſe; by the conqueſts of his grace; and by the voluntary ſurrender of themſelves: but, in the laſt day, they will be claimed and owned by Chriſt before his Father and his holy angels; and they will be known to be his, by themſelves and others; and there will be no doubt about it, or queſtioning of it: in that day when I make up my jewels; Chriſt has ſome, who are his jewels, or peculiar treaſure, as the word [x] here uſed ſignifies; who are loved with an everlaſting love; choſen in him; redeemed by him; juſtified by his righteouſneſs; have the graces of his Spirit in them; and will be glorified: they are a peculiar people, ſeparate from all others, and preferred unto them; for whom Chriſt has the ſtrongeſt affection, and takes ſpecial care of: and there is a time when he will make them up; the number of them is already complete in eternal election; and there was a gathering of them together in Chriſt at his death; at every converſion there is an addition to them, as his regenerated and ſanctified ones; and at death they are received into heaven, into his preſence and boſom; and at the laſt day there will be a collection of them all together. The words may be rendred, even my jewels in the day that I ſhall make [y]; or the day I ſhall make peculiar; diſtinct from all others; meaning either the famous goſpel-day, made by him the ſun of righteouſneſs, in which ſo many of his jewels are picked up, and brought in; or the day of Jeruſalem's deſtruction, when Chriſt took care of his jewels, and by the preſervation of them ſhewed, that they were his, even all that believed in him; ſo that not one periſhed that believed in him, when he took vengeance on his enemies, that diſbelieved and rejected him. Kimchi refers this to the day of judgment. And I will ſpare them, as a man ſpareth his own ſon that ſerveth him; this is a favour not granted to the apoſtate angels; nor to the old world; nor to the Jewiſh nation; nor even to the Son of God; but is vouchſafed to his ſpecial people: the lives of theſe are ſpared, until they are called by grace; and tho' they are ſometimes afflicted and chaſtiſed, it is very gently, and in love; their ſervices are accepted, and the imperfections in them overlooked; their ſins are pardoned, and they'll find mercy at the great day of account; they are uſed in the moſt tender manner, not only as a ſon, an own ſon, but as an obedient one, for whom the greateſt regard is had, and affection ſhown.

℣. 18. Then ſhall ye return, &c.] Either the wicked, who will be converted [z], as ſome render the word, and will have a different view of things, and change their minds and language; or they that feared the Lord, who at the time before ſpoken of will have a new turn of thought, and another and clear diſcerning of perſons and things, and better judge of the diſpenſations of providence: ſome that refer this to the reſurrection of the dead, and the laſt judgment, underſtand it, as Abarbinel does, of the returning of ſouls to their bodies, when indeed the difference between perſons after deſcribed will be very diſcernible; but it ſeems to refer to the time of Chriſt's firſt coming, and Jeruſalem's deſtruction: and diſcern between the righteous and the wicked; the difference between ſuch who are really and truly righteous, who are here meant, even ſuch who believe in Chriſt, and are juſtified by his righteouſneſs; and thoſe that are wicked, as all by nature are: tho' ſometimes this character deſigns the more profane and abandoned, and even profeſſors of religion; the difference between theſe is not always eaſily diſcerned: as for the righteous, they are not known and diſcerned by the world; and by reaſon of afflictions, temptations, and ſins, they are apt to judge wrong of themſelves; and ſometimes are ſo left to fall into ſin, that they look like others: and there are wicked men under the appearance of righteous men, as were the ſcribes and phariſees in Chriſt's time; but by the deſtruction that came upon them, and the preſervation of ſuch as believed in Chriſt, it was diſcernible who were wicked, and who were righteous: indeed, at the laſt day, this difference will be more viſible; in the bodies of the righteous, which will be raiſed glorious, when thoſe of the wicked will not; in their ſouls, having on the wedding garment, the robe of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, and perfectly holy; and in their ſituation, being ſet at Chriſt's right-hand, and the wicked at his left; and by the characters that will be given of them by the judge, and the different ſentences paſſed and executed on them: between him that ſerveth God, and him that ſerveth him not; that is, between ſuch perſons that ſerve the Lord, and him only, privately and publickly, in righteouſneſs and true holineſs, in ſpirit and in truth, with faith and fervency, with reverence and fear, heartily and willingly, ſeeking his glory, without any dependence on their ſervices; and thoſe that are ungodly, or only outwardly ſerve the Lord, for ſiniſter ends, and with ſelfiſh views, and according to their own inventions, and the traditions of men, and not the will of God, as the ſcribes and phariſees; between whom, and Chriſt's ſincere diſciples and followers, the awful day, deſcribed in the next chapter, will make a manifeſt difference.

CHAP. IV.

THIS chapter contains an account of the deſtruction of the wicked Jews, and the happineſs of the righteous by the coming of the Meſſiah; an exhortation to regard the law of Moſes; and a deſcription of John the Baptiſt and his work. The day of Chriſt's coming, reaching to Jeruſalem's deſtruction, is compared to a burning oven; the wicked Jews to ſtubble, whoſe ruin would be utter and complete, ℣. 1. the appearance of Chriſt is ſignified by the ariſing of him, the ſun of righteouſneſs; the manner, with healing in his wings; the effects of which are, going forth in the exerciſe of grace, and the diſcharge of duty, and ſpiritual growth and triumph over their enemies, in which will lie the happineſs of them that fear God, ℣. 2, 3. who are put in mind of the law of Moſes on Horeb, ℣. 4. the ſending of John the Baptiſt under the name of Elijah, before the coming of Chriſt is propheſied of, ℣. 5. and his work pointed out, with the end of it, ℣. 6.

℣. 1. For behold, the day cometh that ſhall burn as an oven, &c.] Not the day of judgment, as Kimchi and other interpreters, both Jewiſh and Chriſtian, think; but the day of Chriſt's coming in his kingdom and power, to take vengeance on the Jewiſh nation, which burned like an oven, both figuratively and literally; when the wrath of God, which is compared to fire, came upon that people to the uttermoſt; and when their city and temple were burnt about their ears, and they were ſurrounded with fire, as if they had been in a burning oven: and this being ſo terrible, as can hardly be conceived and expreſſed, the word behold is prefixed to it, not only to excite attention, but horror and terror at ſo dreadful a calamity; which tho' future, when the prophet wrote, was certain: and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly ſhall be ſtubble; the proud phariſees, that boaſted of their own righteouſneſs, truſted in themſelves, and deſpiſed others; all workers of iniquity, in private or in public; all rejecters of Chriſt, contemners of his goſpel and ordinances, and perſecuters of his people; as well as ſuch who were guilty of the moſt flagitious crimes, as ſedition, robbery, murder, &c. of which there were notorious inſtances during the ſiege of Jeruſalem; theſe were all like ſtubble before devouring fire, weak and eaſily deſtroyed: and the day that cometh ſhall burn them up, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; which is repeated, to ſhew the certainty of it, and to apply it to the perſons before deſcribed: that it ſhall leave them neither root nor branch; which ſignifies an entire and complete deſtruction; the city and temple ſo utterly deſtroyed, that not one ſtone ſhall be left on another; both magiſtrates and ſubjects ſhall periſh, prieſts and people, ſo that there ſhall be no form of government, civil nor eccleſiaſtical; tribes and families loſt, they and their poſterity: and ſo the Targum, "which ſhall not leave them ſon and nephew;" and indeed, the numbers cut off were ſo many, and the deſtruction ſo general, that it may be wondered at that any remained: it is a proverbial expreſſion, ſetting forth the greatneſs of the calamity; ſee Matt. iii. 10, 12.

℣. 2. But unto you that fear my name, &c.] The few that were of this character among that wicked nation; ſee the note on ch. iii. 16: ſhall the ſun of righteouſneſs ariſe; not the Holy Ghoſt, who enlightens ſinners, convinces of righteouſneſs, and gives joy, peace, and comfort to the ſaints, but Chriſt: and thus it is interpreted of him by the ancient Jews, in one of their Midraſhes or expoſitions [a]; they ſay, Moſes ſays not, they ſhall be for ever pledged, that is, the clothes of a neighbour, but until the ſun comes, until the Meſſiah comes, as it is ſaid, unto you that fear my name, ſhall the ſun of righteouſneſs ariſe, &c. and Philo the Jew [b] not only obſerves, that God, figuratively ſpeaking, is the ſun; but the divine Logos or word of God, the image of the heavenly being, is called the ſun; who coming to our earthly ſyſtem, helps the kindred and followers of virtue, and affords ample refuge and ſalvation to them; referring, as it ſeems, to this paſſage: indeed, they generally interpret it of the ſun, literally taken, which they ſuppoſe, at the end of the world, will have different effects on good and bad men; they ſay [c], "in the world to come, God "will bring the ſun out of its ſheath, and burn "the wicked; they will be judged by it, and the "righteous will be healed by it:" for the proof of the former, they produce the words in the firſt verſe of this chapter, behold, the day cometh that ſhall burn as an oven; and of the latter theſe words, but unto you that fear my name, &c. and a very ridiculous notion they have, that Abraham their father had a precious ſtone or pearl hanging about his neck, and every ſick perſon that ſaw it, was healed by it immediately; and when he departed out of the world, God took it, and fixed it to the orb of the ſun; hence the proverb, the ſun riſes, and ſickneſs decreaſes [d]; and as it is elſewhere quoted [e], this paſſage is added to confirm it, as it is ſaid, to you that fear my name, ſhall the ſun of righteouſneſs ariſe with healing in his wings: unleſs this fable ſhould be intended to mean, as Abarbinel [f] interprets it, that Abraham, while he lived, clearly proved the unity of God and his perfections; and that after his death, the ſame truth was taught by the wonderful motion of the ſun: but be this as it will, thoſe are undoubtedly in the right, who underſtand theſe words figuratively of the Meſſiah; who is compared to the ſun, becauſe as the ſun is a luminous body, the light of the whole world, ſo is Chriſt of the world of men, and of the world of ſaints; particularly of the Gentiles, often called the world; and of the new Jeruſalem-church-ſtate, and of the world to come: and as the ſun is the fountain of light, ſo is Chriſt the fountain of natural and moral light, as well as of the light of grace, and of the light of glory: as the ſun communicates light to all the celeſtial bodies, ſo Chriſt to the moon, the church; to the ſtars, the miniſters of the word; to the morning-ſtars, the angels: as the ſun diſpels the darkneſs of the night, and makes the day, ſo Chriſt diſpelled the darkneſs of the ceremonial law, and made the goſpel-day; and he diſpels the darkneſs of ignorance and unbelief, and makes the day of grace; and will diſpel the darkneſs of imperfection, and will make the day of glory: as the ſun is a pure, clear, and lucid body, ſo is Chriſt, without the leaſt ſpot of ſin; and ſo are his people, as they are cloathed with his righteouſneſs: as the ſun is a glorious body, ſo is Chriſt in both his natures, divine and human; in his office as Mediator; and will be in his ſecond coming: as the ſun is ſuperior to all the celeſtial bodies, ſo is Chriſt to angels and ſaints: as the ſun is but one, ſo there is but one Son of God; one Mediator between God and man; one Saviour and Redeemer; one Lord and head of the church: its properties and effects are many; it lays things open and manifeſt, which before were hid; communicates heat as well as light; makes the earth fruitful; is very exhilarating; has its riſings and ſettings, and of great duration: ſo Chriſt declares the mind and will of his Father, the hidden myſteries of grace; lays open the thoughts of mens hearts in converſion; and will at the laſt day bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs: he warms the hearts of his people with his love, and cauſes them to burn within them, whilſt they hear his goſpel, and he makes them fervent in ſpirit whilſt they ſerve the Lord; he fills them with the fruits of righteouſneſs, and with joy unſpeakable, and full of glory; but he is not always ſeen, is ſometimes under a cloud, and withdraws himſelf; yet his name is as the ſun before the Lord, and will abide for ever. He is called the ſun of righteouſneſs, becauſe of the glory of his eſſential righteouſneſs as God; and becauſe of the purity and perfection of his righteouſneſs as man, which appeared in all his actions, and in the adminiſtration of all his offices; and becauſe of the diſplay of the righteouſneſs of God in him, in his ſufferings and death, in atonement, pardon, and juſtification by him; and becauſe he is the author and bringer in of righteouſneſs to his people, the glory of which out-ſhines all others, is pure and ſpotleſs like the ſun, and is everlaſting; thoſe who have it, are ſaid to be cloathed with the ſun, and on ſuch he ſhines in his beams of divine love, grace and mercy, which righteouſneſs ſometimes ſignifies; and his rays of grace tranſform men into righteouſneſs and true holineſs. The ariſing of this ſun may denote the appearance of Chriſt in our nature; under the former diſpenſation this ſun was not riſen, it was then night with the world; John the Baptiſt was the morning-ſtar, the forerunner of it: Chriſt the ſun is now riſen; the day-ſpring from on high hath viſited mankind, and has ſpread its light and heat, its benign influences, by the miniſtration of the goſpel, the grace of God, which has appeared and ſhone out, both in Judea, and in the Gentile world: it may be accommodated to his ſpiritual appearance: this ſun is ſometimes under a cloud, or ſeems to be ſet, which occaſions trouble, and is for wiſe ends, but will and does ariſe again to them that fear the Lord. The manner is, with healing in his wings; by which are meant its rays and beams, which are to the ſun as wings to a bird, by which it ſwiftly ſpreads its light and heat; ſo we read of the wings of the morning, Pſ. cxxxix. 9. Chriſt came as a phyſician, to heal the diſeaſes of men; he healed the bodily diſeaſes of the Jews, and he heals the ſoul-diſeaſes of his people, their ſins; which healing he has procured by his blood and ſtripes: pardon of ſin by the blood of Chriſt is meant by healing, which is univerſal, infallible, and free, Pſ. ciii. 3. Iſ. xxxiii. 24. and liii. 5. Hoſ. xiv. 4. it may denote all that preſervation, protection, proſperity, and happineſs, inward and outward, which they that feared the Lord enjoyed thro' Chriſt, when the unbelieving Jews were deſtroyed; and which is further expreſſed by what follows: and ye ſhall go forth; not out of the world, or out of their graves, as ſome think; but either out of Jeruſalem, as the chriſtians did a little before its deſtruction, being warned ſo to do [g], whereby they were preſerved from that calamity; or it intends a going forth with liberty in the exerciſe of grace and duty, in the exerciſe of faith on Chriſt, love to him, hope in him, repentance, humility, ſelf-denial, &c. and in a chearful obedience to his will; or elſe walking on in his ways, having health and ſtrength, with great pleaſure and comfort; and as Aben Ezra ſays, by the light of this ſun. And grow up as calves of the ſtall; ſuch as are fat, being put up there for that purpoſe; ſee Amos vi. 4. 1 Sam. xxviii. 24. Bochart [h] has proved, from many paſſages out of the Talmud [i], that the word which the Targum here makes uſe of, and anſwers to that in the Hebrew text, which is rendred ſtall, ſignifies a yoke or collar, with which oxen or heifers were bound together, whilſt they were threſhing or treading out of corn; ſo that the calves or heifers here referred to, were ſuch as were not put up in a ſtall, but were yoked together, and employed in treading out the corn; now as there was a law, that ſuch ſhould not be muzzled, whilſt they were thus employed, but might eat of the corn on the floor freely and plentifully, Deut. xxv. 4. theſe uſually grew fat, and ſo were the choiceſt and moſt deſirable, to which the alluſion may be here, and in Jer. xlvi. 21. Amos vi. 4. and are a fit emblem of ſaints joined together in holy fellowſhip, walking together in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord; where they get ſpiritual food for their ſouls, and are in thriving circumſtances; where they meet with the corn of heaven, with that corn which makes the young men chearful, and that bread which nouriſhes up to everlaſting life. The apoſtle alludes to the cuſtom of oxen yoked together, either in plowing, or in treading out the corn, when he ſays, ſpeaking of church-fellowſhip and communion in the ordinances of the goſpel, be ye not unequally yoked with unbelievers, 2 Cor. vi. 14. for this hinders ſpiritual edification, as well as the promotion of the glory of God; but where they are equally yoked, and go hand in hand together in the work and ways of the Lord, they grow and flouriſh; they are comfortable in their ſouls, and lively in the exerciſe of grace; and they are the moſt thriving chriſtians, generally ſpeaking, who are in church-communion, and moſt conſtantly attend the means of grace, and keep cloſeſt to the word and ordinances: for the metaphor here uſed, is deſigned to expreſs a ſpiritual increaſe in all grace, and in the knowledge of Chriſt, and a growing up into him in all things, thro' the uſe of means, the word and ordinances; whereby ſaints become fat and flouriſhing, being fed with the milk of the word, and the breaſts of ordinances, and having fellowſhip with one another; and above all, this ſpiritual growth is owing to the dews of the grace of God, the ſhining of the ſun of righteouſneſs, and the comfortable gales of the ſouth-wind of the Spirit of God, which cauſe the ſpices to flow out. The Septuagint verſion, and thoſe that follow it, render it, ye ſhall leap or ſkip as calves looſed from bonds; as ſuch creatures well fed do when at liberty; and may denote the ſpiritual joy of the ſaints upon their being healed, or becauſe of their ſecure, ſafe, and proſperous eſtate: and ſo the word is explained in the Talmud[k], they ſhall delight themſelves in it; where the Rabbins interpret this and the preceding verſe of the natural ſun in the firmament, which will be the hell[l] in the world to come, and which will burn the wicked, and heal the righteous.

℣. 3. And ye ſhall tread down the wicked, &c.] As grapes in the wine-preſs, as Chriſt did before them, Iſ. lxiii. 2, 3. and they by virtue of him; who makes them more than conquerors thro' himſelf, over all their enemies, ſpiritual and temporal: for they ſhall be aſhes under the ſoles of your feet; this refers to the burning of them, ℣. 1. and may be literally underſtood of their being burnt with the city and temple; when afterwards, as Grotius obſerves, the city of Jeruſalem being in ſome meaſure rebuilt, and called Ælia, there was a chriſtian church in it, governed by biſhops, who were converted Jews; and ſo might be literally ſaid to trample upon the aſhes of the wicked, who had perſecuted them in times paſt, they being upon the very ſpot where theſe men were deſtroyed by fire: in the day that I ſhall do this, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; or in the day which I make[m]; that is, by the riſing of the ſun of righteouſneſs, the goſpel-day. The Talmud[n] interprets this verſe of the bodies of the wicked in hell, which after twelve months will be conſumed, and the wind will ſcatter them under the ſoles of the feet of the righteous.

℣. 4. Remember ye the law of Moſes my ſervant, &c.] Who was faithful as ſuch in the houſe of God, in delivering the law to the children of Iſrael, which was given him; and who are called upon to remember it, its precepts and its penalties, which they were apt to forget: and particularly this exhortation is given now, becauſe no other prophet after Malachi would be ſent unto them, this is what they ſhould have and uſe as their rule and directory; and becauſe that Chriſt, now propheſied of, would be the end of this law; and this, and the prophets, were to be until the days of John the Baptiſt, ſpoken of in the next verſe; and the rather, becauſe in this period of time, between Malachi and the coming of Chriſt, the traditions of the elders were invented and obtained, which greatly ſet aſide the law, and made it of no effect: which I commanded unto him in Horeb for all Iſrael; for tho' the law came by Moſes, and is therefore called his, yet God was the author and efficient cauſe of it; Moſes was only a ſervant and miniſter; and this was given in Horeb, the ſame with Sinai: theſe are names of one and the ſame mountain, at leaſt of the parts of it; one part of it was called Horeb, from its being a dry deſert and deſolate place; and the other Sinai, from its buſhes and brambles. So Jerom[o] ſays, “ Horeb, the mountain of God, is in the land of Midian, by mount Sinai, above Arabia in the wilderneſs, to which are joined the mountain and wilderneſs of the Saracens, called Pharan; but to me it ſeems the ſame mountain is called by two names, ſometimes Sinai, and ſometimes Horeb;” ſee Exod. xxxi. 18. and xxxii. 1, 2. and xxxiii. 6. Agreeable to which Joſephus[p] calls Horeb, where Moſes fed his flock, and ſaw the viſion of the burning buſh, mount Sinai; and ſays, it was the higheſt of the mountains in thoſe parts, very convenient for paſture, and abounded with excellent herbage. Some ſay[q], the eaſtern part of it was called Sinai, and the weſtern part Horeb; it is very likely they joined together at the bottom of the mountain, and were the two tops of it. This being mentioned ſhows, that the law ſtrictly taken, and not the prophets, is here deſigned, for no other was commanded, ordered, or delivered in Horeb; and that was for all the children of Iſrael in ſucceſſive ages, until the coming of the Meſſiah, and for them only, as to the miniſtration of it by Moſes. With the ſtatutes and judgments; the laws ceremonial and judicial, which were given to Moſes, at the ſame time the law of the decalogue was, to be obſerved by the children of Iſrael, and which were ſhadows of things to come; namely, thoſe of them that were of a ceremonial nature, and therefore to be remembred and attended to as leading to Chriſt, and the things of the goſpel.

℣. 5. Behold, I will ſend you Elijah the prophet, &c.] Not the Tiſhbite, as the Septuagint verſion wrongly inſerts inſtead of prophet; not Elijah in perſon, who lived in the times of Ahab; but John the Baptiſt, who was to come in the power and ſpirit of Elijah, Luke i. 17. between whom there was a great likeneſs in their temper and diſpoſition; in their manner of cloathing, and auſtere way of living; in their courage and integrity in reproving vice; and in their zeal and uſefulneſs in the cauſe of God and true religion; and in their famous piety and holineſs of life; and in being both prophets; ſee Matt. xi. 11. and xiv. 5. and that he is intended, is clear from Matt. xvii. 10—13. and Mark ix. 12, 13. It is a notion of the Jews, as Kimchi and others, that the very Elijah, the ſame that lived in the days of Ahab, ſhall come in perſon before the coming of their Meſſiah they vainly expect, and often ſpeak of difficult things to be left till Elias comes and ſolves them; but for ſuch a notion there is no foundation, either in this text or elſewhere. And as groundleſs is that of ſome of the ancient chriſtian fathers, and of the papiſts, as Lyra and others, that Elijah with Enoch will come before the day of judgment, and reſtore the church of God ruined by antichriſt, which they ſuppoſe is meant in the next clauſe. Before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord; that is, before the coming of Chriſt the Son of David, as the Jews[r] themſelves own; and which is to be underſtood, not of the ſecond coming of Chriſt to judgment, tho' that is ſometimes called the great day, and will be dreadful to Chriſtleſs ſinners; but of the firſt coming of Chriſt, reaching to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem: John the Baptiſt, his forerunner, the Elijah here ſpoken of, came proclaiming wrath and terror to impenitent ſinners; Chriſt foretold and denounced ruin and deſtruction to the Jewiſh nation, city and temple; and the time of Jeruſalem's deſtruction was a dreadful day indeed, ſuch a time of affliction as had not been from the creation,

ỹ. 6. And he ſhall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, &c.] Or with the children, as Kimchi; and Ben Melech obſerves, that על is put for עם, and ſo in the next clauſe: and the heart of the children to their fathers; or with their fathers; that is, both fathers and children: the meaning is, that John the Baptiſt ſhould be an inſtrument of converting many of the Jews, both fathers and children, and bringing them to the knowledge and faith of the true Meſſiah; and reconcile them together who were divided by the ſchools of Hillell and Shammai, and by the ſects of the Sadducees and Phariſees, and bring them to be of one mind, judgment, and faith, and to have a hearty love to one another, and the Lord Chriſt; ſee Matt. iii. 5, 6. and the note on Luke i. 17. The Talmudiſts [t] interpret this of compoſing differences, and making peace. Leſt I come and ſmite the earth with a curſe; the land of Judea; which becauſe the greater part of the inhabitants of it were not converted to the Lord, did not believe in the Meſſiah, but rejected him, notwithſtanding the preaching and teſtimony of John the Baptiſt, and the miniſtry and miracles of Chriſt, it was ſmitten with a curſe, was made deſolate, and deſtroyed by the Roman emperors, Veſpaſian and Adrian, as inſtruments doing what God here threatened he would do; for not the whole earth is intended, as the Targum and Abarbinel ſuggeſt; but only that land, and the people of it, are intended, to whom the law of Moſes was given; and to whom Elias, or John the Baptiſt, was to be ſent; and to whom he was ſent, and did come; and by whom he was rejected, and alſo the Meſſiah he pointed at; for which that country was ſmitten with a curſe, and remains under it to this day.

DISSERTATION on the APOCRYPHAL WRITINGS.

IT is frequently ſaid by the Jews [a], that after the death of the latter prophets, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, the Holy Ghoſt departed from Iſrael, or prophecy ceaſed; and that this is one of the five things wanting in the ſecond temple, the Holy Ghoſt, that is, prophecy [b]; and that there was no prophet under that temple [c]; meaning after the building of it was finiſhed, for they ſuppoſe it continued whilſt the three above prophets lived; and they all agree that Malachi was the laſt of the prophets; and whom Aben Ezra [d] calls, סוף נביאים the end of the prophets, at whoſe death prophecy ceaſed: and if there were no ſpirit of prophecy, nor any prophet after thoſe times, until prophecy began to dawn in John the Baptiſt, Malachi propheſies of, then there could be no books written by the inſpiration of the Spirit of God within that period. The ceremonial books of the Old Teſtament, with the Jews [e], are theſe, the five books of Moſes, which we call Geneſis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy; the prophets in this order, Joſhua and Judges, Samuel and Kings, Jeremiah and Ezekiel, Iſaiah and the twelve (whom we call the leſſer prophets); the Hagiographa in this order, Ruth, Pſalms, Job, Proverbs, Eccleſiaſtes, the Song of Songs, Lamentations, Daniel, Eſther, Ezra (which includes Nehemiah), and Chronicles. And with this account agrees Joſephus [f], who ſays, the Jews have only twenty-two books; five of which are the books of Moſes; thirteen wrote by the prophets; and by making Judges and Ruth one book, 1 and 2 Samuel another; 1 and 2 Kings one book, and alſo reckoning Jeremiah and Lamentations but one; and the twelve minor prophets but one, as they are in Acts vii. 42. Ezra and Nehemiah one, and 1 and 2 Chronicles one, they come to juſt that number; and the other four, he ſays, contain hymns to God, and precepts relating to the life of men, which are Pſalms, Proverbs, Eccleſiaſtes, and the Song of Songs. The catalogue of the books of the Old Teſtament, which Melito [g] brought from the eaſt in the ſecond century, contains the ſame books, excepting Nehemiah included in Ezra, and Eſther, which are not mentioned, and no other, or more. Agreeable to all which Origen [h] relates, that the books of the Old Teſtament, according to the Hebrew, are twenty-two; twenty-one of which he reckons and accounts for in the manner as above, making no mention of the twelve leſſer prophets, which make one book. The ſame number of books is obſerved by Epiphanius [i] in the fourth century, and reckoned canonical, and others not; and yet notwithſtanding this, there are ſeveral books written, between the times of Malachi the laſt of the prophets, and the times of the New Teſtament, which are not only accounted canonical by the papiſts, but are tranſlated and bound up in many bibles ſet forth by proteſtants, and even in our own; tho' much complained of by many great and good men, as having a tendency to lead the common people eſpecially, to look upon them as of equal anthority with the inſpired writings; particularly by that very learned countryman of ours, Mr. Hugh Broughton, who obſerves [k], that "placing the trifling Apocrypha betwixt both Teſtaments, is an infinite injury "to the high and holy bible; and Jews think, that our New Teſtament ſhould be no better than the fables which "we join to it, ſeeing commonly men join like to like; alſo they think we have no more judgment for the Old Te-"ſtament, than for the fables that go upon it." Very remarkable are the words of the very judicious and learned Dr. Lightfoot [l], "Tertullian, he ſays, calls the prophet Malachi the bound or ſkirt of Judaiſm and Chriſtianity, a ſtake "that tells, that there promiſing ends, and performing begins; that propheſying concludes, and fulfilling takes place; "there is not a ſpan between theſe two plots of holy ground, the Old and New Teſtament, for they touch each "other. What do the papiſts then, when they put and chop in the Apocrypha for canonical ſcripture, between Ma-"lachi and Matthew, law and goſpel? What do they but make a wall between the ſeraphim, that they cannot hear "each other's cry? What do they but make a ſtop between the cherubim, that they cannot touch each other's wing? "What do they but make a ditch between thoſe grounds, that they cannot reach each other's coaſts? What do "they but remove the land-mark of the ſcriptures? and ſo are guilty of, curſed be he that removes his neighbour's mark, "Deut. xxvii. 17. And what do they but divorce the marriage of the Teſtaments? and ſo are guilty of the breach "of, that which God hath joined together, let no man put aſunder." The books referred to, and which as they ſtand in ſome copies of our bibles, are, the 1 and 2 of Eſdras, Tobit, Judith, additions to the book of Eſther, the wiſdom of Solomon, Eccleſiaſticus, Baruch, and the epiſtle of Jeremy; the ſong of the three children, the hiſtory of Suſanna, and of Bel and the Dragon; the prayer of Manaſſeh, and 1 and 2 of the Maccabees. Theſe books did not obtain for the moſt part much until the 9th and 10th centuries, and were in the 16th century eſtabliſhed by the council of Trent. They are called Apocrypha, from the Greek word αποκρυπτω to hide, becauſe they were not received into the canon of the ſcriptures, and were not allowed to be publickly read in the churches, but lay hid in the cheſts, cloſets, and libraries of men, where they were privately read; and where indeed they ſhould have been kept, and not expoſed to public view, at leaſt not in the manner they are, that is, bound up with our bibles; but ſhould be ſeparate, and read as other human writings are, with care and caution. So the Jews, when they would pronounce a book not canonical, nonical, or condemn it as apocryphal, uſe much the ſame language: it is ſaid [m], that once they had ſome doubt about Proverbs and Eccleſiaſtes, becauſe ſome things at firſt ſight ſeemed contradictory, and they had a mind לגנז to hide, treaſure up, and keep them out of ſight, or to make them apocryphal; but better conſidering the paſſages, and being ſatisfied with the ſenſe of them, they did not hide or lay them up. I ſhall make ſome few remarks upon the above books, as they are placed in our bibles.

The firſt in order are the 1ſt and 2d of Eſdras, or as ſometimes called, the 3d and 4th, the true Ezra and Nehemiah being accounted the 1ſt and 2d; theſe are both reckoned by Jerom [n] among the apocryphal writings, and not to be found among the Jews, and only to be regarded by ſuch as delight in dreams; nor was there ever any Hebrew copy of either of them. Of the firſt of theſe Badwel, a commentator of the apocryphal books, ſays, that neither an Hebrew nor a Greek copy of it were ever ſeen; but tho' there is not any reaſon to believe it ever was wrote in Hebrew, yet Greek copies of it have been: Junius tranſlated it out of Greek; and it is both in Greek and Syriac in Walton's Polyglott bible. It begins with Joſiah's keeping the paſſover in the 18th year of his reign, and reaches to the 7th of Artaxerxes; from whom Eſdras had a commiſſion to go up to Jeruſalem, and look after the affairs of it. Excepting the idle ſtory of the opinion of the three young men, one of which is ſaid to be Zorobabel, concerning what was ſtrongeſt, wine, women, a king, or truth, which ſeems to be taken by the author out of Joſephus [o], the whole is a collection and extracts out of the books of Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah, and in which the writer does not always agree with them; and makes many miſtakes, as when he makes Zorobabel to be a young man in the times of Darius, and Joachim to be the ſon of Zorobabel, ch. v. 5. whereas he was the ſon of Jeſhua, Neh. xii. 10. and calls Darius king of Aſſyria, whereas that monarchy was then at an end, and Darius was king of the Perſians; and makes ſome things to be done in the times of Darius, which were done in the times of Cyrus [p]; ſee ch. iv. 48, 57, 58. compared with Ezra i. 32. and iii. 1. As for the 2d of Eſdras, ſometimes called the 4th, it never appeared in Hebrew or Greek, only in Latin, and is full of fables, dreams, and viſions; and is ſo bad, that it was oppoſed in the council of Trent, and could not be carried for authentic there; tho' ſome things are borrowed out of it by the Latin church, and uſed in its office. Mr. Gregory [q] makes mention of an Arabic manuſcript of it, which he ſays gives it better credit and reputation. The writer of it ſeems to have been a Jewiſh Rabbi, by his making mention of Uriel the archangel, or Jeremiel, as in ſome copies, ch. v. 36. one of the four angels, which, according to the Jews [r], ſtand round the throne of the divine majeſty; and by the fable of Enoch, in ſome copies Behemoth, and Leviathan, the one ordained for a part of the world wherein are a thouſand hills, and the other for another ſeventh part of it moiſt, ch. vi. 49, 52. and in like manner the Jews ſpeak of Behemoth lying on a thouſand hills, on which it feeds [s]; and of the Leviathan and his mate, created at the beginning; and of the latter being killed and ſalted, and reſerved for the feaſt of the righteous in the days of the Meſſiah [t]: and by his ſuggeſting that the ſcriptures were entirely loſt, ch. iv. 23. and xiv. 21. which ſeems calculated to ſupport that notion, that Ezra was divinely inſpired, to write over again all the books of the Old Teſtament [u]: and from abundance of paſſages in this book, it appears that the author had read the New Teſtament, and particularly the book of the Revelation, whoſe ſtile in ſome places he imitates, and manifeſtly refers to various parts of thoſe writings; as when he ſpeaks of the ſigns of the times, and of the third trumpet, and of many other things: ſo that he ſeems to have lived in the ſecond century, and perhaps was a Jew become chriſtian, in name at leaſt. Both theſe books are rejected by the Jews [w].

The book of Tobit ſtands next; whether it was originally wrote in Hebrew is a queſtion; there are two Hebrew copies of it publiſhed, one by Munſter, and another by Fagius: the former had his from Oſwald Schreckenfuchſius, as he himſelf ſays; and that of Fagius was what was publiſhed by the Jews at Conſtantinople, and which Mr. Gregory [x] takes to be the undoubted text of Tobit: and Caſtalio tranſlated his out of an Hebrew copy; but there are ſo many Græciſms in it, as Fabricius [y] obſerves, as well as in thoſe of Munſter and Fagius, that they ſeem to be tranſlated out of the Greek language; wherefore the Greek copy is preferred by Junius, from which he made his tranſlation. Jerom's tranſlation of this book was out of a copy in the Chaldee language [z], in which perhaps it was firſt written by ſome Jew after the Babyloniſh captivity: for tho' Tobit is repreſented as carried captive by Salmaneſer, who is called Enemeſſar; and mention is made of Sennacherib, and of Sarchedon, by whom Eſarhaddon ſeems to be meant; and his ſon Tobias is made to live to the deſtruction of Nineveh by Nebuchadnezzar and Aſſuerus, which he is ſaid to hear of before his death; yet this hiſtory ſeems to have been written many years after, as might be concluded by its original being Chaldee, no books being written in that language before the Babyloniſh captivity; and from the name of an angel in it, the names of which were brought from Babylon, as the Jews ſay [a], as Michael, Raphael, Gabriel; and eſpecially it muſt be, if Jerom's verſion is right, according to which in ch. xiv. 7. it is ſaid, the houſe of God which in it (Iſrael) is burnt, ſhall be built again; tho' indeed, in other verſions, it is delivered as a prophecy: to which may be added that R. Gedaliah ſays [b], there are ſome that ſay, that this affair of Tobit was after the deſtruction of the firſt temple, in the days of the captivity of Babylon; and if ſo, it cannot be a true hiſtory, but a ſpurious work. In ch. xiv. 10. mention is made of Aman, who lived in the times of Eſther, ſome ages after this ſtory; nor is it likely that two men, father and ſon, ſhould live to ſuch an age as theſe did, the one 158, and the other 127 years. And certain it is, it could never be written by divine inſpiration, for no lie is of the truth; whereas a moſt notorious one is told by the angel, who affirmed himſelf to be Azarias, the ſon of Ananias the Great, ch. v. 12. and which appears by the fabulous ſtories told in it, of Sarah's ſeven huſbands being killed by an evil ſpirit one after another, as ſoon as married to her, ch. ii. 8. and of the evil ſpirit being driven away by the ſmell and ſmoke of the heart and liver of a fiſh, being laid on the aſhes or embers of perfumes; and of his being bound by the angel in the uttermoſt parts of Egypt, whither he fled, ch. viii. 2, 3. and of the cure of Tobit's blindneſs with the gall of the fiſh, ch. xi. 8—13. for whatever may be ſaid for the latter, ſince the gall of the fiſh Callionymus, which this is ſuppoſed to be, according to Pliny[c], is good againſt the whiteneſs of the eyes, and to remove ſuperfluous fleſh from them, tho' ſcarcely in ſuch an inſtantaneous manner as here; yet it can never be thought that ſpirits, which are incorporeal, can be affected with the ſmell and ſmoke of any thing. It ſeems to ſavour of a Jewiſh fable; and there is a great deal of reaſon to think the whole was wrote by a Jewiſh Rabbi, mention being made of the angel Raphael, one of the four angels, which, according to the Jews, ſurrounded the throne of God, as before obſerved of Uriel; and here ſaid to be one of the ſeven angels which preſent the prayers of the ſaints to him, ch. xii. 15. So Elxai the heretick, who was originally a Jew, ſpeaks of the angels of prayer[d]; and with the Jews there is mention made of an angel, whoſe name was Sandalphon, who was appointed over the prayers of the righteous[e]; and the name of the evil ſpirit Aſmodeus, ch. iii. 8, 17. is known by the Jewiſh Rabbins, and is ſo called from שמד, which ſignifies to deſtroy, the ſame with Apollyon, a deſtroying angel: the Jews ſay he was the king of devils[f]; and that Naamah, the ſiſter of Tubal-Cain, was his mother, of whom many dæmons were born, as Elias Levita[g] ſays; but he himſelf is of opinion, that he is the ſame with Samael, the angel of death, the Jews often ſpeak of: this Aſmodeus is ſaid to be the evil ſpirit that drove Solomon from his throne, when he grew proud and haughty[h]. The book ſeems to be written, to recommend mercy, charity, and alms-deeds, which are highly extolled in Rabbinical writings: alms and beneficence are anſwerable, they ſay, to the whole law[i]; and ſo great is the efficacy of alms, that it cauſes the redemption to draw nigh[k]; and delivers from the judgment of hell[l]; and entitles to eternal life[m]: yet this book is not reckoned authentic by them; they ſay this is one of the books the chriſtians add to their ſcriptures, and is received by them, but not by us[n].

The hiſtory of Judith follows upon the former. This book does not appear to have been written originally in Hebrew, nor is it received by the Jews[o]. Origen expreſsly ſays[p], the Jews have it not in the Hebrew tongue; tho' Munſter ſeems not to doubt of a Hebrew copy of it in his time at Conſtantinople; which yet might be no other than a tranſlation. That which Jerom tranſlated from, was in Chaldee[q]; and very probably it might be written in that language originally, and perhaps by ſome Jew, fond of ſuperſtitious rites and ceremonies; ſee ch. viii. 6. who feigned this ſtory for the honour of his nation, tho' in a very fooliſh and romantic manner, and it ſeems after the Babyloniſh captivity; for it ſpeaks of the Jews as having been led captive into a land not theirs, and of the temple of their God being caſt to the ground, and their cities taken by the enemies; and of their being now returned, and come up from the places where they were ſcattered; and of their being newly returned from the captivity, and yet ſo long as that the temple was rebuilt, and its veſſels and altar ſanctified, which are frequently mentioned in it; ſee ch. iv. 3. and v. 18, 19. and ix. 1. and xvi. 20. all which is utterly inconſiſtent with this affair being tranſacted, either in the twelfth, or in the ſeventeenth or eighteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar, where another contradiction may be obſerved, which was before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and captivity of the Jews; and the Jewiſh chronologer[r] places this hiſtory, according to ſome, in the reign of Cambyſes, who is ſuppoſed to be called Nebuchadnezzar, that being ſaid to be a common name to the kings of Babylon, as Pharaoh to the kings of Egypt: but that does not appear by any inſtance; and if it was common to the kings of Babylon, yet not ſurely to a king of Perſia, for ſuch Cambyſes was; and beſides, he did not reign ſo long as this king did; for according to Ptolemy's canon, he reigned but eight years in all. It is very improbable that there ever was ſuch an affair tranſacted as is here recorded, for excepting the name of Nebuchadnezzar, there is no other to be met with elſewhere, in ſacred or profane hiſtory, that can be thought to refer to thoſe times. The name of the woman, Judith, nor her ſtory, are to be met with in Joſephus; nor ſuch a place as Bethulia in the land of Iſrael; nor any mention of Joacim an high-prieſt, neither in the ſcriptures, nor in Joſephus's catalogue of them under the firſt temple; nor of Achior the Ammonite; nor of Arphaxad king of the Medes, who is ſaid to build Ecbatana, which, according to Herodotus[s], was built by Dejoces; and therefore Dr. Prideaux[t] conjectures he is meant by Arphaxad, as Saoſduchinus by Nebuchadnezzar; nor any ſuch perſon as Holofernes, Nebuchadnezzar's general: wherefore Grotius takes it to be a parabolical fiction, and that by Judith is meant Judea; by Bethulia, the temple; by the ſword from thence, the prayers of the ſaints; by Nebuchadnezzar, the devil; and by his kingdom of Aſſyria, the devil's kingdom, pride; by Holofernes, his inſtrument and agent in perſecution, Antiochus Epiphanes, who made himſelf maſter of Judea; and Joacim or Eliakim ſignify, that God would ariſe and help her, and cut him off: and Mr. Hugh Broughton[u], long before him, ſeems to take it in ſuch a light, who ſays, "the Jews "commonwealth is properly Judith, and a cloſe warning framed, that Judith, the Jews ſtate, calling for vengeance "by great Alexander, will cut off the head of Holofernes, the Perſian ſtate." However, it is plain enough, that be it a real hiſtory, it could not be penned by inſpiration; for this woman Judith declares to Holofernes, ſhe would tell him no lie, which yet ſhe did; and ſays they were things told and declared to her, the contrary to which ſhe knew; nay, ſhe prays that God would ſmite by the deceit of her lips the prince with the ſervant, ch. ix. 10. and xi. 5, 19. ſhe uſes very impure and indecent language in ſpeaking of the rape of Dinah, and commends and praiſes the fact of Simeon, which was condemned by the Lord, ch. ix. 2. ſee Gen. xxxiv. 30. and xlix. 5, 6. mention is made of the ſons of the Titans, and of the high giants, referring to heatheniſh romances, which is not agreeable to an inſpired writer, ch. xvi. 7. nor is it probable that ſuch a town as Bethulia is repreſented to be, ſhould ſtand out againſt ſuch a numerous army, or that that ſhould flee upon the death of a ſingle perſon; and many more improbabilities might be obſerved in this account, particularly in the enterprize of Judith, and her ſucceſs. The hiſtory is cloſed with obſerving, ſerving, that Iſrael had no trouble from their enemies all her days hence forward, and a long time after her death; which peace muſt have laſted 80 years at leaſt, which was what the Jews never enjoyed ſince they were a nation, as Dr. Prideaux obſerves; for adds he, allowing her to have been 45 years old at her killing of Holofernes, there muſt be 60 years after to the time of her death; (for ſhe lived to be 105), and a long time after in the text cannot imply leſs than 20 years; and if ſhe was but 25, which is an age much more reaſonable to ſuppoſe to captivate with her beauty, as well as better agrees with her being called παιδισκη καλη, a fair damſel, or beautiful young woman, ch. xii. 13. this time of proſperity muſt have laſted 100 years, and will not agree with any time either before or after the captivity: to which may be added one obſervation more, that in Jerom's verſion, which is thought to be the beſt, it is ſaid, that "the feſtival of this victory was received by the Hebrews into the number of their holy days, and was obſerved by them from that time to the preſent day;" which laſt clauſe betrays the writer of the hiſtory to have lived a conſiderable time after the fact: now no ſuch feſtival is to be found in the Jewiſh calendar, as the learned Selden [w] obſerves; not in the Paleſtine calendar of Ben Simeon; nor in the canons of computation of R. Nahaſſon; nor in the Hebrew calendar publiſhed by Munſter; or in that of Scaliger, Petavius, and Genebrard. The appointment of this feſtival, to commemorate the deliverance wrought, is by R. Azarias [x] ſaid to be by Jeſhua, the father of Joacim, after the captivity, whom he makes to be the writer of this hiſtory; but what he ſays is took out of Pſeudo-Philo [y], publiſhed by Annius the lying monk of Viterbo, whom he has copied word for word. Some Jewiſh writers [z] ſpeak indeed of this affair of Judith and Holofernes, as commemorated on the 25th of Ciſleu, the day obſerved for the dedication of the temple and altar, in the times of the Maccabees, with which this can have no connexion: and after all it ſeems another Judith is meant, a daughter of one of the Maccabees, that cut off the head of Nicanor [a]; a ſtory equally fabulous as this. In ſhort, it is ſurprizing that this woman Judith ſhould be called, by the writer of this hiſtory, a godly woman, and one that feared the Lord, when ſhe was guilty of notorious lying; of acting the part of a baud; of profane ſwearing, ſwearing by the life of Nebuchadnezzar and his power; of murder, and of ſpeaking in praiſe of it [b].

The additions to the book of Eſther contain ſix or ſeven chapters, not to be found in any Hebrew copies; the author of which, Calmet [c] takes to be Lyſimachus, mentioned in ch. xi. 1. who becauſe in the true Eſther mention is made of ſome letters of Ahaſuerus or Artaxerxes, this writer has given us copies of them, as well as of the prayers of Mordecai and Eſther, and of the dream of the former; in all which there are plain marks of forgery and ſtupidity. There are many things in them directly contrary to the book of Eſther. The writer of theſe additions makes the affair of the eunuchs, intending to take away the king's life, to be in the ſecond year of his reign, ch. xi. 2. and xii. 1. whereas the true hiſtory begins with the third year of his reign, when Vaſhti was his queen; and it was after his marriage to Eſther that that affair happened, even in the ſeventh year of his reign, ch. i. 3. and ii. 16, 21. he repreſents Mordecai as a ſervitor in the king's court before, and as being ordered upon his diſcovery of the eunuchs to ſerve there ſtill, and that he was rewarded for what he did, ch. xi. 3. and xii. 5. whereas, in the true Eſther, it is expreſsly ſaid there was nothing done for him ſome time after, ch. vi. 3. he makes Haman to be incenſed againſt Mordecai, becauſe of thoſe two eunuchs, ch. xii. 6. whereas the only reaſon given in the book of Eſther is, becauſe he would not bow to him, ch. iii. 5. he ſpeaks of Haman as in great honour with the king, at the time that the eunuchs were diſcovered by Mordecai, ch. xii. 6. but according to the true Eſther, it was after theſe things that Haman was promoted, ch. iii. 1. he makes the king to call him a Macedonian, when he was an Agagite or an Amalekite; and fooliſhly to ſuggeſt, that he had a deſign to tranſlate the kingdom of the Perſians to the Macedonians, a people ſcarce known to the Perſians at that time, and from whom they had nothing to fear; and of which change there was not the leaſt ſhew of probability, ch. xvi. 10, 11, and as fooliſhly to order the ſeveral heathen nations ſubject to him, to keep the feaſt of Purim, as the Jews did, ver. 22. to which the two lots, one for the people of God, and another for all the Gentiles, ſeem to relate, ch. x. 10. and as ſtupid is it to make the king ſpeak a language he underſtood not, calling the Jews the children of the moſt high and moſt mighty living God, ch. x. 16. as well as to make Eſther uſe unbecoming language, calling her huſband lion, and his bed the bed of the uncircumciſed, which ſhe abhorred, ch. xiv. 13, 15. and either the author tells a lie himſelf, or makes the queen to tell one, that the king looked very fiercely upon her, which cauſed her to turn pale and faint, and yet that ſhe ſaw him as an angel of the Lord, and his countenance full of grace, ch. xv. 7, 13, 14. The dream of Mordecai and his prayer, and that of Eſther, are in Pſeudo-Joſephus, or in Joſephus Ben Gorion [d], with ſome variation; but whether this writer took them from him, or he from this writer, is not certain. Of theſe additions, as well as of the preceding hiſtory of Judith, the Jewiſh chronologer [e] ſays, theſe are added by the chriſtians to their ſcriptures, and received by them, but not by us.

The book of Wiſdom is not only in our verſion called the wiſdom of Solomon, but in the Greek, Syriac, and Arabic verſions; and the author of it would be thought to be Solomon, ch. ix. 7, 8. and yet it is plain he was not; and therefore be he who he will, can never be an inſpired writer, that is guilty of ſuch a fraud, and takes to himſelf a falſe name; for as Calmet [f] obſerves, if this book really belongs to this prince, how comes it that the Jews never admitted it as canonical? how comes it not to be found in the Hebrew? that no one has ever ſeen it in that language? that the tranſlator ſays nothing of it, and that the ſtile ſhews no tokens of the pretended original? he obſerves, we find none of thoſe Hebraiſms in it, which are hardly to be avoided by thoſe who tranſlate a book from the Hebrew; that the author wrote Greek very well, had read Plato and the Greek poets, and even borrows expreſſions peculiar to them, as Ambroſia, the river of forgetfulneſs, or Lethe, the kingdom of Pluto, or Hades, &c. ch. i. 14. and vii. 13. and xix. 20. It appears very evident to have been written long after the times of Solomon; for the author ſpeaks of the people

ple of God being then held in ſubjection by their enemies, ch. xv. 14. which was not true of them in Solomon's time: there are many paſſages which ſeem to be taken from, or refer to, the prophets Iſaiah, Ezekiel, and even Malachi the laſt of them, as ch. ix. 13. and xi. 22. from Iſ. xl. 13, 15. ch. v. 17, 18. from Iſ. lix. 16. ch. i. 13. from Ezek. xviii. 32. ch. v. 6. from Mal. iv. 2. nay, what he ſays of the righteous, that calls himſelf the child of the Lord, and was made to reprove our thoughts, &c. ch. ii. 12—19. when compared with many paſſages in the New Teſtament, it ſeems pretty plain that he intended Jeſus Chriſt, as Grotius thinks; ſo that the author appears to have been a chriſtian, and this to be the work of a fraudulent one, unbecoming his character; ſee alſo ch. vii. 26. compared with Heb. i. 3. Col. i. 15. and there are many things in it falſe and fooliſh, and contrary to ſound doctrine and chriſtian charity; as when he condemns the marriage-bed as ſinful, and repreſents baſtards as having no hope of ſalvation left them, ch. iii. 13, 18. he ſpeaks meanly of the divine Logos or wiſdom of God, calling him a vapour and ſtream, ch. vii. 25. and countenances the notion of Plato and Origen, of ſouls paſſing into bodies according to their merits; for I, ſays he, being good, came into a body undefiled, ch. viii. 20. he makes the murder of Abel to be the cauſe of the flood, whereas the ſcripture aſſigns another reaſon of it, ch. x. 3, 4. he ſays the Egyptians were tormented with their own abominations or idols, ch. xii. 23, 24. whereas, tho' they worſhipped dogs, cats, crocodiles, &c. yet not frogs, locuſts, and lice, with which they were plagued: and the original of idolatry he makes to be a mournful father making an image for his little child, and honouring it as a God, ch. xiv. 15. and he ſays many things concerning the Egyptians and their plagues, which ſavour of Jewiſh fables, in ch. xvii. and xviii. and xix. and particularly the Rabbinical notion of the manna agreeing to every palate [f], as in ch. xvi. 20, 21. wherefore, upon the whole, it is pretty ſtrange that ſo very learned a man as Mr. Gregory [g] ſhould ſay, that “the wiſdom of Solomon is a book worthy enough of that name, and comparing with any that was ever written by the hand of man:” and he is alſo miſtaken in ſaying, “that this book was written in Chaldee is certain, for R. Moſes bar Nachman quoteth it ſo out of ch. vii. 5, &c. and ver. 17. in the preface to his comment on the Pentateuch;” whereas the ſenſe of that Rabbi, as Hottinger [h] obſerves, was not that that Chaldee copy was an original and authentic one, but that the book was tranſlated into the Chaldee or Syriac language: and ſo R. Azarias [i] repreſents it as a tranſlation; and what is quoted from it by that Rabbi, agrees with the Syriac verſion of it. The book is rejected by the Jews [k] as not canonical. It is thought to have been wrote by Philo the Jew, as it ſeems from the diction and matter of it [l].

The book of Eccleſiaſticus which follows, is a much more valuable work than the former, and bears a greater reſemblance to the works of Solomon, eſpecially his Proverbs, than that does, yet not of divine inſpiration. The tranſlator and publiſher of it was Jeſus the ſon of Sirach, whoſe grandfather Jeſus, by reading the ſcriptures and other good books, attained to a conſiderable ſhare of knowledge; and he not only collected the grave and ſhort ſentences of wiſe men that went before him, but added ſome of his own; which work being almoſt perfected, fell into the hands of his ſon Sirach, when he died; and which he left to his ſon Jeſus: and being written in Hebrew, with great labour and diligence he tranſlated it into another tongue (the Greek), and deſires the reader's candour and pardon, wherein he might ſeem to come ſhort of the ſenſe of ſome words he laboured to interpret; all which ſhews it was not written by divine inſpiration, nor was it pretended to be: and there are ſome things in it contrary to ſound doctrine; for following the Greek verſion of Prov. viii. 22. he ſpeaks of the divine Logos or wiſdom as created by God, ch. xxiv. 9. and he makes honouring parents, and giving alms, to be an atonement for ſins, ch. iii. 3, 30. and he ſays other things contrary to charity, as when he diſſuades from helping ſinners, and giving to the ungodly, ch. xii. 4, 5. he abſurdly ſays that Samuel propheſied after his death, and ſhewed the king his end, ch. xlvi. 20. and he ſuggeſts that Elias the Tiſhbite is ordered to pacify the wrath of the Lord, and to turn the father to the ſon; taking the words in Mal. iv. 5, 6. to belong to him, when they are ſpoken of John the Baptiſt, ch. xlviii. 10. This writer favours, as has been obſerved [m], the Arian hereſy, necromancy or conſulting the dead, and the error of the Jews, who fanſy that Elias will come in perſon before the Meſſiah. It is a queſtion with learned men, whether the ſon of Sirach, the publiſher of this book, is the ſame with Ben Sira, often ſpoken of in Jewiſh writings: their names agree very well, and many of the ſayings of Ben Sira are in the book of Eccleſiaſticus [n], which are to be found in the Talmud, and other Jewiſh writings, at leaſt very near the ſame; but the accounts of their age, in which they lived, differ: Ben Sira, ſome ſay [o], was the ſon or a nephew of Jeremiah; whereas the grandfather of Sirach muſt live after Simeon the high-prieſt, the ſon of Onias, whom he commends, ch. l. and his grandſon lived in the times of Euergetes king of Egypt; not the firſt of that name, who ſucceeded Ptolemy Philadelphus, but the ſecond, that followed Philometor; and here the author of Juchaſin [p] places him; and it was in the thirty-eighth year, not of that king's reign, that he was in Egypt, for neither of the kings of that name reigned ſo long, according to Ptolemy's canon, but of his own age, when and where he tranſlated and finiſhed this book: wherefore as this account carries Ben Sira too high for the ſon of Sirach, ſo he is brought down too low by Solomon Virga [q], who places him after the times of the emperor Auguſtus; however, it is judged by many writers, both Jewiſh and chriſtian, that one and the ſame perſon is meant: from whence ſome would form an argument in favour of this book being canonical, becauſe Ben Sira is by the Jews placed among the Hagiographa, as it ſeems from a paſſage in the Talmud [r]; it is ſaid in the Hagiographa, “every fowl reſorts to its kind, and the ſons of men to what is like to them:” upon which the Toſephoth obſerve, there is no ſuch ſcripture; but perhaps it is in the book of Ben Sira: and there is ſomething like it in Eccleſiaſt. xiii. 16. and xxvii. 9. every beaſt loveth his like, and every man loveth his neighbour; upon which Mr. Gregory aſks [s], was Ben Sira reckoned for canonical too? no, he was not; nor is any ſuch thing implied in the above obſervation, but the contrary, ſince it is expreſsly affirmed it was not ſcripture: and the word Cetubim or Hagiographa, is a word of an ambiguous meaning, ſometimes to be taken in a ſtrict ſenſe for writings inſpired by the Holy Ghoſt; and at other times more largely, as to take in other writings of men of ſome note, and frequently read: and that his writings were not reckoned canonical is certain, or otherwiſe they would never have been forbidden to be read, as they expreſsly are, for it is ſaid [u], it is forbidden to read the books of Ben Sira; and they are all of them called foreign or profane books, of which Eccleſiaſticus is reckoned one [w]; and is particularly ſaid by Manaſſeh ben Iſrael [x] to be apocryphal: and R. Zacutus [y] relates, that Ben Sira compoſed two books, which are joined with the twenty-four by the Romans or Latins; that is, by them only, not by the Jews: and R. David Ganz [z] reckoning the ſeveral apocryphal books in their order, and this among the reſt, ſays, they are received by them (the chriſtians), but not by us.

The book of Baruch is a mere romance; both Jerom [a] and Epiphanius [b] ſay, it never was reckoned among the Hebrew books, or eſteemed by the Jews; who obſerve [c], it is indeed received by the chriſtians, meaning the papiſts, but not by us: they will not allow Baruch to be a prophet; and ſometimes repreſent him as grieved and diſturbed, that ſeeing he was ſo long a diſciple and an amanuenſis of the prophet Jeremiah, the Spirit of prophecy ſhould never fall upon him [d]. The writer of this book pretends, that Baruch was in Babylon when he wrote it; but it does not appear from any authentic records, that he ever was there. The Jews indeed, to keep up the chain of their ſucceſſors, by whom the oral law was handed down, ſay, that both he and Jeremiah were there, and died there [e]; that he received from Jeremiah, and Ezra from him; but it is not evident that either of them were there. It is further ſuggeſted, as if it was written in the fifth year of Jeconiah's captivity; and various things are related, which are improbable, abſurd, and inconſiſtent; as that the words of this book were read to Jeconiah by the river Sud near Babylon, of which river no mention is made by any other writer; and very unlikely it is that Jeconiah ſhould be preſent at the reading of it, when he was a priſoner at Babylon, and continued ſo for the ſpace of thirty-ſeven years, until he was releaſed by Evil-Merodach coming to the throne. Nor was there, at the time of the reading of this book, an high-prieſt at Jeruſalem of the name of Joachim, to whom money collected was ſent; the name of the then high-prieſt was Seraiah, who was afterwards carried captive with Zedekiah: nor does there appear to be any reaſon for making ſuch a collection, and ſending it to Jeruſalem; or that the captives in Babylon were in a capacity of doing it, any more than they in Jeruſalem ſtood in need of it: and very abſurdly it is ſuggeſted, that at the ſame time the veſſels of the temple, which had been carried away, and which Zedekiah had made, were returned; whereas we no where read of any veſſels he did make, nor is there any reaſon to believe he ever made any; and if he did, they could not be carried away until he himſelf was, which was not till ſome years after this: and the whole ſeems, as if it was purpoſely calculated to verify the prophecies of the falſe prophets, Jer. xxvii. 16. and xxviii. 3. The Jews are directed to pray for Nebuchadnezzar, and his ſon Balthaſar; whereas Balthaſar, or Belſhazzar, was not his immediate ſon and ſucceſſor, and it is very probable was not now born, for there were thirty-two years to come of Jeconiah's impriſonment, from whence he was looſed when Evil-Merodach came to the throne; and according to Ptolemy's canon he reigned two years, and after him Neriglíſſar four years, and then Belſhazzar ſucceeded. And after all, why is not Evil-Merodach, the immediate ſon and ſucceſſor, rather recommended? Some indeed take the fifth year, in which this book is pretended to be written, to be the fifth after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, the burning of the city, and the carrying Zedekiah and the people captives; and indeed there are various things that agree with this; and all that is ſaid from ch. i. 14. to the end of the book, ſuppoſes it: but then this will very little, if at all, leſſen the number of the miſtakes and blunders in it, but will rather increaſe them; for if the city was now deſtroyed and burnt, what folly was it to collect money, and ſend it thither to buy ſacrifices with, to offer on the altar, when there were neither city, temple, nor altar ſtanding; not to take notice of the phraſe of making or preparing manna, which if intended, muſt be monſtrouſly abſurd; but perhaps the Minchah or meat-offering is meant. After all, the writer manifeſtly betrays himſelf, and makes it clearly appear that he wrote after the 70 years captivity were ended, ſince in ch. i. 15, &c. he borrows many expreſſions from the prophet Daniel, which he delivered at this time; unleſs any one can imagine, that that holy prophet borrowed his language from ſuch an abſurd writer as this. The epiſtle of Jeremy, with which the book concludes, is neither written in his ſtile, nor in the ſtile of the ſcriptures; and expreſſes generations by decads, or the term of ten years, no where uſed in the ſacred writings, nor in any other writer.

The Song of the three children in the furnace, was neither in the Hebrew, nor in the Syriac languages, according to Theodoret, in his time, who wrote upon it; though there are ſince tranſlations of it into the Syriac and Arabic tongues: great part of it is taken out of the 148th pſalm, or done in imitation of it; and another part of it is entirely deprecatory, and quite diſagreeable to ſuch a deliverance wrought; and the account given of the flame ſtreaming above the furnace forty and nine cubits, ſeems fabulous and romantic; and of the angel's ſmiting the flame of fire out of the oven, and making a moiſt whiſtling wind in it, is not only of the ſame caſt, but contrary to Dan. iii. 25. where the three men are ſaid to walk in the midſt of it.

The hiſtory of Suſanna is a mere fable, and is rejected by the Jews; it is one of the books of which they ſay [f], they are received by the Nazarenes, but not by us: and that it was not written originally in Hebrew, but in Greek, is abundantly manifeſt from the alluſion, in the puniſhment pronounced upon the elders, to the maſtick and holmtrees, in the Greek language, under which they ſaid they found Suſanna and the young man together. The whole is full of improbabilities and untruths; as that at the beginning of the captivity, as it muſt be, ſince Daniel was a youth; that Joacim, the huſband of Suſanna, ſhould ſo ſoon become a rich man, have a large houſe and garden, and be reſorted to by the captive Jews; or that there ſhould be ſo ſoon, or even at all, judges allowed to the Jews in Babylon, to take cognizance of their affairs, and eſpecially of life and death; and that Daniel, who as ſoon as he was carried captive to Babylon, and who was ſelected with others, and brought up in the king's court, ſhould be at liberty, and have leiſure to converſe with the Jews, and ſhould be admitted, being ſo young, to ſit down with the elders of Iſrael, and be allowed to examine and judge of this affair: nor is the ſtory itſelf likely, that Suſanna ſhould go into the garden to waſh at noon-day, and yet be unprovided with materials; that ſhe ſhould ſend both her maids away to fetch her oil and waſh-balls, and be left alone; and that ſince ſhe intended to waſh, that the garden was not thoroughly ſearched firſt, to ſee if any perſon was ſecretly lurking in it, and care taken that all the doors and avenues to it were ſhut, as it is plain they were not; nor is it probable that theſe elders would have made ſuch an attempt whilſt her maidens were gone for the above things, when they might expect they would return before they could accompliſh their deſign, and ſo be detected; with many other things, which might be obſerved in the account: add to which, that the writer makes mention of a paſſage of ſcripture, no where to be found in it, ℣. 5. and diſtinguiſhes between the daughters of Iſrael, and of Judah, over the former of which theſe elders are ſaid to have prevailed, and to have kept company with, ℣. 57. whereas thoſe had been carried captive by Salmaneſer a hundred years before, or more; and the latter he calls Suſanna, and yet makes Daniel to call her a daughter of Iſrael too, ℣. 48. and upon the whole, Africanus [g] might well ſuſpect this hiſtory to be ſpurious and fictitious.

The ſtory of Bel and the Dragon is as great a romance as ever was wrote, full of the moſt ridiculous, abſurd and monſtrous things that could be thought of. It is not credible that Bel, which was an idol of the Babylonians, ſhould be worſhipped by Cyrus the Perſian; and if he did worſhip it, it can never be thought he ſhould be ſo groſly ſtupid as to imagine, that an image made of braſs and clay could really eat and drink, which was never ſuppoſed of any idol-ſtatue by the groſſeſt of heathen idolaters: beſides, Bel, and the reſt of the Babylonian images, were deſtroyed and broken to pieces by Cyrus when Babylon was taken, as was foretold, Iſ. xlvi. 1. Jer. l. 2. and li. 44. nor is the manner, in which the fraud of Bel's eating ſuch large proviſions every day was detected, plauſible; namely, by ordering the king's ſervants to ſtrew aſhes throughout the temple, whereby the prints of the footſteps of the prieſts, and their families were diſcovered, who came in by a privy door and eat the proviſions; for as this was done by the king's ſervants, it is much ſome of them had not diſcovered it to the prieſts; and beſides, as the prieſts knew what Daniel was about, to make diſcovery of their intrigues, upon the firſt ſight of the aſhes they might have concluded at once for what purpoſe they were ſtrowed, and after they had took away the proviſions, might, and doubtleſs would, have ſpread new aſhes over their footſteps, and ſo have diſappointed Daniel in his views. And though Daniel may be ſuppoſed to take a more effectual way to deſtroy the dragon, yet not as to ſhew any thing extraordinary and ſupernatural; but it is beyond all belief that the Babylonians, who were juſt ſubdued by Cyrus, and they and all they had put into the hands of the Perſians, ſhould come and menace the king, and have ſuch power over him as to oblige him to deliver Daniel into their hands. The ſtory of the lion's den, and of his being caſt into it, and the circumſtances attending, are monſtrouſly fabulous and incredible, as that two bodies of men, as Calmet [h] himſelf underſtands it, who credits the ſtory in ℣. 31. or two ſlaves, as in the margin, ſhould be caſt every day into the den to be devoured by the lions: it is not likely there ſhould be ſo many condemned to death every day for capital crimes they were guilty of; or that ſuch cruelty ſhould be exerciſed continually in the reign of ſuch a prince as Cyrus; nor is it true that Daniel was caſt into the den of lions in his reign, but in the reign of Darius, Dan. vi. and upon another account; and a moſt fabulous and falſe ſtory is told of an angel taking the prophet Habacuc by the hair of the head, and carrying him from Judea to Babylon with a bowl of bread and pottage to feed Daniel in the den; whereas Habacuc lived before the captivity, and propheſied of the Chaldeans by name coming againſt Jeruſalem to deſtroy it, Hab. i. 6. this the Arabs aſcribe to Jeremiah [i]: nor is it likely that the king ſhould be ſeven days before he went to the den to bewail Daniel, whoſe favourite he was. It is aſtoniſhing that ſuch an idle, romantic ſtory ſhould be added to the ſcriptures, or bound up with them, or be admitted to be read in public congregations by any that call themſelves chriſtians, to the ſtumbling of Turks and Jews; the latter obſerve [k] that theſe ſtories are written in a book called Bel, and it is received by them (the chriſtians) but not by us. Indeed Joſephus Ben Gorion [l] tells the like ſtory, and ſo do the Rabbins [m], who ſay that Nebuchadnezzar had a dragon, which Daniel by his leave deſtroyed, by putting nails into his ſtraw he eat, which tore his entrails, to which they apply Jer. li. 44.

The prayer of Manaſſeh never appeared in the Hebrew language, and though there is ſome devotion in it, yet there is no reaſon to believe it is the compoſition of Manaſſeh king of Iſrael; but becauſe when he was in chains in Babylon, it is ſaid he repented and humbled himſelf before God and prayed, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 12, 13. ſome officious perſon has compoſed a prayer for him; and it ſeems to have been framed by one of a phariſaical ſpirit, ſince he ſpeaks of juſt perſons, as Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, as without ſin, and who ſtood in no need of repentance, and for whom that is not appointed, ſee Luke xv. 7.

Next follow the books of the Maccabees, firſt and ſecond, ſo called from Maccabæus the ſurname of Judas, the third ſon of Matthias, a prieſt of Modin, whoſe exploits, and thoſe of his father and brethren, are recorded in them. Learned men differ much in the derivation of this name; Iſidore Peluſiota [n] ſays, in the Perſic language it ſignifies lord; Druſius [o] derives it from כבה, to extinguiſh, and interprets it an extinguiſher; he being an inſtrument of extinguiſhing the enemies of the people of God, and of the civil wars among them. Hottinger [p] thinks it may be formed from the Arabic word כבא to proſtrate or caſt to the ground, as he did great numbers of his enemies; but to omit many others which may be ſeen in Calmet [q], and other writers, the more common opinion is that the four letters מכבי, are the initial letters of the words in the Hebrew text of Exod. xv. 11. who is like unto thee, O Lord, among the gods, which were on his enſign, ſtandard, or banner. The name is peculiar to Judas, though it is given to all his brethren, ſee 1 Maccab. ii. 4, 66. and iii. 1. and becauſe of the valiant things done by them, recorded in theſe books, they have this general title. Theſe writings, however uſeful in hiſtory, are not received by the Jews[r] into the canon of the ſcriptures; and they are particularly excepted out of them by Origen[s] in the catalogue he has given, who ſpeaks of them as extra-books, and ſays they were inſcribed Sarbeth Sarbaneel, which I ſhould chuſe to render the prince of the houſe or family, the prince of the children of God; which ſeems to have a ſpecial reſpect to Judas Maccabæus, by which it ſhould ſeem that theſe books were in the Hebrew language. Of the firſt of theſe Jerom[t] ſays, that he found it in the Hebrew; but it muſt ſince be loſt, for it is not now extant in that language, as we know of. This book is, for the moſt part, a good and uſeful hiſtory, and in many things agrees with Joſephus; it contains a hiſtory of forty years from the reign of Antiochus Epiphanes, to the death of Simon the high-prieſt, about a hundred and thirty years before Chriſt. It could not be wrote by inſpiration, ſince the writer of it himſelf obſerves in ſeveral places, that there was no prophet in thoſe times, ch. iv. 46. and ix. 27. and xiv. 41. nor is it without its miſtakes, to which all human hiſtories are ſubject; as when he ſays that Alexander the great parted his kingdom among his honourable ſervants while he was yet alive, ch. i. 6. Indeed, ſome years after his death, when there had been many wars and conflicts among his captains, it was divided between four of them, according to the prophecy of Daniel, ch. viii. 8, 22. but not by his direction, and much leſs in his life-time. When he was on his dying bed, he was aſked to whom he left the kingdom, his anſwer was to him that ſhould appear to be beſt[u]; and Philip Aridæus, a baſtard-brother of Alexander, reigned ſeven years, and after him another Alexander, the ſon of Alexander the great by Roxane, reigned twelve years according to Ptolemy's canon; and according to the ſame canon Alexander himſelf reigned but eight years, whereas the writer of this book of the Maccabees ſays he reigned twelve years, and then died, ℣. 7. nor is it true what he relates, ℣. 8, 9. that every one of his ſervants bare rule in his place, and all of them put crowns upon their heads; which was only true of ſome of them, after a courſe of years. Equally falſe is what is related of Antiochus the great, that he was taken alive by the Romans, and that India, Media, Lydia, and the goodlieſt countries they took from him, they gave to king Eumenes, ch. viii. 6, 7, 8. whereas Antiochus after his defeat at the famous battle at Magneſia firſt fled to Sardis, and then to Apamea, and not being able to pay the ſums the Romans obliged him to pay, went and plundered the temple of Jupiter Belus at Elymais of its vaſt treaſure, when the populace roſe upon him, and murdered him: the Romans indeed gave to Eumenes king of Pergamus, who behaved well at the above battle, all the countries on this ſide mount Taurus which had belonged to Antiochus; but not India and Media, which were neither of them in the hands of the Romans to give, or were ever in the poſſeſſion of Eumenes. Other miſtakes are made concerning the number of the members of the Roman ſenate, as that they were three hundred and twenty, when they were but three hundred; and that they ſat in the council daily, whereas their aſſembling was ſometimes intermitted, eſpecially on court-days; and of the government of the city of Rome by one perſon, whereas they had yearly two conſuls, ℣. 15, 16. and in calling Alexander the ſon of Antiochus Epiphanes, ch. x. 1. without giving the leaſt hint of his being otherwiſe; when he was a pretender, whoſe name was Balas, a young man of low life, whom the kings of Egypt, Aſia, and Cappadocia, ſet up againſt Demetrius king of Syria, and called him Alexander, and gave out that he was the ſon of Antiochus[w]; and yet Joſephus[x] makes the ſame miſtake: and likewiſe when he ſpeaks of a Darius as king of the Lacedemonians, in the times of Onias the high-prieſt, ch. xii. 7. whereas they never had any king of that name, nor any of the name of Areus, or Oniares, as ſome would have it, in thoſe times. If any are deſirous of ſeeing theſe ſeveral things more largely and learnedly treated of, they may conſult a learned countryman of our own, referred to in the margin[y]. Albericus Gentilis[z] has attempted to explain and defend the above things, tho' with little ſucceſs. But it is not ſo much to be wondered at, that a Jew, as the writer of this book may be ſuppoſed to be, ſhould be unacquainted with Grecian and Roman affairs; it is to be hoped he has wrote more accurately on the Jewiſh affairs of thoſe times, for which the hiſtory deſerves ſome reſpect. In ch. i. 54. he has made a wrong application of the abomination of deſolation in Dan. xi. 31. as appears from Matt. xxiv. 15. but this being before the accompliſhment, need not ſeem ſtrange; it ſhews the book however could not be wrote by inſpiration.

The ſecond book of the Maccabees is much inferior to the firſt; it is prefaced with ſome letters of the Jews in Jeruſalem, to their brethren in Egypt, in which are ſome things falſe and fabulous: mention is made of Judas Maccabæus being alive in the 188th year, i. e. of the æra of the Seleucidæ, ch. i. 10. when he died in the 152d year; ſee 1 Maccab. ix. 3, 18. a falſhood is told of Antiochus being killed in the temple of Nanea or Diana in Perſia, and of the prieſts there deſtroying his captain, and thoſe with him, ℣. 13—16. which is contrary to the prophecy of him in Dan. viii. 25. that he ſhould be broken without hands, or not be deſtroyed by the hand of any man; and to the account that is given of his death at Babylon, by the author of 1 Maccab. vi. 8—16. nay, contrary to the account that is given in this book itſelf, ch. ix. 16, 28. Another falſhood is told of Nehemiah building the temple and altar, ℣. 18. whereas theſe were built long before his time, by whom only the walls of the city were rebuilt; and a fabulous ſtory is related of the fire of the altar being hid in a pit, and found in the times of Nehemiah, ℣. 19, 20, &c. whereas this fire is one of the things the Jews unanimouſly ſay was wanting in the ſecond temple; ſee ch. x. 13. and another of Jeremiah's hiding the tabernacle, ark, and altar of incenſe, in a hollow cave, ch. ii. 5, 6, &c. and which he is falſely ſaid to propheſy of: and the hiſtory following is ſaid to be an abridgment of Jaſon a Cyrenean; and ſuch an account is given of it, and of the abridging this work, as is a clear proof it was far from being a work of inſpiration, ℣. 23, &c. it contains a hiſtory of about fifteen years, from the time that Heliodorus was ſent with a commiſſion by Seleucus, to fetch him the treaſures of the temple at Jeruſalem, to the victory obtained by Judas Maccabæus over Nicanor, about 160 years before Chriſt. It abounds with accounts of apparitions, dreams, and things marvellous, as well as there are things falſe and erroneous in it; as for inſtance, mention is made of Perſepolis as in being, ch. ix. 2. when it had been utterly deſtroyed by Alexander above a hundred years before: the true place was Elymais, as in 1 Maccab. vi. 1. and the author is guilty of a miſtake, in making Judas Maccabæus to build the altar, and offer ſacrifice, after two years profanation of it, ch. x. 3. when it was after three years, as appears from 1 Maccab. i. 54. and iv. 52. compared together; and from Joſephus[b]: and moſt ſtupidly does he make Judas Maccabæus to collect a ſum of money, and ſend it to Jeruſalem to offer a ſin-offering, and make reconciliation for the dead, and pray for them, that they might be delivered from ſin, ch. xii. 43, 44, 45. and the hiſtory is cloſed in a manner very unworthy of, and very unbecoming, an inſpired writer; and clearly ſhews that the writer himſelf did not believe he wrote it under divine inſpiration.

There is a third book in ſome verſions, tho' not in ours, which bears the name of the Maccabees; but has no relation to Judas Maccabæus, nor his brethren, nor to the perſecution of Antiochus Epiphanes; but to what was done in the reign of Philopator king of Egypt, fifty years before the hiſtory of the two former books begins; and is only ſo called, becauſe it treats of things done and ſuffered in thoſe times, with like zeal for the law of God; and Joſephus's hiſtory of the martyrs that ſuffered under Antiochus, is ſometimes called the fourth[c]; but neither of theſe are reckoned canonical.
